At the beginning of the Bible we find a new world: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." At the end of the Bible we find a new world: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." At the beginning, we find Satan entering to deceive and destroy; at the end, we find Satan cast out, "that he should deceive the nations no more." At the beginning, sin and pain and sorrow and sighing and death find entrance to the world; at the end, there shall be no more pain nor sorrow nor sighing, and no more death. At the beginning, the earth, for man's transgression, is cursed with thorns and thistles; at the end, "there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it." At the beginning, we find the tree of life in Paradise, from which the sinner is shut away by a flaming sword, lest he eat and live forever; at the end, we find the tree of life again "in the midst of the paradise of God," and the blessed and the blood-washed ones have a right to the tree of life, and "enter in through the gates into the city." At the beginning, man was brought beneath the dominion of death and the grave; at the end, "the dead, small and great, stand before God." the sea gives up its dead, and death and hell are destroyed in the lake of fire. At the beginning, the first Adam lost his dominion over earth, and was driven out of the garden of Eden in shame and sorrow; at the end, we find the second Adam, victorious over sin and death and hell, enthroned as King and Lord of all, and reigning in triumph and glory forever.

Now, when you get the plan of this book, you find that it is something more than a book of detached sentences, good maxims and comforting words. It is a book which unfolds the divine purpose, and not only reveals the way of salvation, but marks the pathway of the people of God through this wilderness, and foreshows the destiny of the world which he has made and the church he has redeemed.

When we look at these facts we see that this is no man's book. When Columbus saw the river Orinoco, some one said he had discovered an island. He replied: "No such river as that flows from an island. That mighty torrent must drain the waters of a continent." So this book comes, not from the empty hearts of impostors, liars, and deceivers; it springs from the eternal depths of divine wisdom, love, and grace. It is the transcript of the divine mind, the unfolding of the divine purpose, the revelation of the divine will. God help us to receive it, to believe it, and be saved through Christ our Lord."

Running through these various books we call the Bible, is a specific plan, commencing in the first book and is gradually unfolded in the others but reaches a grand and glorious consummation in the last one. How is it the same plan is written about, and unfolded by some of the writers, who never saw each other, and in fact, did not live in the same age? Is it not evident that divine inspiration from above, did guide them in this matter?

At the close of the last book we read: "And he said unto me, these sayings are faithful and true; and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done."

W. H. WILSON.

The Gospel According to Loukas, Chap. 12.

1. During the times when the myriads of the multitude were gathered together so that they trod one another down, he began to say unto his disciples first, Take heed to yourselves in respect to the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

2. There hath been nothing covered forsooth which will not have been revealed and hid which will not have become known.

3. On the contrary whatever ye have spoken in the darkness will have been heard in the light,

4. And that which ye have talked to the ear in inner-chambers will have been heralded upon the housetops. And I say unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of those who kill the body, and after that have nothing more they can do.

5. But I will show you of whom ye may be afraid. Be afraid of him who, after he hath killed, hath official power to cast into the geena. Yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

6. Are not five sparrows accustomed to be sold for two assarii? And not one of them hath been ignored in the sight of God.

7. Moreover even the hairs of your head have all been numbered. Fear not. Ye are very different from many sparrows.

8. And I say unto you that any one who shall confess in me in the presence of men, the Son of Man will also confess in him in the presence of the angels of God.

9. But the one who denieth me in the sight of men, he will have been utterly denied in the sight of the angels of God.

10. And any one who shall say a word against the Son of Man, it will have been remitted unto him; but unto the one who hath blasphemed against the Sanctified Spirit, it will not have been remitted.

11. And whenever they bring you before the synagogues and the authorities and the official-powers do not worry about how or what defense ye shall make or what ye shall say.

12. For the Sanctified Spirit will teach you in that very hour what it behoveth you to say.

13. And a certain one of the multitude said unto him, Teacher, Tell my brother to divide the inheritance with me.

14. And he said unto him, Man who constituted me a judge or a divider over you?

15. And he said unto them, See and be on your guard against all selfish greed; it cause not in the abundance of one's possessions is one's [illegible]

16. And he spake a parable unto them saying, A rich man's place produced well;

17. And he reasoned with himself saying, What shall I do, because I have nowhere to gather together my fruits?

18. And he said, This will I do; I will tear down my storehouses and build greater, and there will I gather together all my products and good things:

19. And I will say unto my soul, Soul, thou hast many good things laid away for many years; Rest, eat, drink and rejoice.

20. But God said unto him, Thou thoughtless one, This night will they demand thy soul of thee; And whose will be the things which thou hast made ready?

21. In this wise is he who treasureth up for himself, and is not rich toward God.

22. And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Fret not for the soul as to what ye shall eat; nor for the body, as to what ye shall clothe it with.

23. For the soul (organic-life) is more than its nourishment, and the body more than its clothing.

24. Consider the ravens; that they do not sow, nor reap, nor have they a store or a storehouse, and God supporteth them. How very different are you from the birds?

25. And who of you by fretting can add a cubit-length to his adult-age?

26. If then ye cannot do a least thing why do ye fret about the rest?

27. Consider the lilies, how they grow; They toil not, neither do they spin; And I say unto you that not even Solomon in all his glory clothed himself like one of these,

28. And if God so clothed the grass that is in a field today and tomorrow is being cast into an oven how much more will he you, O ye worthy of little trust.

29. Do ye also seek what ye may eat and what ye may drink and be not high-minded.

30. For these things are all the nations of the Cosmos diligently seeking after: and your Father knoweth that you have need of them.

31. Moreover seek ye the kingdom of God and these things will have been added unto you.

32. Fear not, little flock, because your Father is satisfied to give you the kingdom.

33. Sell your possessions and give in acts of mercy. Make for yourselves purses that do not wax old, an unfailing treasure (supply) in heaven, where thief doth not draw nigh ~~nor moth corrupts~~.

34. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35. Let your loins also stand girded and your lamps lighted.

36. And be ye like men who are expectantly awaiting their lord when he shall return from the nuptials, that when he shall have come and knocked, straightway they may have opened unto him.

37. Blessed happy are those bond-servants, whom the Lord shall find keeping awake when he cometh. Verily I say unto you, he will gird himself and have them recline and come and serve (deacon-service) them.

38. And whether he shall have come in the second, and whether in the third watch, and shall find it so, blessed happy are they.

39. This moreover ye know, that if the master of the house had known at what hour the thief was coming, he would have kept awake and not allowed his house to be dug through.

40. Do ye also then get ready, because at an hour when ye think not, the Son of Man is coming.

41. Said Peter unto him, Lord, dost thou speak this parable unto us or also unto all?

42. And the Lord said, Who forsooth will be the faithful steward, the thoughtful one, whom the Lord will establish over his courtier-service to give the measured supply of food in due season?

43. Blessed happy is that bond-servant, whom his Lord shall find doing so when he cometh.

44. Of a truth, I say unto you that he will establish him over all his possessions.

45. But if that bond-servant shall have said in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the house-men and the house-maids and to eat and drink and get drunken,

46. The Lord of that bond-servant will come in a day when he doth not expect him and in an hour when he doth not know, and will cut him off (or in two) and dispose his portion with the unfaithful ones.

47. That bond-servant moreover who knew his Lord's will and did not make ready or do according to his will will be flayed with many stripes;

48. While the one who did not know, but did things worthy of blows will be flayed few. Moreover from every one to whom much hath been given much will have been required, and from him to whom much hath been entrusted they will demand more.

49. I have come to cast fire upon the earth; and what do I desire? Would that it were already kindled.

50. But I have baptism to be baptized with, and how am I restraining myself, until it be accomplished?

51. Think ye that I have come to give peace on the earth. No, no, I say unto you, but rather division.

52. For from now on there will be in one house those who have become divided, three against two and two against three.

53. Father will have become divided against son, and son against father; mother against daughter, and daughter against mother; mother-in-law against daughter-in-law, and daughter-in-law against mother-in-law.

54. And he said also unto the multitudes; Whenever ye see a cloud arising from the west straightway ye say, A shower is coming, and it occureth in this wise.

55. And whenever (ye perceive) a south wind blowing ye say, There will be a scorching heat; and it cometh to pass.

56. Hypocrites, ye know how to test the face of the earth and the heavens; And how do ye not know how to test this period of time?

57. And why do ye not of yourselves judge the right way?

58. Yea make it thy business when thou art on the way going with thy plaintiff to a ruler, to be released from him, lest perchance he drag thee away unto the judge and the judge commit thee to the officer and the officer cast thee into prison.

59. I say unto thee, thou shalt not have come out of there until thou hast paid the last lepton (about half a cent or a "mite.")

COMMENT.

"The Geena" is not properly translated by the English word "hell" R. V. The term is used in the Scripture to denote the final and extreme test to be applied under God's divine agency to separate the brass from the true metal in the refinement of human character, and to eliminate the useless from the useful in this cosmos of the heavens and the earth, and to be applied when all other agencies have failed, and as here stated the result will be when applied to soul or organic life to eliminate or utterly destroy it, and not to perpetuate it in unending misery.

"In me" and "in him" instead of "me" and "him" merely as in the R. V. The expression is the same in use as "in Christ" and "God in us."

"Utterly denied" instead of "denied" merely R. V.

"Remitted" instead of "forgiven" R. V.

"The authorities and official-powers" instead of "the rulers and authorities" R. V.

"Place" instead of "ground" R. V. the same use as we have speaking of a rich man's place whether it be a farm or other source of revenue.

"Products" instead of "corn" R. V. for the same reason.

"Thoughtless" instead of "foolish" R. V. true to the record and covers more ground.

"Will they require" instead of "is required" R. V. is suggestive to say the least. Who is the "they" here spoken of? Are "they" men or angels?

"Soul" instead of "life" R. V. Consistency is a jewel.

"Age" or adult-age instead of "stature" R. V. Most people think they can add a cubit's-length to their allotted span of life; but I have never heard of a person who was fool enough to suppose he could add twenty-four inches to his stature "by thinking"—not even the mind-cure cranks.

"Clothed himself" instead of "was arrayed" R. V. The antithesis here is between the way God clothes and the way man clothes, and Solomon is given as a notable and extreme case of a man clothing himself.

The Sinaitic MSS. followed in verse 29 "Do ye also seek what ye may eat and drink and be not high-minded" instead of "Seek not what etc." R. V. This changes the whole philosophy of the teaching and brings it into accord with good common sense. Good crops do not come to people without seeking. There is a vast difference too between diligent and persistent seeking, and fretting.

"Your Father is satisfied" instead of "it is your Father's good pleasure" R. V. takes the whole thought out of the limbo of unreasoning favoritism and we are led to infer that if God "is satisfied" there is a good reason why, as we are told that he is judicial in all his ways.

"In heaven" instead of "in the heavens" R. V.

"Keeping awake" instead of "watching" R. V.

"Kept awake" also instead of "watched" R. V.

"Get ready" instead of "be ready" R. V. implies work to be done in order to get ready.

"Courtier-service" instead of "household" R. V. makes the answer to Peter much more intelligible to one acquainted with the doctrine of the "royal-priesthood."

"Measured-supply" instead of "portion" R. V. The idea of measure is important in this teaching as the reader will see.

"House-men and house-maids" instead of "servants" merely R. V. not specific enough for this teaching in regard to the organic economy of "the household of faith" to which this relates.

"Would that it were already kindled" instead of "if it is already kindled" R. V. There is a question and answer here and this is the answer, a very significant one too.

"Restraining myself" instead of "am straightened" R. V. leaves out the important idea Christ's own moral agency in this matter.

"A ruler" instead of "the magistrate" R. V.

"Plaintiff" instead of "adversary" R. V. I do not call the man who sues me for a debt my "adversary," neither does the judge or the court. Man's case is in court and has been, for a long time, and all the language in relation to it in the Scriptures is judicial. Let us follow the record therefore.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Bible Authors.

The Bible is a marvel, when the manner of its compilation is considered. Composed of sixty-six books, written by over forty different writers, it teaches from beginning to end the same grand truth that God's purpose is to fill this earth with his glory. Num. xiv. 21. Not one of the writers contradict another, and all unite in ascribing all glory and praise to God, and in testifying to the worthlessness and insignificance of men in the sight of their Creator. Extending over a period of sixteen hundred years, the Bible counts amongst its writers, kings (David and Solomon), prime ministers (Modecai and Daniel), a royal attendant to a mighty Gentile king (Nehemiah), the great Jewish lawgiver (Moses), a successful warrior (Joshua), prophets of all grades and occupations, fishermen (Peter and John), a tax-gatherer (Matthew), a physician (Luke), and a "converted" Pharisee (Paul). These men wrote their books under many peculiar circumstances, some in prison and in sorrow; others in king's palaces, surrounded by all that can make life happy; others in seclusion and banishment, with the precious Word of God as their only solace and comfort. Some portions of this wonderful book were written in Rome, other portions hundreds of miles to the east, in Babylon, and between these two mighty cities stood the "Eternal City," the city of the world's monarch—Jerusalem, and within the walls of that glorious city (the future metropolis of the earth) other portions of the sacred Book have been penned. Nearly two thousand years have elapsed since the Book was completed, and nearly four thousand years since it was commenced, and yet we have it to-day, preserved from the onslaughts of all its enemies, whether Pagan, Romish, or Atheist. It is not absurd to suppose that during all that period of sixteen centuries, a series of impostors in different parts of the world, in different ages, of different dispositions and talents, succeeded in compiling a volume which has one grand theme running through all its pages? But as Napoleon the great wisely remarked, "There are some men who are capable of believing anything—excepting the Bible."—W. A. Brewster.

Please Read and Heed.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION know full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

THE RESTITUTION has been issued each time during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure, some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

REMEMBER that there are five Wednesdays in this month, and that our next issue will bear date, December 6.

BROTHER Joblin writes that "Three more have just been admitted to the Household of Faith, after faith in the Gospel, repentance toward God, and baptism into Christ. We pray that they may fill out the other conditions of salvation—observe whatsoever Jesus commands.

[illegible] have been holding meetings in the Court House at St. Paul, Neb., for a week, and three have been immersed.

THE Conference of Liberal Presbyterians is over. The decision arrived at was, to stay in the Old Organization and fight it out. Lively times are anticipated. *

YOU say you have been converted, do you? Which way? Are you better or worse? More meek or less so? More holy or less so? More dead to the world or less so? *

We are apt to overlook the Word which says, "If need be, ye are in heaviness." Apt to forget that we enlisted to suffer, and apt to forget that reigning depends upon suffering. *

It has well been said that the canon of revelation is closed, because complete, there is no need of additions: it is able to make wise unto salvation. But while no new revelations are made the old ones are riveted. *

WE witness the sad effects of living by feeling, every day. It completely reverses God's order and furnishes only the sandiest of all sandy foundations to stand upon. The rock of truth is the only thing to build upon. *

LET us all remember that he whose business it is, sitteth as a refiner and purifier of silver. He is equal to the task and will see that there is fire enough to try us, and also see that it is not hot enough to injure or destroy us. *

THE Spring of our love for others is love to him who bought us. What if no stream flows from that spring? What excuse can we offer? It cannot be that we do not know his will. The question of the hour is, what am I doing for Jesus? *

THE papers tell us the Germans have caught French spies with photographs of fortifications, etc., and it is claimed that there is evidence to show their connection with the French war department; and all sorts of speculations and rumor are afloat, diverse in every respect but one, and that is "that war in the near future is inevitable; and that if this incident does not put the match to the combustibles, something else will." *

THE Scriptures are an incomparable spring of love, and light, and comfort, and strength. Brethren and sisters, do you turn to this divine storehouse frequently with the object of having a good square meal? or, do you merely snatch a mouthful, bolt it down whole, and hurry off? If the latter be the case, look out for dyspepsia; and be advised to imitate the epicure for once, and ruminate leisurely and prolong the luxury,—the results will be surprising. *

IN reply to Bro. Harris respecting baptism, we would say, the matter of supreme importance is to understand, and from the heart believe the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, turn away from the practice of sin, then be baptized into the name of the Father, Son and Spirit for (in order to) the remission of sins past; then live godly, waiting for God's Son from heaven. This is all personal with the dear one who has with meekness received the engrafted Word. No one can believe for her, repent for her, be baptized for her, or live godly for her. If it were our case, and if it were not possible to have the assistance of a believer of the Gospel, we would accept the services of a Baptist minister, after expressing our faith in the promise of unending life in the Kingdom of God on earth by a resurrection from the dead at the appearing of Jesus; and that we were anxious to put on the saving name in baptism, which act of obedience brings one to the place when, and the time when, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. Beautiful—hallowed adopting ordinance.

As we understand it no such conditions exist. How delightful it would be for Bro. Chase to induct the dear wife of his youth into the Anointed; or if he be too modest, why there is Bro. Harris. Strange that they should both preach the Gospel under the commission and not baptize under the same instrument. *

It would seem by an interview with Bob Ingersol as published in a Boston paper recently that he is quite orthodox, and does not know but what he is immortal—he is not quite certain about it yet, but cherishes a hope of it on account of love for deceased ones. *

SOLON, the Greek law giver who lived some 650 years before Christ, used to say, "No man ought to be called a happy man till he dies, because he does not know what his life is to be." How different, this from the Psalmist, who said, "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord;" and Solomon, "Whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he;" and Peter, "If ye suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye: and if reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye." *

GENERAL Gordon writing from Khartoum Nov. 15th 1878, said, "Nothing can be more abject and miserable than the present idea of God. Imagine to yourself what pleasure it would be to Him, to burn or torture us! Can we believe any Being capable of creating us for such a purpose? Would it show us his power? Why, he is omnipotent! Would it show us his justice? He is righteous! None will deny it. We credit God with attributes which are hateful to the meanest of Men...... I quite wonder at the long time it has taken us to see that the general doctrine of the Church is so erroneous." *

The Reviewer Reviewed.
No. 4.

Our readers will remember that we were examining what Reviewer said concerning the words of Jesus, "I and my Father are One." in our last, viz: "I think this means one divinity or divine nature." Evidently this foundation is not quite satisfactory even to him; for he presently props it by saying, "Because Jesus Christ came in flesh they thought he was mere flesh, not knowing that God was manifest in the flesh which they saw before them, and which was the personal and living temple of the Father, as he said, 'The Father is in Me, and I in him.'"

Does he help his cause when he quotes Jesus as saying, "The Father is in Me, and I in him?" Do the personal pronouns "me" and "I" refer to Jesus "made of a woman," or to a pre-existent son made flesh? If a pre-existent son was made flesh, where shall we find the Son of God made of a woman? Is it true that the speaker was the only begotten Son of God? Or had God a Son not begotten? If so, where is it so said? Are we to understand that it was the Temple of the Father who said, "The Father dwelleth in me and I in him? If so where shall we find the pre-existent son? Was the temple of the Father made of a woman or of a pre-existent son, is a question that must in justice to us and our readers, be answered. If made of a woman, and the Father dwelt in it, where did the pre-existent son dwell? If on the other hand the temple was made of a pre-existent son,—was it spirit after it was made flesh? Can Reviewer enlighten us upon these points?

Certainly, in some sense the Father dwelt in Jesus, and Jesus dwelt in the Father,—strange that Reviewer does not show us by the context what that sense was. If he has the light why so sparing with it? And why impose upon us the exposition of his references? But we have to take things as we find them, and so turn at once to John xiv. 7, where Jesus says to his little circle of believers in him, "If ye had known me, ye should have known the Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." Poor Philip: he wanted to see the Father's person, forgetting that he had before been told that no man had seen God; and so Jesus replied, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou, then, show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The WORDS that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me,—or else believe me for the [illegible] sake. Here Jesus explains the oneness existing between himself and the Father. If words have meanings, to believe the Father was in the Son, and the Son in the Father, was the same as to believe that Jesus spake the words of the Father, and the Father did the works by Jesus. And that this has no reference whatever, to a oneness of "divinity or nature" is very evident, for in the next verse he shows them that the same works, and greater, should be done by him who believeth: and still further is this proven by the 20th verse by showing that while he was in the Father, they would be in him, and he in them, in strict harmony with chapter 17, verse 21 where he prays that they may be "all one, as thou Father, art in me, and I in thee: that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." We pity those who hold a theory involving the idea that the oneness of Father and Son consisted of one "divinity or nature" after this infallible testimony is presented to them. The same oneness of all and [illegible], and of himself and his Father is prayed for, not in the glorified state, but in mortality, that the world may witness it and be influenced to believe God had sent Jesus.

As before remarked, John i. 1 is held to be the great stronghold of the view we oppose, and we will not dismiss it in haste. In "Key Words" Reviewer says "Words are the vehicles of thought, the signs of ideas, and the expressions of doctrines. Hence, the more accurately we learn the meanings of a word the more accurately we will understand the doctrine which that word is employed to express." We agree with this precisely, as also when he proceeds to show that we learn the meanings of a word from the uses and applications made of it: the wonder is that he did not adopt this plan in dealing with John i. 1, he then could have shown by such examples as the following, the meaning of the word logos by the uses and applications of it: "Speak the logos only and my servant shall be healed." Matt. viii. 8; and to his disciples in Matt. x. 10, Jesus said, whosoever shall not receive your logos; and whosoever speaketh a logos against the Son of Man." Matt. xii. 32; "when any one heareth the logos of the Kingdom." Matt. xiii. 19. "Heareth the logos and choke the logos." Mark ii. 22. "Straightway he preached the logos." Mark ii. 2. "The sower soweth the logos." Mark iv. 14. "Ashamed of me and my logos." Mark viii. 38. "Written in the book of the logos, of Esaias." Luke iii. 4. "The seed is the logos." Luke viii. 11. "If ye continue in my logos." John viii. 31. "Ye are clean through the logos which I have spoken unto you," John xv. 3. "I have given them thy logos." John xvii. 14. "Believe on me through their logos. It is not reason that we leave the logos—word of God and serve tables." Acts vi. 2. "The logos of God grew and multiplied." Acts xii. 24. "This is the logos—word —of promise." These, with 200 other examples in the New Testament alone, fully establish the fact that the Spirit uses the word logos, to mean exactly what it means when used by men, as previously defined. There is no personality in logos; and if it be twice used of a person it is easy to see why it is so employed figuratively, when we know its primary meaning by so many examples.

Let the candid reader look carefully over the fourth chapter of 1st John and he will see that already the church had been tainted with Paganism. Some did not believe that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh. This should be borne in mind while reading the same writer in his gospel. The historian Gibbon shows that Plato 360 years before Christ, had taught a doctrine of Trinity. Says he, "The genius of Plato, informed by his own meditations, or by the traditional knowledge of the priests of Egypt, had ventured to explore the mysterious nature of Deity, and came to consider the divine nature under the three-fold modification of the first cause:—the reason, or logos, or the soul and spirit of the universe. His poetical imagination sometimes fixed and animated these metaphysical abstractions. The three archical or original principles were represented in the Platonic system as three gods united with each other by a mysterious and ineffable generation, and the logos was particularly considered under the more accessible character of the Son of an Eternal Father, and the Creator and Governor of the universe."

Gibbon, who supposed from the theology of the day that the doctrine of the Trinity was taught in the Bible, shows his contempt for it by calling it an "amazing secret" by "the celestial pen of the last and sublimest evangelist, viz: that which was revealed 360 years before by Plato. No wonder he laughed seeing that it was taught in the school of Alexandria 300 years before Christ.

This being the condition of things when John wrote—Platonic philosophy everywhere, even in the church,—is it any wonder he commences his gospel with the positive declaration—not that there were three or two, but one God only by saying, "In the beginning was the logos, and the logos was with God, and the logos was God. This was in the beginning with God. As if to say, The logos is not one of three Gods as heathens teach, not one of the three original principles of heathen philosophy, but the logos or spirit and inseparably connected with God, and was God, not gods. Clearly, those who did not believe Christ came in the flesh had mixed Platonicism with the gospel, and if John i. 1, does not condemn that, it sanctions it.

Reviewer says, "The expression, 'is come in the flesh,' in the 3rd verse of John iv.: is omitted from the R. V., the Diaglott, and the Amer. Bible Union's Version." True as far as it goes, but very misleading, withal, to those who do not have those translations, because it would naturally be supposed that no mention is made in them of the words, "is come in the flesh;" the truth is, that the second verse says, "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God." This of itself excludes those who do not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. We were sorry to see that parenthetical sentence; it is a serious matter: and while it may not be intended as an apology for those who do not believe it, it would be wonderful if some one did not take it as a sop, the words have gone out, and it is beyond the power of the writer to unsay them.

It is next said, "Thy throne Oh, God is forever and ever." Heb. i. 8. This is a quotation from the 45th Psalm; but why is the explanatory clause left out? It must come in or else, by keeping back part of the truth an error will be taught, as we shall see: "Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."

For our part we do not think there is any pre-existence in this passage, and if that be so there is not much danger of any coming out of it. But let us see for certain. The Son has never received his throne yet, so it is a prophecy; hence he had not yet loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and his God had not yet anointed him with the oil of gladness above his fellows. This Psalm says it is touching the King,—and Isaiah ix. 6, 7, says he is to be born a child, and "the government shall be upon his shoulders, and at that time his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The Father of the Everlasting Age, The Prince of Peace," most of which is still future, but he has been born, hated iniquity, loved righteousness, died, lived again, been anointed above his fellows, and is expecting his enemies to be made his footstool. There is no pre-existence in that passage because his begettal had only just been predicted. Psa. ii. 7.

It says the prophets call him "our God;" of course they do: Isaiah said "unto US a child is (to be) born," etc. but there is no pre-existence in it—they waited for him.

It is said "The apostles called him God with us." Very true; but there is no logical connection between his being called God and his pre-existence. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, it was not a pre-existent Christ in the Jesus of Nazareth who was made a Christ at his baptism.

It is then asked, "How, then, does the Son call the Father the only true God?" The answer given, is, "The supposed conflict vanishes when we remember those other words of the Son, "I and the Father are ONE." As we expected, what he supposed these words to mean, is now assumed to be authority in the case. Jesus' words disprove his thinking. There is no divinity or divine nature in that oneness. See above.

It is next said, "The Key of harmony is the word rendered beside, which signifies without." The word beside allows but one God. That is, one true God, pre-existence must have at least two, and room must be made for another. The word beside is set aside for the word without, which it is said the original means. Isa. xxxvi. 10 is one of the passages cited as proof. The original word is "Bilade." If this word means more than "without," is it not very unjust and cruel to keep it back from the unlearned, and so make them dependent upon his judgment to select the proper word? The truth is, "Bilade" means "save," "beside," "only," and "except," as well as "without." Here are five keys to select from, the one supposed to fit the pre-existence idea is selected. The difficulty is solved, or supposed to be. There is only one true God but several persons compose that true God. This is supposed to be the knowledge necessary to eternal life, and this momentous issue is dependent upon the choice of the right word in English to represent the mind of the spirit in the Hebrew word "Bilade!!!"

Let us deliberately sift this matter to see what foundation there is for this position. In Isa. xlv. 21, The Eternal Spirit asserts his unity by saying "There is no God beside me;" "I am God, there is none else." Suppose we insert the word without in this passage instead of beside, then what? Why, God the Father, out of whom are all things, is caused to make the profound (?) announcement that without him there is no other God! And pre-existence advocates, we presume, infer from this that as long as the Father is included, one or more persons can be associated with him in the Godhead. And this in the face of the fact that Jehovah positively says, "I am the Jehovah; that is my name, and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images." Here the spirit, as if in anticipation of the robbery that would be attempted, expresses the same grand central truth in other words. "Another" is from the Hebrew word "acher" and means another, any other, in our tongue. Turning now to John xvii. 3, we find these words: "And this is the Eternal Life, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." This is exactly what we believe, and it is beautifully in harmony with the Father's assertion of Himself. Jesus certainly excludes himself from the Godhead, by making separate mention of himself by name and official capacity, as well as by supplication to the Father. Pre-existence, then, has not yet been shown to have any foothold in the Scriptures of Truth. It is not mentioned in all the Book of God, and we are obliged to conclude that it is of human origin and is not a Bible doctrine at all.

This passage (John xvii. 3) shows that it is possible and essential to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ. The Word of God is the only source of information on the subject. The Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation. And we maintain that a resort to thinking shows disbelief of God, as this makes it necessary to supplement what God says, to prove a point. Plato may be excused for informing himself by his meditations, as he had no word from God; not so Reviewer. He has the Word and at the critical point it fails him, and he has to think it out;—thinks the oneness is that of divinity or nature.

But Reviewer, supposing that he has proven his case, makes this mandate, "The Son is not a separate God and Savior beside or without the Father, for they are ONE." Here he approaches an awful precipice. We tenderly warn him to beware lest he involve the Father in the death of the cross.

It is said, "The Father calls the Son God." Yes; but this proves nothing for pre-existence; he must certainly be a son in order to be called God. As it stands we are expected to believe that because Jesus was called God, he must have pre-existed: we see no logical connection. We have seen that Jehovah excludes all and every one from the Godhead. And the intelligent Bible student knows that not only are the angels or elohim called gods, but Jesus himself in John x. 34, 35, says that the Jewish people were called gods because the Word of God came to them, or the oracles of God were committed unto them. Rom. iii. 1. The Father's own declarations, together with these words of Jesus show, that beings called god or gods is no proof of pre-existence whatever.

Next, the objection that "if Christ was God, how could he die?" is anticipated and says, "The answer is easily given;" but instead of giving it on the spot, the reader's attention is called [illegible], and if it was ever answered we have not found it; if after further search we do not find it we shall be obliged to conclude that it was not so easy as supposed, because contradictory. Presented in the love of the Truth. *

Report of Stockholders' Meeting.

PLYMOUTH, Ind., Nov. 18, 1893.
Pursuant to notice the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association met and were called to order by R. Railsback, president of the Board of Directors.

On motion J. L. Wince was chosen president of the meeting.

On motion L. E. Conner was chosen secretary of the meeting.

On call of roll it was ascertained that 254 shares being a majority of all the stock, were represented.

On motion the meeting proceeded to elect by ballot a Board of Directors for the coming year, with the result that Geo. Alleman, W. D. Thompson, J. H. Willey, A. R. Underwood and R. Railsback were elected as members to constitute such Board of Directors.

On motion the meeting adjourned.

REPORT OF DIRECTORS MEETING.

The newly elected Board of Directors of the Christian Publishing Association met immediately after the adjournment of the Stockholders meeting, and proceeded to organize by selecting Robert Railsback, President, and A. R. Underwood, Secretary. After talking over the work of the past year, it was decided to renew the contract for publishing THE RESTITUTION and continue it the same as the past four years. No other business being before the Board, adjourned to the call of the President.

A. R. UNDERWOOD, Sec.

Many things that we now look upon as sore trials and afflictions are really blessings in disguise, and will so appear in the future. Our occasions for gratitude are therefore not confined to recognized good things, but should extend to many crosses and burdens and trials; indeed we may well be grateful for everything but our sins and their results.

DIED

William A. Tichenor was born in Vigo Co., Ind. March 9, 1841, and died at his home in Argos, Ind., Nov. 17, 1893, aged 52 yrs., 8 mos., and 8 days.

Brother Tichenor had been a faithful and strong believer in the Gospel of the Kingdom, 25 years or more, having united with the Church of God at Antioch, Marshall Co., about 1867. He leaves a wife and daughter Cora, of his immediate family to mourn his death, his only son, Otto, preceding him to the tomb in 1887, in the 6th year of his age.

Bro. Tichenor was a sufferer for many long months, during which time his greatest comfort was the hope of the future life and the eternal home in the renewed earth.

Words of consolation and sympathy were spoken by the writer—one who knows how to sympathize with the broken hearted—after which tender hands laid him away to rest from his labors until the return of the Life Giver, our Master.

Answer to Reviewers No. 1.

My reviewer likes neither the "methods" nor the "proof" in the warning that I gave against Socinians in 13th No. of Restitution. But I suppose neither did the Frenchmen like Wellington's methods, nor the proof of his military skill at Waterloo. My reviewer being of England, is probably familiar with the history of that battle; and knows that in almost any sort of contest the defeated party is apt to grumble about the methods and means used by his opponent.

But why does my reviewer take the article headed "Socinians" all the same as a review of him? Is the Socinian doctrine his doctrine? According to his own account Socinianism is "something very bad," for he classes it with "Paganism." Why then does he blame me for warning people against such a bad thing?

My article on "Socinians," and the four that followed, were not intended in the strict sense as a "review" of my reviewer, but rather as a systematic and harmonious array of Scriptural testimonies concerning the Son of God. I deemed this far more profitable and pleasant than merely following as a reviewer in the zigzag wake and answering the one-sided "articles" of my two opponents. Perhaps there are two or more enlisted against me in the article that I am now answering, for the plural pronouns "Our" and "We" abound in it.

Even if it were admitted that Adam Clarke was "a kind of general infidel himself," as my reviewer seems to insinuate, would that invalidate his testimony that "Socinianism produces a kind of general infidelity, or disrespect to the Sacred Writings?" Did the heathenism of the witnesses that Paul quoted on two occasions invalidate their testimony against their fellow-heathen? Surely not, for Paul endorses what they said. Ac. xvii. 28, 29; Titus i. 12, 13. Dr. John Thomas classes Socinianism with "the works of the Devil." Phanerosis, page 11. Will my reviewer accuse him also of being "a kind of general infidel?" There was and still is great need of warning against Socinianism, for "Josephism," a poisonous offshoot of the same error, has already found its way into some of our meetings, and, if allowed, would also fasten itself as a mill-stone about the neck of the gospel that we advocate,--the gospel of the kingdom.

I never "came out from among" Adam Clarke's brethren, having never been one of them; for I was baptized the first and last time more than "30 years" ago, in the faith that I now hold. If it be wrong to quote, as mere opinions, the comments of Clarke and Thomas who, perhaps, were no more inspired than my reviewer, why does he quote Smith, Nesbet, Young, etc.? And as he and "W. H. W." have referred to the Diaglott, why did they not tell how the Appendix to that version defines the word Mediator? That Appendix, highly commended by B. Wilson's preface to the Diaglott, says the Mediator is "One that negotiates between two parties God and man. Therefore, Jesus unites both in his own person. He mediates a new institution between God and man, and is Immanuel, God with us."

Is not this testimony of the Appendix entitled to as much respect as the uninspired opinion of my reviewer?

He says that he is "writing of the Christ promised as the Seed of the Woman, and as the Seed of Abraham and David," and then "solemnly avers" that he "knows of no other promised Seed." But does he not know of the promised Son of God? If not, let me kindly advise him to read 2 Samuel vii. 14; Psalm ii. 7, etc. before he writes any more on this profound and solemn subject. In the Apostolic epistles Christ is fifty-three times called the Son of God. Three times he is spoken of as the Seed of Abraham, twice as the Seed of David, and once as "made of a woman," or, as R. V. reads, "born of a woman." Gal. iv. 4.

We cannot expect the Father to love any one who does not love the Son and believe that he came out from God; "For the Father himself loveth you BECAUSE ye have loved me and have believed that I came out from God." Jno. xvi. 27, 30. The great and glorious design of the four Evangelists in writing their records was, as expressed by one of them, "That ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." Jno. xx. 31. For confessing this belief Peter was pronounced "blessed." Matt. xvi. 16, 17. In John viii. 42, we learn that all the truly adopted children of the Heavenly Father love Christ because he "came out from God," or, "came out of God," as ek tou Theou denotes. Being then the "begotten" or "born" Son, he necessarily partook in some degree of the nature of his Father, the divine nature.

"Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God." "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" 1 Jno. iv. 15; v. 5.

WILEY JONES.

Stray Thoughts.

If Jesus the Son of God was with the Father before this world was created and in fact created it, then I would like to know in what sense was he the Son of God, and how did he become such a Son? The idea of a Son being coequal and coeternal with his Father, is in my judgment contradictory, and if Jesus the Son of God did really exist six thousand years, as an immortal being, how could such a being be begotten of God? Is not begettal the beginning—the sowing or planting of seed that produces a being?

If the Son of God was reduced to the sensual state in conception, was that not death to him? Then he must have died twice instead of once. The idea of Jesus the Son of God being older than his mother, and as old for aught we know as his Father!

The idea of Jesus the Son of God retaining the power within himself to raise himself from death, is too much to ask people to believe.

In fact such an idea is a contradiction in terms any way you see fit to turn it. For if he laid down his life, then his life was cut off, and terminated in death, otherwise he did not die, did not see fit to lay down his life, and as a necessary consequence was not raised to life again, could not be, as he himself was not dead.

Paul declares positively that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and the Scriptures referred to is the prophetic Scriptures which teach positively that Christ in death poured out his soul or life, unto death, and his soul was made "an offering for sin." Isa. liii. Read it.

What was left? was the real Christ left alive to watch over his body and to raise it again? If so that is not our Savior, our Redeemer. Paul never preached such a Christ as that, but he did preach that there was salvation in the One that died, and was buried, and rose again. To believe in and preach a Christ that did not die, lose his life for the time being, is to preach another Jesus whom we have not preached. See 2 Cor. ii. 4.

My brother and sister, let me solemnly entreat you to consider well this foundation truth on which our faith and hope is built.

One good brother some time ago, mentioned in THE RESTITUTION that Brother Chapin a few years ago said so-and-so, about this question. Now I wish to say this, that while I cherish in memory the kindest and best regards for that dear brother who has gone to his grave to rest in hope, I wish to make this correction. The question at that time was a different one to what it is now. Then it was "Jesus the Son of God or, the Son of Joseph."

I most firmly believe that Jesus was the Son of God in a higher sense than all others, yet that does not argue anything for his pre-existence.

Peter most positively affirms there is no salvation in any other than the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead. Acts iv. 10 12.

In conclusion I wish to say that I would be pleased and believe it would be very interesting and profitable to have this investigation go on in a good spirit, for truth's sake, that we may all see alike on this very important subject. I wish ever so much that Bro. Dugger would kindly favor the readers of THE RESTITUTION with some articles on this subject. Yours in hope of life eternal when Jesus comes.

T. E. ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

The brethren and sisters of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, met at Plum River according to announcement, for the purpose of worshipping the One True God, and our Elder Brother, Christ, The Anointed. Most earnestly do we one and all, lift up our hearts to Him, that grace, mercy, and peace, may rest on each and every one of us throughout life. We came to this meeting as servents of the Lord, not to do a work of our own, but the will of Him to whom we belong. It is his will that we set ourselves prayerfully to work in his vineyard, for the harvest is nearly ripe and the laborers are few.

Dear brethren, and sisters, let us all work as never before and come to God for help in time of need, for the adversary is very busy in every conceivable way to draw people after him. Pray that we may prove faithful unto death.

There are those that think they are on the narrow way to the kingdom of God. Poor deluded ones, they know not the way of God or his purpose concerning man and earth. Brothers and sisters, there is a great work left for us to do. Are we doing it? The night is coming when man's work must be done.

We should try to imitate our Elder Brother. His whole theme was to seek and to save the lost sons and daughters of Adam. Are we trying to do that, or are we going with the world in pleasure seeking? I felt as Sister Wince, I did not wish to go to the World's Fair. The time looks too precious, and so many poor souls are starving for the Bread of Life. I cannot preach but I can give a widow's mite to help pay those that can preach. What a responsibility rests on us if we have of this world's goods an abundance, and let our neighbors and friends starve for the Gospel of the Kingdom. Let us be up and doing, the time is short, the Lord is at the door.

May the blessing of God rest on one and all, and pray for each other till he comes whose right it is to rule, is the prayer of your Sister in Christ.

MRS. E. S. GANS.

COLLINSWOOD, O.

Dear Restitution:

As an item of news, I have the pleasure to report that the gospel as preached by the Lord and his apostles has not lost its power. On Wednesday, the 1st inst., an intelligent Brother was buried with Christ in baptism in Lake Erie and on the following Sunday received into the Church of God, meeting in Blahd and Heller's Hall, corner Ontario and Boliver Sts., at 10:30 A. M. every Sunday, where all of like precious faith will be welcome to meet with us, where we continue steadfastly in the apostles doctrine (teaching) fellowship, breaking of bread, and prayers, edifying one another. I trust it will not be long before our hearts will again be made glad in a similar manner.

The Great Change.

For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

So when this corruptible has put on incorruption, and this mortal has put on immortality, then shall be fulfilled the saying, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory?"

The translated company who are living and are caught up to meet the Lord do not leave their mortal bodies on the earth. They are changed in a moment, and go up with the sleeping ones. All go up together. We shall not go before them which are asleep.

C. BOARDMAN.

Dear Restitution:

One beloved Bro. Greelman has just left this place for Live Oak, 150 miles, to visit a brother living there. His family are at Sutherland on the Gulf coast, about 50 miles from here. They are well. The brother came here by invitation and preached several times here, and in two adjoining neighborhoods, to the general acceptance of the people, and the great delight of the brethren who though poor did not forget to cheer him somewhat with their means. I regret that he had an attack of chill and fever while here, and was not well when he left. We expect him again in December, to hold a series of meetings, and are confident of much good being done if the needed strength is given him. I think his vitality was low when he came or he would not so soon have had the fever. More anon.

Letters Read at Plymouth Conference.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Conference Assembled:

I would love to be with you in person, but as this cannot be, thought I would write you a short letter. The Conference in Warren Co. is the first I have ever had the privilege of attending, and it did me much good to meet with the brethren and sisters of like precious faith; a privilege I have not had very often in my life. Being isolated from the church we hold most dear, as we have been nearly all our lives, I am not as well posted on Bible subjects as I would otherwise have been. I feel that I cannot say much of interest, especially to those who have been long in the faith, but as Bro. Wince requested that I should write a letter to be read, concluded I would do so, and hope my feeble effort may encourage some young soul who is just starting out in the Christian life.

We are taught by the Scriptures that the Christian life is a warfare, and that we must fight to the end if we would gain that crown of righteousness promised to him that overcometh. There is a work for each of us to do, for we are all members of one body in Christ. Some are in the hands to work for Christ, some help form the feet to carry the body, some are in the body to help constitute the "stature of the fulness of Christ."

Let us know our places and keep in them. "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary: and they shall walk and not faint." If this means any thing, it surely means that the weakest of us have a work to perform for Him. If it is our privilege to be made strong enough to run and not grow weary, I am afraid some of us will have to answer in the judgment for the creeping we are doing now. The moment we cease to do God's service, he takes away our strength and down we go.

Those of us who can and wont to do it will soon have all we can do to walk, and after a little while will be too lazy to try to creep.

Waiting on the Lord is to take God's way and keep in it. Let us do right because it is right and not because we fear punishment. Let us not defer or neglect to do all the good we can, or to show any kindness to our fellow-beings, but let us do it now while we have time, for tomorrow may not be ours, and we do not expect to pass through this world but once. Let us live so that in after years we will not have to look back and say we have been guilty of throwing away the many opportunities of usefulness that came in our way.

Our lives are made up of little duties, and these lead into great things. The daily round of duty trains the will, heart, and conscience. Every day furnishes us an opportunity to manifest in little things a heroic spirit. Prayer is the weapon we most need. It often happens that those who have been exposed to wild beasts, to evil spirits, and to cruel men, have muzzled them by prayers, as was the case with Daniel. All our lives should be one great continuous prayer.

All my interests and sympathies are with the little churches of the Abrahamic faith, and may we all work with more zeal as the years go by. My prayer is, you may continue on your course till the restitution of all things spoken by the prophets, since the world began.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, gird on the whole armor of God, that you may be able to stand in the evil day. Satan is ever on the watch and when he sees Christians quarreling and wrangling among themselves, he thinks it safe for him to sit down and rest.

Keep close to the Savior, and watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation and lose your reward, the crown of life, which is promised to all who remain faithful till Jesus comes. I believe judicious praise is both right and useful and that we ought to help each other oftener by cheering words and kindly actions.

There are Christians who if not better would be happier if others would speak cheering words to them now and then. A simple "God bless you" cheers many a sad and lonely heart. There are excellent ministers who would preach better and be better pastors, if their people were more like the Lord in the parable, and greet them with "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Let us ever be ready, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh. How sad and lamentable it will be for those who let the last opportunity go by, and the harvest is past, and they are not saved. O, Lord help them to come, and come now, is my prayer.

HATTIE FRANKEBERGER.

Dear Brothers and Sisters assembled:

It is with much humility, yet love for the Blessed Master, that I send greeting to the dearly loved ones, who through the favor of God and his Son, the Christ, are permitted to meet in Conference at Plymouth, Indiana. Oh! how I have longed to be with you. Yet God is good—and while I am absent in body I may be present in spirit, and in supplication, and in thanksgiving to him who has blessed us abundantly.

Since last I was permitted to meet with you; I have passed through sore trials, and if, like Peter, I have been in doubt, and if I have shown my weakness, I pray God that the remembrance and experience of the past, may make me strong and keep me faithful unto the coming day. Tears blind me while I write, when I think how good God has been to me.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, my prayer is, that the overshadowing influence, that may be seen and felt in all your meetings and deliberations may be the Spirit and love of the Blessed Redeemer. I am truly sorry if health has not permitted Bro. Geiselman to be with you, yet in his sojourn in the south, he may be the instrument in the hand of God, to open the way to eternal life to some precious soul.

You have Bros. Conner, Wagoner, Wince, noble soldiers of the cross, and better yet, blessed be his holy name, where two or three are assembled together in his name, there will the Christ be. God grant that his presence may be seen and felt by all present, and may not only you who have tasted the earnest of our hope in Christ, be strengthened and built up, but may the light shine into darkness and may others be brought to glorify our Father in Heaven.

And now dearly loved ones, let me speak of THE RESTITUTION. I know little of its prosperity. Have not been permitted to meet with the board during the year. I only know how precious it is to me. Whatever you do, sustain it. God will call you to an account if it is not sustained. It may be prosperous. I hope it is.

I cannot tell where I may be during the coming year, but shall hope to get settled somewhere. I should like to live where I could meet with the family of God, and talk of his great goodness. It will not be long until his loved ones shall live together, and He, the blessed One shall be there. Yes, blessed be his holy name, the tempter shall no more separate us, for no evil thing shall walk thereon.

And now I must close. I have written too long a letter, but my heart is full of love, and I could not restrain writing.

May God be with you all. Pray for unworthy me, that the temptations of life may not come near me, and may the God of Peace be with us and keep us all unto his coming and kingdom.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

J. H. WILLEY.

To the Brethren and Sisters assembled at Chapel Hall, Greeting:

This is the second time in many years that we have been deprived of the privilege of meeting with the brothers and sisters at our annual meeting at Chapel Hall, but if we cannot meet with the many we have met before, and perhaps some new faces, we thought it would be well to send our little testimony.

We are still striving to serve our Master; it may be very weak, and sometimes I fear the lamp is burning dimly, and that our light to others is far from what it should be. It seems to me that I have never felt the force of what Paul said to the Hebrew brethren about "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching" as I do now by not being able to meet in the house of prayer. We are so apt to lose sight of the Christian Graces that it takes to build us up, and mold us into pure characters. We become luke-warm. It is well to ever keep before us, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip."

May we in our wanderings from home, and the brothers and sisters, never be found so cold and in such darkness, that we will lose sight of that beautiful home that is promised to the faithful. May we not be found weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

Pray for us that we may ever be found faithful to our trust, and be among the Redeemed when Jesus comes.

Yours, looking for the Kingdom.

ALICE TABER.

Mr. Wesley used to say: "We ought to ask ourselves, not how much we must give, but how much we must keep; thinking how can we deny ourselves, and how many things we can do without and then after providing for really necessary expenses give away the rest. "Sold all my pictures," is an entry in his journal at a time when we are told he was exercising strict economy, and making personal sacrifices of no ordinary kind, to enable him to build a church in a needy part of London.

Insanity and Genius.

"Insanity and Genius," by Dr. Arthur McDonald, in the Arena for June, is chiefly a compilation of the opinions of celebrated discoverers in the field of pathology, physiology and psychology and of conclusions arrived at by eminent specialists on diseases of the brain, together with a series of interesting records of eccentricities evinced by men of genius.

Mr. McDonald classifies human beings in a general way into "normal" and "abnormal," and then divides human abnormality into insanity, genius and crime.

Insanity is defined from the anatomical point of view after the theory of Krafft-Ebing, as "a diffuse disease of the brain, accompanied with nutritive, inflamatory and degenerative changes."

It is difficult to distinguish between sanity and insanity, because the manifestations are similar when the fluctuating line oscillates between genius and mental disease. Instances of persons who cannot be termed insane, and yet who are known by their eccentricities, are classified under this head as pseudo-geniuses. "They believe themselves on the way to weighty discoveries and humanitarian enterprises, which turn out to be unfruitful; some are inventors, improvers of the world, revolutionary heroes, creators of new sects to whose plans an agitated public sometimes lends a willing ear, but whose work necessarily fails because it is only a 'mental flash of a puzzled head,' and not a ripened result out of the development of civilization."

Others, showing strikingly peculiar and original, but useless characteristics are, says Mr. McDonald, as a rule, suffering from hereditary disease, and are liable to lapse into pronounced insanity at any time.

A long list of names is given of famous statesmen, poets, historians, essayists, novelists, musical geniuses, philosophers and generals, together with instances of their having shown, at one time or another, tendencies to insane temperaments. Numerous biographical facts, too, showing eccentricities, nervous diseases and symptoms of insanity in men of extraordinary mental ability are cited. Dantes, Tasso, Pascal, Mirabeau, Pope, Voltaire, Jonathan Edwards, Goethe, Victor Hugo and others are named as instances of precocity that was a symptom at once of genius and insanity.

Originality is common to genius and insanity; but in the latter it is generally without purpose. "Geniuses are inclined to misinterpret the acts of others and consider themselves persecuted. These are well-known tendencies of the insane. Boileau and Chateaubriand could not bear a person praised, even their shoemaker, without feeling a certain opposition. Schopenhauer became furious and refused to pay a bill in which his name was written with a double "p." Unhealthy vanity is also common in the ambitions of monomaniacs."

Some characteristics of genius are originality, egotism, vanity, indiscretion, and lack of common sense; precocity, sterility, irritability, impetuosity, melancholia and susceptibility to visions and dreams. These characteristics belong also to the insane. If it be said that it is cruel to compare much that we consider highest in the world with insanity, the reply is, that we might as well object to classing man among the bipeds, because vultures are bipeds. Any analysis of genius that may show the closest relation to insanity cannot change genius itself. Faust and Hamlet remain Faust and Hamlet. The question is not a matter of sentiment, but of facts. Genius and great talent are those forms of abnormality most beneficial to society."

[illegible] Christ a Good Teacher?

At first sight this query may appear a strange one, yet on consideration it is not so strange as it appears. All professed followers of Christ would undoubtedly answer the query in the affirmative, although in their teaching they deny it, as will be seen from a consideration of it.

At the birth of Christ certain wise men came from the East, enquiring "Where is he that was born King of the Jews?" Matt. ii. 2. Nearly all of the professed followers of Christ [illegible] that this statement does not mean what it says, that it is not to be understood literally but spiritually, and that instead of being King of the Jews after the flesh, he was "King of the Jews" after the spirit. At the time of this inquiry Herod was King of the Jews, and, strange to say, he was exceedingly troubled about it, apparently believing that it was over the literal Jews that the one who was born was to be king.

He enquired of the chief Priests and Scribes "where Christ should be born." The answer did not tend to relieve his mind, when he was told, "In Bethlehem of Judea," because a prophet had written, "and thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda, for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel." Matt. ii. 6.

To be consistent, the spiritualistic followers of Christ should advocate that, as it is spiritual Jews over whom Christ is to reign, so it was in a spiritual, not literal, Bethlehem of Judea, that he was born; and in a spiritual, not literal manger. But they are not consistent, and will not admit this. Herod's belief, however, was so strong that, seeing the wise men did not return unto him as requested, he caused all the young children in Bethlehem to be slain from two years old and under. This was in fulfilment of another prophecy, "In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not." Matt. ii. 18. Our spiritualizing friends ought to say that they were spiritual children that were spiritually slain, and that a spiritual Rachel spiritually wept for them. This shows the absurdity of the spiritualizing theory.

But was Christ a good teacher? He went [illegible] about the land of Palestine, during the three and a half years of his probation, preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God in parables to the Scribes and Pharisees, but unto his apostles in private he explained the mysteries of the Kingdom of God.

On one occasion he said unto them, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." Luke xii. 32. On another occasion he said, "That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of heaven." Matt. viii. 2[illegible]. Drawing towards the close of his career, on a certain occasion, the apostle Peter asked him what reward he and the other apostles should have, seeing that they had left all and followed him. Jesus said unto them, "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28. Our spiritualistic wise-acres tell us that the apostles were carnal, and did not understand the promise of Christ, which referred to spiritual thrones, and to spiritual Israel; and this, after about three and a half years of the most intimate intercourse that it was possible for men to have together. Jesus further told them the time was future, namely, the time of his coming, when he would sit on the throne of his glory; and hence, if they were misled as to the meaning of his promise, Christ must have been the worst instead of the best teacher that ever lived.

Our spiritualizing friends tell us, that it was not till the apostles received the spirit that they were guided into all truth. Now, while this is perfectly true, it does not necessarily follow that they were wrong in what they previously believed. After the resurrection of Christ he was with them for forty days, "and speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." And just previous to his ascension they asked him "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 6. Were they wrong? If they were then Christ was the worst teacher that ever lived, seeing that, after teaching them for three years and a half, on a subject of the simplest character, they had not understood him. But were they wrong? Our contemporaries [illegible] but hence, cast a [illegible] upon him they call their Master. We say they were right, as Christ, being the best teacher, and the wisest that ever lived, could not have failed in the instruction that he gave them concerning his Kingdom. Probably he would remind them of the promise made to his mother by the [illegible] "[illegible] shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his Kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33. Hence it is not to be wondered at that they should ask "Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Is it reasonable to suppose, if they were mistaken, that Christ would not have undeceived them?

Let us follow them, after their reception of the Spirit which was to guide them into all truth, and see if their views changed. On the day of Pentecost the apostle Peter stood up, and declared that David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 30. This is strongly in harmony with the question [illegible] "wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?" with the promise of the angel Gabriel, and also that of Christ, that they should sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And this after they had received the Spirit. Again, the apostle Peter says to the Jews, at the [illegible] gate of the temple, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 19, 20, 21. This is in beautiful harmony with the apostle James, when he says of Christ, "after this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Acts xv. 16. This, too, was after they had received the spirit, and shows that their belief, before and afterwards, was the same; and that when they asked, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel" they were not carnally minded, nor were they deceived in what their Lord and Master taught them. And the day will come when they, and all who listen to his loving voice, and follow him, will hear the gladsome words, from his loving lips, when he sits on the throne of his glory, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. xxv. 34), and they will say unto him "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign upon the earth." Rev. v. 9, 10.

Was Christ a good teacher? All who profess his name say Yes, with their lips, but the great majority of them say No in their teaching, whilst the small minority say Yes and show they believe it by what they proclaim, and are amongst those to whom Christ said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches." Rev. iii. 22. And having heard they faithfully proclaim that the day is near when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

Astronomical Spectroscopy.

The most important piece of recent work in the line of solar spectroscopy is undoubtedly Rowland's comparison of the solar spectrum with the spectra of the various elements. It is, of course, to some extent only a repetition of work already done by others, but the new investigation is so much more thorough, and made with instruments of so much greater power, that its results are incomparably more trustworthy. The work is not yet entirely finished, but it has already greatly extended our knowledge, both by increasing the number of elements recognized as present in the sun and also in increasing the number of the lines identified as belonging to the spectra of the elements previously known. A large majority of the lines of the solar spectrum are now thus identified, and no less than 36 of the terrestrial elements are recognized with certainty in the sun, while eight remain doubtful, and fifteen fail to give any evidence of their presence after the most careful search; ten remained to be tried at the time when the preliminary results up to date were published. Of the [illegible] elements added by this investigation to our former list, the most important are carbon, silicon, silver and zinc; the detection in the sun of the newly discovered and rare metal germanium is also interesting; gallium as yet remains in the list of the untried. The most conspicuous of the "absentees" are nitrogen, sulphur, phosphorus, mercury, antimony and bismuth, while among those not yet examined are oxygen, bromine, chlorine, iodine and fluorine. Knowledge.

Is Life Worth Living?

Multitudes of the inhabitants of the world, in reply to the above question, give a most [illegible] answer in the negative. Through ill health, or poverty, or some other of the ills that flesh is heir to, life drags heavily along. And what of those who do get a fair amount of happiness in the present time and [illegible] think it is worth [illegible] [illegible] by what the world can afford. By no means. Then why [illegible] hope [illegible] which [illegible] not, when the God of heaven has promised to send his Son Jesus Christ again to the earth, to restore all things, and bestow a perfect and never-ending cycle of existence on those who love and serve him. The curse of sin and death will be removed and every form of [illegible] will receive its death blow, and the oppressors will be utterly broken in pieces. Psa. lxxii. 4. The Lord Jesus Christ, as King of kings, and Lord of lords, will put down all human rule and authority and power; wars will cease unto the ends of the earth, and the age of universal peace begin. Isa. ii. 4. In that blessed age life to every one will be worth living. In this "Paradise restored," God will place the whole family of the redeemed, who in every age have believed and obeyed him.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XVII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 6, 1893. NO. 45.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

[illegible]

Original.

[illegible]

1. And [illegible]

2. And he answered and said unto them, think ye that these [illegible] were [illegible] sinners [illegible]

3. No, I say unto you, but except ye repent, ye will all likewise perish.

4. Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in [illegible] fell [illegible] that they [illegible] debtors than [illegible] Hierusalem?

5. No, I [illegible]

6. [illegible]

7. And [illegible] since I am [illegible] this fig tree [illegible] the ground even.

8. And he answered and said unto him, Lord, allow it also this year, until I shall dig about and put manure around it and if next perchance bear fruit in the future,

9. And if not then shalt cut it out.

10. And he was teaching in one of the synagogues during the sabbaticrites.

11. And lo a woman having a spirit for eighteen years of weakness, and she was bowed over and unable to straighten up at all.

12. And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him and said, woman be released from thy weakness.

13. And he placed his hands on her and straightway she was straightened up and glorified God.

14. And the ruler of the synagogue being amazed because Jesus had healed in the sabbatic period, answered and said; are there not six days during which it is proper to work? Then come and be healed therein; and not on the day of the sabbaticrites.

15. And the Lord answered him and said; ye hypocrites, doth not each one of you loose his ox or his ass from the stall and lead him to water in the sabbatic period?

16. And is it not proper that this one who is a daughter of Habraam, and whom Satanas hath kept bound, lo, eighteen years should be loosed from this bond on the day of the sabbaticrite?

17. And as he was saying this all those opposing him were put to shame; and all the crowd rejoiced at all the glorious things that had occurred subject to him.

18. Then said he, to what is the Kingdom of God like? And to what shall I liken it?

19. It is like to a seed of the mustard plant which a man took and cast into his vegetable-garden, [illegible] on its branches.

20. [illegible] of God? [illegible] which a woman [illegible] and [illegible] three measures [illegible] certain Hebrew measure [illegible] equal to a modius, a [illegible] half Greek) [illegible]

22. And he [illegible]

23. And a certain one said unto him, Lord, are they few who are being saved? And he said unto them,

24. [illegible] to have entered in through the narrow door. Because many I say unto you, will seek to have entered in, and will not be strong enough.

25. From the time when the master of the house shall have been awakened and shall have [illegible] to the door, and ye may begin to stand outside and to knock [illegible] Lord open to us, [illegible] answer and say unto you, I know you not Whence are ye?

26. Then will ye begin to say, we have eaten and drunk in thy sight, and thou hast taught in our public squares.

27. And he will say unto you, I know you not. Whence are ye? Stand away from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28. There will there be the lamentation and the gnashing of the teeth, when ye shall see Habraam and Isaak and Jacob and all the prophets in the [illegible] but you being [illegible]

29. And they will come from east and west and from north and south and will have [illegible] in the Kingdom of God.

30. And lo, there are last who will be first, and there are first who will be last.

31. In the same hour there came certain [illegible] saying to him, go out and go thy way hence, because Herodes is intending to kill thee.

32. And he said to them, go ye and say to that fox, Lo, I am casting out demons and [illegible] healing acts of health today and tomorrow and the third day I shall be perfected.

33. Moreover it behooveth me today and tomorrow and the next day to go my way, because it is not allowable for a prophet to perish outside of Hierusalem.

34. O Hierousalem, Hierosalem, thou who art killing the prophets and stoning those sent unto thee, how often have I desired to gather together [illegible] wings, and ye were not [illegible]

35. Lo your house is [illegible] given up [illegible] ye shall not see me until [illegible] shall come, when ye shall have said, Blessed is the one who cometh in the name of the Lord.

COMMENT.

The reader will observe that the two forms Hierosalem and Hierousalem are both given. Now I do not regard this variation as accidental, nor merely dialectic. To me it is wonderfully significant and indicative of divine presence and purpose. But besides this why he used both forms or did he merely follow a previous custom which allowed a dialect difference of spelling and pronunciation? I do not know. But to see God's hand in it as I have seen in all his inspired word to the minutest details and I have no sympathy with the scholars [illegible] that presumes to gloss over these things and alter the plain text to suit prejudice or taste instead of trying to interpret [illegible] important deference. We understand in common parlance "cut down" to indicate at least an attempt to destroy merely, while "cast out" is a peculiar process and when we think of the [illegible] elsewhere in the Scripture [illegible] the casting off or the [illegible] off of the branches and grafting them in again to be within the power of God, a new light dawns upon us in regard to God's possible purpose in relation to this [illegible].

In other words this being a parable we must be first to get at its [illegible] significance. Is this [illegible] here spoken of [illegible] the most high [illegible] justice? We must reason that "the vineyard" is the [illegible] covenant, one in which was planted the "vine of the Lord." But why should there be a fig tree in it at all? It does not naturally belong there does it? There must be something [illegible] of the covenant relation thus taught.

Let the law which was added because of transgressions and [illegible] Had the law borne any fruit thus far, and was it not soon to be "cut out?" I think so; and if this be the deeper moral significance of this teaching it opens up a wonderful field for reflective thought on God's ultimate purpose. I am led to this conclusion by the close connection this parable has here in the narrative to two cases of retributive justice divinely meted out in accordance with the law on unrepentant sinners.

These fig trees were not bearing [illegible] "fruit meet for repentance," and they were "cut out" as well as [illegible] off. Now God told [illegible] whom he elected [illegible] "law" [illegible] extension of the time that [illegible] wouldn't bear any fruit [illegible] it was about to be "cut out" of his vineyard. This I think is the deeper [illegible] of this parable. The certain meaning of pruning away that which is inside, whatever it may be in God's economy, or man's either, is of course apparent to the casual reader.

"Who had had spirit for eighteen years of weakness" instead of "which had a spirit of infirmity etc." R. V. The context shows that this was a case of "possession" of Satanic nature and not a "spirit of weakness" in the ordinary sense, and the arrangement of the words in the text indicates the [illegible] translation have given to be the correct one. Satan was the cause of the weakness and not mere disorder or infirmity, as here stated in the context.

"On the day of the sabbaticrites" instead of "on the sabbath" R. V. [illegible] an unimportant difference, and [illegible] which I have commented on several times before, and now repeat for emphasis.

"Had occurred subject to him" instead of "that were done by him" R. V. The difference is that of agency instead of efficient cause. The reader will observe that "they" invariably "glorified God" in all of these cases and not Christ himself, for what was done, and considered Christ a true prophet because his teaching was followed by these works as evidence of the Spirit's seal. These were the prophesied signs and they satisfied John, but "this wicked and perverse race" (or generation) asked for more and greater ones.

"Vegetable-garden" instead of "garden" [illegible] R. V.

"Fine-flour" instead of "meal" R. V. See previous comment on this parable.

"Sata" the plural of the word [illegible] a certain Hebrew measure equivalent to a modius [illegible] measure.

"Will not be strong enough" [illegible] "will not be able" R. V. [illegible]

"Master of the house hath been awakened" instead of "is risen up" R. [illegible] which destroys the parable significance of the teaching in a measure.

"There will there be the lamentation etc." instead of "There shall be [illegible] etc." R. V.

"The last first" and "the first last" indicate the reciprocal changes incident to the Old and New Covenants.

"Today tomorrow and the third day I shall be perfected" instead of "I am perfected" R. V. This verb is in the future tense. What is this "perfection" here referred to? A full organic participation in the divine nature as I understand it. The change of his mortal body to an immortal spiritual body with [illegible] exception [illegible] have been [illegible].

"Rest" instead of "thee" R. V. [illegible] and the [illegible]

"Lo your house is being given up" instead of "[illegible] unto you desolate" R. V. The word "desolate" is inserted to make a wrong translation of the verb in this sentence.

"In the name of the Lord." [illegible] Christ did not come in his own name or glory. The whole tendency nowadays is to ignore God by investing Jesus Christ with the attributes and glory of God the Father. Remember that he said specifically, "The Father is greater than I." "I and the Father are one" does not teach oneness of person or equality of attributes.

[illegible] GARDNER.

One Thing Thou Lackest.

[illegible] that only one [illegible] the [illegible] Kingdom [illegible] the Savior said this [illegible] young man [illegible] He had been true in every thing else but that [illegible] of money was going to [illegible] where the good Master [illegible] where he failed he did [illegible] do now [illegible] away very sorrowful, for he had great possessions. Covetous, greedy, having much, but instead of giving [illegible] his possession [illegible] your heart against the [illegible] and be an idolater. Hast thou read these words that [illegible] you out. No covetous man which is an idolater can enter the Kingdom of God. Do you think more of your [illegible] acres, your stock, [illegible] notes than you do your [illegible]?

One thing thou lackest. What is it Lord? I am not covetous. No, dear child, but do you spend much of your precious time in "foolish talking" and "jesting?" What have I said of that? These things are not consistent. (Eph. [illegible]) Instead let your conversation be in heaven, or upon things concerning your eternal welfare.

One thing thou lackest. Why, Lord I am not covetous, nor an idolater, neither do I jest or spend my time in idle talk or foolish stories. No child, but did I not hear thee say, but yesterday, I will have fifteen or twenty per cent for my money, or that [illegible] have it, I don't care [illegible] of the poor [illegible] brother [illegible] not [illegible] the kingdom of God. [illegible] it does not seem much [illegible] every thing to me, for [illegible] possess that land [illegible] pure true and just, and like unto the angels thou must [illegible] and [illegible] first works [illegible] come quickly and [illegible]ing.

One thing thou lackest. Not I Lord, for I [illegible] the matchless love [illegible] Ah my child, do I not hear that thou hast gone to law with thy brother, and that before unbelievers. What can I tell thee by the mouth of my servant Paul, why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? Nay, ye do wrong and defraud and that your brother. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. [illegible] who is just ready to [illegible] the gospel, fall [illegible] never to rise, and their blood be on your head.

One thing thou lackest. [illegible] patience? Remember by your patience, possess ye your souls. Are you a [illegible], proud, inventor of evil, [illegible] disobedient to parents? Paul says [illegible] those things are worthy of death. O let it not be said of us, Thou hast been unfaithful in that which I have committed unto thee, depart from me, but rather may our lives be bright examples of our professions, and then when the heavenly portal [illegible] to our eyes the Son of God [illegible] approval, and the welcome, Enter into my joys and sit down with me to the marriage supper of the Lamb, for thou lackest nothing.

MARY A. W[illegible]

[illegible]

"Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord," [illegible]

Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he reap, for he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 7, 8.

What the church needs most is personal [illegible], personal consecration, personal [illegible].

The last state of the church was to be [illegible] that [illegible] and the [illegible] words, "I know thy works that thou art neither cold nor hot, I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm and neither cold nor hot I will spue thee out of my mouth." Better by far make no profession than to be found living in this [illegible] sleepy, don't-care condition, as a nurseryman would say, dying with "dry rot." The tree so smooth and fair apparently but cut into the wood [illegible] is diseased. Because thou sayest I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Yes, dear brethren we are [illegible] because we have the truth. Oh, [illegible] Father. [illegible] "Vanity Fair" [illegible] always [illegible] any other [illegible] paper. How true, for where the treasure is, there will the heart be also. Some [illegible] so afraid of being called [illegible] right here you are in [illegible] danger [illegible] they were willing to [illegible] tithes [illegible] and again, they could take time to pray three times a day. Are you willing to do as much as they? Remember Christ's words, "Except your righteousness exceed theirs ye can in no wise enter the kingdom of God."

I have re-baptized a goodly number who were not satisfied with their former baptism, and we must continue to be re-baptized every [illegible] of our lives, and we will never [illegible] the Kingdom unless we do something ourselves. After all that Christ has done for us, have we [illegible] no obligations to perform? No wonder the children look at each other and smile when the minister is asked to offer thanks, or that they play peek-a-boo with the cats while the father and mother bow in prayer. They never saw such a thing in their lives perhaps before, and never having been taught to pray themselves they have no reverence for it in others. "And he said to them all, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke ix. 23.

The course that many professors of religion pursue reminds me of the story of the old man who said he had been a good Christian for fourteen years and his nearest neighbors even never mistrusted it; or like the little boy when asked by the minister if his father was a Christian, replied "he used to be but does not work at it now." Our Heavenly Father has called for workers, daily workers, and brethren he will have what he demands. We prize an article according to its value. The kingdom of God is of great worth or else the Son of God would not have given so much to gain it, and if we ever possess the goodly land with him, it will be by a mighty effort and sacrifice on our part. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. He can spew us out of his mouth [illegible] away from the divine presence, because [illegible] opportunities have been neglected. [illegible] forever, and the Master will [illegible] for us. We can have our own way now if we will, but for these things God will bring thee into judgment. Many will say, "have we not done many things in thy name?" but those awful words will pierce our ears, "I know you not."

Remember, any condition is better than lukewarmness. "But I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear. And anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see." Evidently the Laodicean was the last state of the church. Just where we are today. May God help us to be warned by his own words, and awake and put on the whole working armor, that we may be ready when he knocks, for he says, "behold, I stand at the door."

Yours in Christian love,
B. A. W[illegible]

Letter Drawer.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I have just read THE RESTITUTION of Nov. 22nd, and have been especially interested in the letters of Bro. Wolley, and Sisters Alice Tater and Hattie Frankeberger, which were read at the Plymouth Conference.

There is nothing that so cheers [illegible] while on the rugged road to the kingdom, as to listen to, or [illegible] personal experience and hope of the loved ones who are traveling the same road. The editorials and labored argumentive articles in THE RESTITUTION are very edifying and instructive, so much so that we could not under any circumstances dispense with them, but the personal letters from the brethren and sisters, giving a brief account of their hopes, their trials, their faith and their firm determination to continue faithful unto the end, are exceedingly interesting.

I propose that we have a Christmas love feast. That is a feast of love and good cheer. Let the menu consist of short crisp letters from the brethren and sisters to be published in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 28th. If all are not received in time to be inserted in that issue of the paper, let them be published in later issues.

Let every one who is awaiting the coming of the Lord, write and thus [illegible] so overwhelm Bro. Underwood with testimonies that the feast shall be continued for several weeks. Let every reader of THE RESTITUTION write and let us make this a time of rejoicing which we shall remember and talk about after we get into the kingdom.

H. S. P[illegible]

Bro. Underwood:

The work in this state (Nebraska) is so prosperous, I want to tell the readers of THE RESTITUTION about it.

Since our annual meeting in September both evangelists have been very busy holding meetings, and there are enough calls ahead to keep them going continuously all winter. Bro. Adams has just closed a three weeks meeting at St. Paul in Howard Co. where twenty-six willing souls were inducted into the all-saving name of Christ by baptism. Others are almost persuaded and a general break up in the churches there is the result. At the tent meeting near Moorefield in September eight more embraced the Truth as it is revealed in the Word of God, making thirty-four in the two months. To God be all the praise, and may each and every true child of God become instruments in his hands of helping others to see the Truth, of helping them turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Yours in hope of the promised reward when Jesus comes.

J. J. CADY.

Bro. Underwood:

I feel this morning as though I would like to say a word through the paper, to those interested.

I am now at Bro. D. J. Woodards. Bro. Woodard is one that embraced the truth under Bro. Wagoner's ministry, while in Florida. He is strong in the faith.

I came here on Monday evening from Floral City, after preaching three times over Sunday. Last evening I spoke 30 minutes to the men that are packing fruit. They listened very attentively and the Word seemed to be well received.

Fruit packing is in full blast here now. Every body seems to be moving about lively.

I speak at New Hope next Sunday and from there I go to Live Oak and Lake City. I do not know what is before me then, but it has been suggested by the brethren that we try soon to organize a conference in Florida. I hope this may be accomplished.

I should like to be with you at your meeting in Plymouth, but I am here, and my prayers shall be with you, and I ask to be remembered by you all.

I have been quite sick part of the time since I came here. About two weeks ago I began to improve, and am now reasonably well. I received a letter from my wife and the children saying they are well.

I expect to return home to Sutherland by the last of the month.

With love to you all, I am your brother in the blessed hope.

N. H. GEISELMAN.

Go with the stream, and it will carry you to the deep, there to be swallowed up in its vortex; follow the marks of God's chariot-wheels, and they will lead you to the gates of righteousness.—Isaac Marmelstein.

As Kepler said in astronomic studies, "I am thinking God's thoughts after God," so may the preacher of truth say, for his object is to get at the Divine mind in the Word, comprehend it, embody it then express it.

ERRATA. In R[illegible] view of [illegible] er No. 3, third column, 2nd paragraph, for "The incredulous build," read "the credulous build."

In No. 4., 3rd paragraph, for "Platonicism" read Platonism.

WE should be on our guard in our speech in most directions, but we can be fearlessly free in our loving utterances. Apart from the good we do to others by our words of love, we are personally gainers now and hereafter.

SOME one has said of God's people that they are like stars that shine brightest in the dark; like gold that is purer for the furnace; like incense that is more fragrant from the burning; like the camomile that grows faster from being trampled on.

IT has been said that the four rules of Christian living are, "admit, submit, commit and transmit." That means, to open the doors to the truth,—submit—bow to the will of God. Trust yourself and all you have and are to God and Christ. Convey the truth and life to others.

THERE is not a shorter, more hopeful, more inviting word in all the Bible, than this one small word "come." It is the keynote of the Gospel. Weary and heavy laden come—thirsty and fainting come, —and take of the water of life freely—was ever so much depending on a condition so simple?

WE see the Rev. Chas. Beecher says it is generally conceded that the expression, "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul" no more is meant than that God caused him to breathe, and he became a living animal. "Living soul" is applied to him in common with birds, beasts, and reptiles, in the same chapter.

WHEN we quote the words of the Spirit in Romans i. 16, where we are told that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, if we must be begotten by the words of the spirit, it may be asked what is the use of human words? They are only the feathers that carry the divine arrows;—for all that they are often essential, or else such means would not be employed.

IN both the Old Testament and the New the duty of God's people to reach out the helping hand to those in distress is plainly set forth. James sums up true religion in this way:—"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Chap. 1, v. 27. And in Isa. xlviii. 7, the Jews were reminded of their duty in this way:—"Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" It is therefore evident that if any professed follower of Christ is wrapped up in self—that man's religion is vain. It is incumbent on us to look not only on our own affairs; but also on the things of others. It is a great mistake to think that our help can only find scope in big acts. In every direction there are opportunities for us to stretch out the hand of sympathy and speak the word of comfort that will revive hope, and encourage some despondent one to struggle on.

THE letter from Bro. Dwiggins on the first page of this paper we want all to read. We will gladly devote a whole issue to such a "Love Feast" as he suggests. Take hold of this brothers and sisters, each one, and let it be done. Let us have a real "social meeting" that we can all say after it is past "It was good to be there." Do not miss your share in it.

DISPATCHES from London dated Nov. 27, say that 12,000 people lost their lives by an earthquake at Kashan, Persia, last week and 50,000 cattle perished. Shocks are still felt daily. At about noon Nov. 27, the city of Montreal, Canada, was shaken [illegible] a severe earthquake, and Dec. 1, the country round about Quebec was shaken [illegible].

Dear Restitution;

It is with heart felt sorrow that I take up my pen to tell you that I cannot renew my subscription. We have had almost a total failure of crops, which places us in very straightened circumstances, but I will renew as soon as possible.

For the present drop my name. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

[This is a sample, word for word as it came to us. Who wishes the blessing that will be credited to the one who makes it possible for the paper to still visit this household? ED.]

As a mark of oriental progress, and as foreshadowing the time when Eastward the tide of empire wends its way, we mention the fact that the Sultan of Turkey is said to have recently sent two vessels to navigate the Dead Sea,—one for passenger business and the other for freight. This is a sure indication that matters from a business point of view, are better than they have been since the treading down of Jerusalem.

THIS is a trying time for the poor in great cities. For while it is true that the great majority are suffering now from improvidence in ways when times were good and money flush, there are thousands of widows and orphans eking out a wretched existence because of no fault of their own. Some of these are the Lord's poor. What if that Lord should speak from heaven with an audible voice, saying "sell that ye have and give alms," what would we do about it? Well, he is saying just that all the time, having once said it; so if we neglect his poor we shall not hear him say, "Ye did it unto me.

IF ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "They which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." Who was this Abraham, and what about his blessing? Who was he? Why he was the friend of God called so by God himself, who assured him that he was his shield. And not only had he infinite protection, but an infinite portion. "I am thy shield, thy exceeding great reward." This, as we learn from Heb. xi. 35, included a resurrection to a better, more enduring everlasting life, and possessions of the land he lived in as a stranger, v's 8, 9, and the world's dominion. Rom. iv. 13, and in connection with his seed the Christ bless all the families of the earth. Gal. iii. 8. This is only the merest outline of the exceeding great reward God speaks of and which all those in Christ share with him under the same promise.

THOMAS Carlyle was something of a seer when thirty years ago, he wrote:—"The Republic west of us will have its trial period, its darkest of all hours. It is travelling the high road to that direful day. And this scourge will not come amid famine's horrid stride, nor will it come by ordinary punitive judgments. it will come as a hiatus in statecraft, a murderous bungle in policy. It will be when health is intact, crops abundant and the munificent hand open. Then so-called statesmen will cry overproduction, the people will go to the ballot amid hunger and destitution, but surrounded by the glitter of self-rule, and ratify by their ballots the monstrous overproduction, uttered by miss-statesmen, and vindicate by the same ballot the infamous lie overproduction, thrown upon the breeze by servile editors through a corrupt press, and thus bring ruin upon his country, serfdom upon himself and oppression upon his children."

News from Russia.

We herewith present our readers with an article taken from the Russian paper Novosti in regard to the demonstrations in honor of the Russian fleet in France which gives us a glimpse of things behind the scenes. It says:—"The Russian fleet has returned the visit of their French comrades to Cronstadt. A grand and solemn spectacle! Two great nations, once enemies, now thrown together by common danger and united in mutual sympathy for self-defence. Both have suffered from similar political blunders. France paid for 1812 and the Crimean war by her defeat in 1871, Russia in 1878 [illegible] her neutrality of 1870, when she found herself arraigned like a criminal before the Berlin congress. In 1879, the year of the Austro-German Alliance, the political reaction began. The mutual sympathy between France and Russia then first entered the sphere of politics. What is now taking place is so extraordinary and unprecedented that all notions of traditional French policy are upset. The great alliance is one of peace, and tends to efface all these differences between the two countries dwelt on by the European press. This is the meeting of two great historical peoples who cannot be destroyed. [We will see by and by.] The talk is of peace, but the purposes which France and Russia alike have at heart are not those of self protection, but of aggression. No one, not even Germany, proposes to attack France, if she travels on the path of peaceful progress; and no power has any design of aggression upon Russia." The Standard of Oct. 13th, truly observes that the Franco-Russian friendship may not be intended as a threat, but there is an attitude of defence which it is hard to distinguish from defiance. If we ask ourselves how it is or why it is the world is treated to this ostentatious parade of [illegible] between the two nations, we are only too easily provided with an answer. Judged as we are [illegible] by the parties [illegible] wrong to right, and [illegible] which would never have been inflicted had they only [illegible] friends earlier. France committed the mistake of sending its armies to the Crimea,—in other words, of standing in the way of Russia marching on Constantinople."

Irritated by the reminiscence, Russia allowed Prussia to march on Paris and was punished in turn by being summoned before the Congress at Berlin as a criminal." Could anything be more instructive, we ask, than this candid account of recent European history? Here are two nations, each coveting its neighbor's property and now regretting that they did not assist each other in acquiring it. There is no pretence of any kind that other nations lay covetous eyes on their property in turn. The wrong from which they suffer is that they have not been allowed to march on Berlin, to remain in Rome, and to descend to Constantinople, via Vienna."

An Exhortation.

"Let all things be done decently, and in order." 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

The new year is very close at hand and it reminds us if we would do effectual work for the Master, we must begin now laying plans and mustering our forces, that if possible more good may be accomplished the coming year, than in the past. So you will bear with me, brethren, while I talk on a subject of vital importance to the progress of the cause. I am talking now for the good of the order, and no order, society, or business ever thrived unless it was conducted on business principles. This hap-hazard way of doing business never did, and never will succeed. It is when all pull together that things move. "In union there is strength." Every successful business must be conducted on thorough business principles. Christianity is a business. Intelligent Christians apply business rules to all worldly matters, why not we as good sense when working for the Master. Thirty or forty years of comparative failure, should teach us a lesson. Paul left Titus in Crete to set the things that were wanting in order. Titus i. 5.

Now are not many of our churches in a similar condition, they want setting in order that they may do more effectual work. Some think they can live [illegible] Christians out of [illegible] in the [illegible] dear children, [illegible] a fatal mistake. "We are [illegible] brother's keeper," and the [illegible] the pillar and ground of the truth. 1 Tim. iii. 15.

The church [illegible] the truth, [illegible] but of many [illegible] care should [illegible] officers from [illegible] as the success [illegible] largely depends [illegible] skill then it [illegible] for a church [illegible] of time without [illegible] the work of God [illegible] among you." [illegible] Now [illegible] [illegible] to have the [illegible] should [illegible] bear the expense, in proportion to his ability [illegible] "For the workman is worthy of his hire," [illegible] God hath ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel. 1 Cor. ix. 14.

Then brethren, Paul gives us very urgent words in 1 Thess. v. 12. "And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you, [illegible] And esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." Brethren, take heed to this for it is the Lord's appointment. Every true Christian feels it is not only a sacred duty, but a privilege to support the cause of God to the extent of their ability, and where the minister is the servant of the church he does not like to feel that he is a pauper or beggar. Brethren should never say, "We give our minister so and so," but, "we paid him his dues," just as you would pay any other hired help. The minister should not lord it over God's heritage, but be an example to the flock, 1 Peter v. 3. They were to be in much esteem by the brethren, not because they bore the cognomen of preacher, but for their good example, and honest, faithful work. 1 Thess. v. 13.

I am satisfied there is an abundance of means in the hands of our brethren if it could be made available, to put several young men in the field and sustain them, besides keeping the older veterans at work.

There is Brother David Hadler, with whom we have had a slight acquaintance while we were in Illinois. He has not been preaching long but seems in dead earnest, is a good explainer of Scripture, and has fine ability for evangelist work.

Now, brethren, we should strain every nerve to make every particle of material available. There are multitudes perishing for lack of knowledge, and yet we cling to our Lord's portion with a death like tenacity. We read of a time when somebody's gold and silver will not be able to redeem them, but they will cast it to the moles and bats. Then the Master will say, "I have no use for you, or your money either, depart from me," and the door will close, and those without will cry, "open unto us," but those awful words will ring forever in their ears "I know you not. I was hungry and ye would not feed me, naked, and ye would not clothe me, for inasmuch as ye have done it to the least one of these my loved ones, ye have done it unto me."

The Lord wants good fighting men just when he can use them.

When the great civil war was over the enlistments stopped, by and by the enlistments will stop for each of us, and now is when we are wanted to carry the truth of "Life only in Christ," to hearts who have never heard it. We realize that many are opposed to this truth, and many others, hence, it is a constant warfare to get these things before the people and persuade just a few to accept them, and every proclaimer of these truths should have the prayers and sympathies of every believer in the blessed hope.

O brethren, we have no time for hair-splitting theories now, but the all absorbing thought should be, how can I reach and help some poor perishing sinner.

One thing more. If all the churches would make a united effort to enlarge the subscription list of THE RESTITUTION, how our Editor's heart would rejoice, and if some of the more wealthy ones would [illegible] paper to some of the [illegible] how comforting and sweet it would be to them. "And he that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord." Hearts made happy here, angels rejoicing, and a voice from heaven saying, thou hast put my money out at usury. Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord.

Conference Report.

The Church of God in Indiana, met at Plymouth, Nov. 17, 1893, and [illegible] over the following [illegible].

Conference was called Friday [illegible]. The report of the preceding meeting was read, and with some [illegible] was approved as read. The treasurer's report shows amount on hand at beginning of [illegible] quarter, $181.22. Amount received since, $10.00. Paid out [illegible]. Remaining in treasury $181.22.

On motion the evangelical committee was reelected for the ensuing year. Brother Wagoner having received a call to go to Kentucky to preach, the evangelist committee were instructed to send him there.

The weather was all that could be desired and although there were but few from abroad, the meetings were well attended and good attention was had during the entire meeting. The preaching was done by Bros. Wince, Wagoner, and Conner, which was all exceptionally good, and we trust may result in much good in the end. On Sunday evening one sister was baptized into the all-saving name, by Bro. Wagoner. Our prayer is that she may prove faithful, and receive the promised reward.

No Counterfeit Infidels.

"Did you ever see a counterfeit bank note?"

"Yes."

"Why was it counterfeited?"

"Because the genuine note was worth counterfeiting."

"Did you ever see a scrap of brown paper counterfeited?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because it was not worth counterfeiting."

"Did you ever see a counterfeit Christian?"

"Yes."

"Why was he counterfeited?"

"Because he was worth counterfeiting."

"Was he to blame for the counterfeit?"

"Of course not."

"Did you ever see a counterfeit infidel?"

"Why, no."

"Why not?"

"Ahem!"

We pass the above catechism along.

We too often become impatient for results. We want the reaping immediately upon the sowing! but grace takes time in bringing about the harvesting. We must sow in patience, beside all waters, and at the appointed period conversions will occur.

DIED.

Ettie J. Overholt, Nov., 15th, 1893.

Sister Ettie was the wife of Jacob Overholt, and daughter of Brother and Sister Hammond. She died in the blessed hope of a resurrection to immortal life when Christ shall come. Elder B. W. Woodward baptized her into the all-saving name, and with her dying breath she whispered, "I'm trusting in Jesus," and fell asleep. The writer spoke to a large congregation from the beautiful words in Ps. xlvii. 14.

A Valuable Library.

To obtain a library of reliable books, upon a variety of subjects, is too expensive for the majority of those who have to earn their bread by labor, whether manual or mental. But it is not generally known that a complete library of books, upon almost every conceivable [illegible] can be purchased entirely [illegible] for the sum of sixpence. At a secondhand book-stall, a complete set of books may often be obtained for even less than sixpence, and recently the writer obtained the complete library in this manner for the small cost of one penny! The books comprise discourses and essays upon political economy, a complete history of the most wonderful nation on earth, the origin and development of almost every nation under the sun, the earliest authentic history of the earth, the solution of the Eastern question, the finest poetry ever written, the most interesting stories ever penned, some speeches of the greatest men in the world's history, the finest collection of maxims and moral laws extant, marvellous instances of faith-healing, and the biographies of the world's worthies.

It is almost needless to say that this wonderful library is none other than the collection of books known as the Bible. What book contains grander discourses upon political economy than the Bible, which from beginning to end is a history of the Kingdom of God, which will eventually absorb all kingdoms, and exist for ever? What national history is more wonderful or interesting than that of the Jews, who have outlived all other ancient peoples, and who will yet rise to be the foremost nation in the world? No other book is so reliable as the Bible in matters pertaining to ancient history, and no other historical records date so far back as the books of Moses. The Jewish prophets have foretold the ultimate settlement of the intricate Eastern question, and the destiny of every nation under heaven. The Psalms of David form the most sublime poetry ever written, and the stories of Joseph, Pharaoh, Samson, Ruth, Esther, Daniel, and Jonah are unequaled. They illustrate the saying that "Truth is stranger than fiction." The parables and discourses of Christ are the finest on record, and even his enemies were compelled to admit that "never man spake like this man." John vii. 46.

Those who will make themselves acquainted with this wonderful book will be repaid in this life, by finding a priceless treasure which will never grow stale, or cease to yield instruction, and if its precepts are carried out faithfully, an endless life in the Kingdom of God will be the reward for the attention given to God's wonderful revelation—the Bible.

The Way of a Drunkard.

Sin comes to a young man and says: "Take this glass, it won't hurt you. It has a very fine flavor. Take a glass in the morning; it will be an appetizer. Take a glass at noon; it will aid digestion. Take a glass at night; it will make you sleep well." You are in a glow, while others are chilly. How bright it makes the eye, how elastic it makes the step! One day you meet him and say; "What are you doing here at noon? I thought you were at business." "Oh, I lost my place." "Lost your place?" God have mercy upon the young man when, through misdemeanor, he loses his place. Every temptation takes after him. Hoppled and handcuffed at thirty years of age by evil habit! Save that young man. He is on the express train that stops not till it tumbles over the embankment of perdition.

Life's progress is uphill. He who is making true progress is having a hard time of it. Every step costs effort. If a man finds his way an easy one, he may be pretty sure that he is going down hill; and that is no direction for any man. Let no man complain, therefore, but rather take heart in the fact that his progress is toilsome.—S. S. Times.

Please Read and Heed.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION know full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

THE RESTITUTION has been issued each week during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe, and at the low price it seems as if this might be done, our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Answer to Reviewer's No 2.

The question asked of the Pharisees is answered in the third article of the series, which is the right place in the argument for the answer to appear. The unbelieving Jews were willing to confess that "the Christ" was to be Son of David, but not willing to confess him Son of God. Hence they falsely accused our Lord of "blasphemy," not for claiming to be Son of David, but for claiming to be Son of God, and for calling God "His own Father, making himself equal with God." Jno. v. 18; R. V. x. 33, 36; xix. 7; Matt. xxvi. 63, 66.

My remark about inventing objects of worship was applicable to Pharisees and heathen, and a warning to mankind in general against imitating them. How can my reviewer imagine me to mean that he was inventing a Christ for himself to worship when I have yet to learn whether he thinks that any one ought to worship Christ? Will he please inform me whether he regards Christ as an "object of worship," and also whether he thinks Christ was a mere man, or not? I have no desire to misrepresent my reviewer's theory in the slightest degree, but rather to give it whatever honor it may be fairly entitled to.

He inquires whether I am willing to take "without emendation or addition" the saying of Scripture that "God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law?" To take it without the "addition" of its parallels would be neglecting a large portion of the Bible, so numerous are they. A first principle of interpretation is that no conclusion is to be drawn from the absence of a doctrine from one place of Scripture if it be clearly stated in another. There must be a harmonious "addition" together of all their passages on any subject. My article in RESTITUTION No. 27 clearly stated this, and I suppose my reviewer himself readily agrees to it. The Revised Version says, "God sent forth his Son born of a woman, born under the law." The Amer. Bible Union, and Diaglott's interlinear also use the word "born" instead of "made," in this passage. And although He is not here called "the only begotten Son," yet by the "addition" of Jno. iii. 16, 18 we get this idea clearly enough; and by the addition of John i. 14, 18, we find the same only begotten Son connected with the Word that in the beginning "was GOD." The main difference between the reviewer and myself seems to be that he does not attach the same meaning that I do to the Savior's title, "The only begotten Son of God," which is part of the "name" that was preached to the Samaritan converts before their baptism. Acts viii. 12. I see in this title a proof of his divinity, and our right to worship him on account of his divine attributes, as the early disciples did. Now it would give me great pleasure to know that my reviewer takes the same view; and then the controversy might end.

My reviewer wants to know how much I believe of the saying that "in all things" it behooved Christ to be made like unto his brethren. But this was sufficiently shown in my fourth article where I have mentioned in what limitation the word "all" must be taken in this text, and that parallel testimonies furnish us with at least five exceptions wherein he was not like unto his brethren. Will my reviewer insist that "all" has no exceptions in that text? Does he not see that to take it absolutely and without exception would lead to the horrors of Josephism?

As to the future oneness of the disciples with Christ, my remarks in the second article were plain. The oneness, as respects us, is not consummated before we become partakers of the divine nature at the resurrection.

My reviewer should remember that Logos (Word) is a noun of the masculine gender, and must have a pronoun of the same gender when applied to Christ, as, "He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called the Word of God." Rev. xix. 13. In speaking of the Logos or Word reviewer should not say, "it was with God in the beginning," but "He was with God in the beginning." The Diaglott uses the pronouns inconsistently when it changes the gender and says of the Logos, "Through it everything was done:" and a few verses further on, "We beheld his glory." As if the Logos was not as masculine while he "was God" as after he "became flesh." Jno. i. 1, 3, 14.

Any careful reader of my four articles may see that what I contend for is not so much our Lord's pre-existence as his divinity, and his being more than any mere man. Although at the same time I dare not deny nor undertake fully to define his pre-existence, in view of such testimonies as Jno. i. 13, 15, 30; vi. 62; viii. 58; xviii. 5; 2 Cor. viii. 9; etc.

Although we need not go into the question of essential or non-essential, yet my two opponents—the "We" writer, and "W. H. W." have used such severe language toward those differing from them as to leave on my mind the impression that they regard their own view as essential to salvation. If my reviewer does not regard his essential, why was he so "terribly in earnest" about it?

It is darkening counsel in a plain matter to give such an unwieldly name as "philosophical disquisition" to the clear and simple distinction that I drew between nature and person.

My reviewer seems to have read too hurriedly the works referred to. In "Evangelism concerning the reign of Christ," the sonship of our Lord is expressly mentioned, and his names, "The mighty God," and "God with us," and "the only begotten Son of God." pages 2, 4, 29, 30. In "The Ancient Gospel" see pages 8, 10. In "Gospel of the Kingdom" see 2nd, 4th, 5th and 10th discourses of first and second edition; and pages 4, 40, 47, 82, 107, 252 of third and fourth editions.

He inquires, "Did God have a Son before he was begotten?" This shows that he has not sufficiently studied the Scriptural uses of the word son. If there were no other sonship than that by begettal how could there be "sons of the burning coal," i. e. sparks, and "son of the quiver or bow" i. e. an arrow? Adam was never "begotten," and had no "pre-existent mother," yet he was God's "son," i. e. by creation. Luke iii. 38. Believing patriarchs were sons, even in a twofold sense,—by creation and adoption. Deut. xiv. 1. Hearing a speaker say what sounded like mere-manism, I inquired of him privately, "Do you think that the Lord Jesus was a mere man?"

"No," said he, "not a mere man, for he was miraculously born."

But this was a lame and insufficient disavowal of mere-manism, for Adam too was miraculously produced without any human father or mother, and yet Adam was a mere man.

Although the supernatural birth of our Lord in Bethlehem is one reason for his being called the Son of God, there may, perhaps, be an additional reason for this title found in his words, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world," compared with, "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Jno. xvi. 27, 28; Micah v. 2. If he "came forth from the Father" before time was, and "came into the world" when his human body was "prepared for" him, there would seem to be three stages in his filial relationship,—that which was "from of old" when as the divine Word he was with God; that which was manifested when the Word became flesh; and that which was declared by his resurrection. Even in our filial relation to the heavenly Father there are three stages,—that by creation, that by adoption, and that by the coming resurrection. Acts xvii. 28; Galat. iv. 5; Lu. xx. 36.

The expression "only begotten Son of God" reveals that there is in the divine nature or essence a reciprocal relation of Father and Son,—two persons, the Father first and the Son second in the order of revelation and operation. But we must avoid unduly pressing the analogy between the human relations of father and son, and the divine relations signified by the same terms: for the human and known relation seems to be employed as the best term among men to denote measurably the divine and unknown relation: the human being as far from the divine as the temporal is from the eternal, or the finite from the infinite. Besides the term "Son," used to designate his relation to God the Father, his relation is also designated as the Word, and Form, and Image of God; the Effulgence of his glory, and the Impress of his substance. Jno. i. 1; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Col. i. 15; Phil. ii. 6; Heb. i. 3. R. V.

Reviewer says that my calling Christ the Second Person of the divine nature is "another departure from the truth." Let us see! He afterwards says—in RESTITUTION of Nov. 15th—"The Scriptures plainly teach that there are hosts of personalities possessing divine nature," and that "The One Supreme God is the fountain of their life."

Is it not a fact then that "the only begotten Son" ranks higher than any one of these angelic hosts, all of whom "worship him?" Heb. i. 6. And as the Father is the First and "fountain" of the Godhead or divine nature, and the Son is next to the Father in power, glory, and divinity, does it not follow by Scriptural and logical necessity, that the Son is the Second Person of that nature? What then becomes of reviewer's charge that my assertion was a "departure from the truth?" I used the term "divine nature" not in reference to angels, but as synonymous with "Godhead." Does reviewer see no difference between the Godhead and the angelic nature, when the Scripture assures us that Christ, in whom is the fulness of Godhead, "took not on him the nature of angels?" Heb. ii. 16.

According to the gradation which Paul says, "I would have you know," God is the first, Christ the second, man the third, and woman the fourth. But it seems that at some point in this gradation (where, I know not), my reviewer might want to thrust in the hosts of angels; but this would be no improvement on the words of wisdom given us through Paul. 1 Cor. xi. 3. In the order of revelation and operation, the Son is the next or Second Person after the Father, as illustrated in the great baptismal formula given from the Son's own lips. Matt. xxviii. 19.

Sermon at the Funeral of P. W. Cotton.

Perry W. Cotton was born October, 23, 1831, and "fell asleep" in Jesus at 2 A. M., Nov., 11, 1893, at Indianapolis, Ind., being 62 years and 21 days old.

He was united in marriage in 1852 to Miss Sarah Bromfield, who, with two sons and three daughters survive him. He also leaves three brothers, and five sisters to sorrow with his family in this hour of their grief and affliction. His excellent qualities as a Christian and noble gentleman made him an affectionate and devoted husband and kind father. Impelled by love and watchfulness, he was never neglectful of the comforts of his willing helpmeet and their confiding children. His thoughtful care for the happiness of his family forbid him from frequent visits to the usual places of resort for gentlemen of business, preferring after closing his labors for the day the society of his family and the retirement of home.

His reputation in the community in which he lived was assurance of his unimpeachable life in his family.

Pure in life, chaste in conversation, clean in his daily department, avoiding the use of strong drinks, and abstaining from the tobacco customs of many of his neighbors, and fellow citizens. He was not only a model husband and sympathetic father, but a commanding example to all with whom he associated.

For many years connected with the well known house of [illegible] and Stalnaker, he met not only the citizens of this city, but many people from the out counties, and his sterling integrity, his uncompromising honesty and courteous bearing brought to him the esteem of his fellows in business.

By nature a true gentleman he was always dignified and respectful at home, in his business house and on the streets. He was careful never to reflect on any one, nor to speak that which might bring pain to the humblest member of society.

His twenty-five years residence in this busy mart gave all those who met him the best opinion of his worth as a man and a citizen. Not a spot, not a blemish attached to his life or character in the estimation of his neighbors and friends.

His business life deserves the emulation of the young men of our time.

His sons and daughters may well walk in the path that he strewed with so many sweet flowers of charity and love, never forgetting that it was his wish to leave the world not as having added a brier or a thorn to annoy the weary traveler through the evil age in which he lived, but here and there to drop a kind word, and to beckon his race to a higher life.

He passed to his waiting as he had lived, in full faith and hope of eternal life, and to share the honors that await the heirs of the kingdom, promised of the Father to the "little flock."

When some thirty years ago, Perry W. Cotton and wife became members of the church through the hands of Isaiah Hornady, now deceased, he entered with the fixed purpose of seeking a better understanding of his relation to his creator, to know more about the Man Christ Jesus and his mission of mercy to this globe, to adjust himself to the new environments as a man of faith, and to enter the school of Moses and the prophets under the divine tutorship of the Son of God and his college of apostles; to trace through the pages of the Bible his duty to God and man. He placed himself at the foot of the class with an open Bible determined to know "none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." He did not go to the Bible to build a human structure, to find proof to strengthen a preconceived theory but to learn what is revealed from the Father to and concerning man. He did not read to gratify himself for the theological [illegible] of his day, believing that God had addressed him through the Bible, he was unwilling to subscribe to the opinions of even the most learned, but reserved to himself the sacred right and high privilege of examining the written Word for himself, that his faith might be of God and not of man. He however, did not refuse to read and hear what others had to suggest concerning the great scheme so wonderfully unfolded in the matchless records of heaven, but the opinions of the most pious weighed nothing with him where his Father had spoken plainly on controverted questions.

Reading carefully the Mosaic account of man's creation in Eden, he felt compelled to reject what he believed to be the Platonic theory regarding inherent immortality, and gladly accepted the record made by Moses. With that statement before him he believed that God had only given eternal life to man through promise, and noted the fearful results that would follow the descendants of Adam and Eve as a result of disobedience. To learn if possible the outcome of the controversy between the Creator, the creature, and the tempter of Eve he turned prayerfully to the records made by the great scholar, Moses who was learned in all the wisdom of his day. Following devoutly the Mosaic narrative, it became clear to him that the seed promised to Eve would pass through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that the land deeded to these saints of God, would in due time fall into their Son's hands,—sometime in the future from them, and then through Christ their Seed, the nations would receive the promises made to Abraham and repeated to all the prophets and reaffirmed by Jesus and his apostles. Discovering that to David he had made promise that of the fruit of his loins he would set on his throne he believed that in him he saw the Seed of the woman that was to bruise the serpent's head. Throughout the written record he found that God's prophets all referred to the seed of the woman in some way as coming through Abraham and David, and that all the promises made to the woman and to Abraham would under him the Christ—be realized on this earth created for man. Since David's Son, and God's heir shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem.

With these plain statements before him he disregarded the popular theology of the schools regarding the reign of Christ. He saw in Jesus the great Life Giver, and Restorer of all things promised to the Fathers, and since he comes to give life it naturally followed that man did not possess it by creation in Eden. He held that eternal life is the gift of God through Christ at his second coming to Jerusalem to reign on David's throne and fulfil the promise made to the fathers. Longing therefore for eternal life under the Son of God, the seed of the woman, and heir of David, he humbly turned to Jesus who can give it from the Father. He felt that it would be great presumption on his part to claim now to have immortality, since Paul has declared that God only hath it, dwelling in light. Under Jesus he saw through faith the now scattered tribes of Israel restored at the second coming and the promises made to them in process of fulfillment. Under Jesus and his Bride, the Church, who will then have been clothed with immortality and eternal life to which great privileges he hoped through faith, and God, to attain. It is then, at that day, that he believed the twelve apostles should occupy the twelve thrones of Israel under their great King, the Royal Son of David, and that all the immortal saints shall have power over the Gentile nations God's dominions. Thus it was to him that the language of Gabriel to Mary became quite plain in the saying, that her Son should reign on David's throne. This was his faith to the end. Then the promises to Eve and to Abraham and to David could, as he saw it, be made good, and the restoration of all things be fully accomplished on earth. He was thus led up to the second coming of Jesus when this mortal shall put on immortality, and when eternal life, God's gift to all who shall be accepted in the Beloved shall begin, to last through the ages to come.

Perry W. Cotton did not believe in the inherent immortality of the soul, but he did believe that this mortal body shall put on immortality, and then reign with Christ as promised of the Father in righteousness and peace.

He did believe to the end of his pure life, in the restoration of Israel to their own land, that salvation may then come to the Gentile nations as promised to Abraham and assured by Jesus.

He was an earnest believer in the soon return of Jesus to earth to begin his mighty reign over the nations, and at the end of the one thousand years to destroy death, the last enemy to man. That since Jesus is now the Prince of the kings of the earth, that he will then at his second coming be King of kings, and Lord of lords, and restore to earth and her people the Edenic order of things, "Peace on earth, and good will to men."

Here we find in brief the faith of our sleeping brother, for as he most fully believed on God's Word, he now rests waiting the call of the Master to his reward. God's mercy is equal to all his promises.

To the sorrowing companion and weeping sons and daughters, may I, who loved your husband and father as a brother, bid you emulate, as I have no doubt you do, and will, his pure life and childlike faith, and wait the coming of the Son of God to meet him.

I close with these beautiful lines from Love H. Jamison.

Be of good cheer, ye friends of Jesus,
Never succumb to doubts and fears;
Cherish the great and precious promise,
"To reign with Christ a thousand years."
To reign a thousand years with Jesus,
Free from all trials, toils and tears—
This is the Father's precious promise,
"To reign with Christ a thousand years."

Be of good cheer, earth's night of sorrow
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Meet it as equals [illegible] fears;
This is the sure and precious promise,
To reign with Christ a thousand years."

[illegible]
[illegible] Christ appears,
[illegible]
[illegible] a thousand years.
To reign [illegible] years with Jesus,
[illegible]
With the [illegible] of every nation
[illegible] with Christ a thousand years.

Be of good cheer in a thousand ages
Perfect in bliss and free from tears,
Fears will be in their endless cycles,
Response with Christ a thousand years.
Ten thousand times ten thousand ages,
Freedom from all and death and tears—
What an eternal weight of glory!
Comes with that reign of a thousand years.

Dear Restitution:

I take the privilege of informing the brethren through your columns that I have just closed a very successful meeting at St. Paul, Neb. Twenty-six during the meeting put on Christ by baptism. Such a stir was created and so many leaving the other churches that they determined to put a stop to it in some way, so they combined and sent to Grand Island and got a man of the Christian (or Campbellite) church to discuss the difference between us. The discussion lasted six evenings, two hours each evening. The subject discussed was the nature of man in two propositions. I affirmed first three evenings, Mr. Johnson the last three. On Monday before the discussion closed at night, six decided between truth and error and we went with them to the Loup river where we buried them with Christ and raised them to walk in newness of life. Brethren pray for these earnest ones that have left all for truth's sake, that they may stand fast in the faith and receive the crown of life that fadeth not away. We repeat the question of Bro. T. E. Adams, What are we doing for the Master? Are we doing all we can? If not, will we not be held responsible for what we lack. The faithful servants were not told to enter into the joy of their Lord because they possessed certain talents, but because they had doubled them. Brethren is it not worthy of solemn thought that Jesus did not say that the man with the five talents gained three or four but five, likewise the one with two did not hear that welcome applaudit, Enter into the joy of thy Lord because he had gained one, but had doubled his talents. It seems to me that the Master intended to teach us by the above that whatever means we have in our possession must be used for all it is worth before we can expect to enter the kingdom. Let us all think well of these things and lose no time in doing whatever the Master has for us to do. It will be too late when the Master returns to change matters. Now is the time to make our calling and election sure. Let us be on the safe side, sacrifice the things of this life, not that of the next. Your brother in hope of the kingdom.

Dear Restitution:

Perhaps all would like to know what John Foore is doing. Well I am not idle. I did not start out in God's work to be a drone. I want to work while I can. I am getting along in years, being 61 years old, but feel stouter than I did at 50.

On the 10th of October I began a meeting in Ripley, Brown Co., Ill. I preached over two Sundays to crowded houses. Six put on Christ by baptism. Left the brethren in good spirits, and well pleased with the meeting, with a promise to return in the spring of 1894, if alive, and could possibly do so. We also preached two discourses in the Methodist church near Rushville in the adjoining county. Friday before the first Sunday in Nov. we bid them farewell and left for Blue Mound, Mo., where we preached in the Christian Church over two Sundays, with five more additions. We organized a church of 38 members, 17 of whom I baptized myself. We organized in the Christian Church. They objected but we went on and did the work, telling them that we did not want to organize their old church-building, but only wanted to move to ourselves and go to house-keeping, for the brethren were in the wrong pew. If all our brothers and sisters that have gone into other churches in order to have a home, and have placed pad-locks on their mouths, would move to themselves or come out from among them how much better it would be, "and be ye separate," saith the Lord. I believe that God will bring to account those who pay out money for false preaching. While here last spring a young lady, an invalid, who had not walked for 23 years, became interested and wanted me to send her a hymn book. After I got home I wrote her a letter, with God's promises and her duties. The result was that I carried her down into the water and baptized her. It was a day long to be remembered by all present, and especially to her. We also baptized another brother, and still there are more that want to be baptized, but I had to leave them and go home where I found all well. Give God all the glory, and blessed be his holy name. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory, amen, and amen.

On Saturday before the 3rd Sunday, I went to Medoc, Mo., where I married Frank Morrow, to Miss Dellie Taggart. They were married in church in the presence of about one hundred persons. May the happy couple live long, and may they soon put on Christ by baptism, and be among them that are chosen, is my prayer for Christ's sake.

Announcements.

The first quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, will convene D. V. at the new church in Frontier Co., commencing Friday evening Dec. 15th and hold over the following Sunday.

On account of the great increase of interest in the state during the last six months, a corresponding ratio of interest should be taken by the brethren at these meetings.

At the business meeting at 2 o'clock on Saturday some new business will be taken up, and the attendance of every brother and sister is earnestly requested.

There is a great work ahead for the brethren during the coming season. Are we prepared for it? Will we buckle on the whole armor? A crown of eternal life is promised only to the faithful ones.

J. J. CADY, Sec.

The Church of God known as the Northern Nebraska and Southern Dakota Conference will convene if the Lord is willing, at Ainsworth, Nebraska, in the Court House Hall at that place, commencing December 15th, 1893. All brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic Faith are cordially invited to attend this conference as we expect to do a good work for the Master's cause. There will be other business matters of importance at this meeting, and brethren we want your help, as this conference is anxious to unite and be in union with the State Conference that we work together for the good of all in building us up and lifting up God's fallen creatures to a perfect knowledge of his great love that we may all share in the great blessings promised in his Kingdom to come. "Watchman what of the night? The morning cometh and a night also. If ye will inquire ye may inquire ye." Isa. xxi. 11.

[illegible]stitution:

I have been requested by the brethren and sisters to have this piece published. It was written as a composition for the last day of school last May. We were expecting a large audience on that day, and I gladly accepted the invitation of my teacher, and chose for my subject the promises made unto the fathers, or the covenant with Abraham by God.

I had been studying the Bible, and reading THE RESTITUTION, which I borrowed from Brother and Sister Calkins, until I thought I could explain and throw a little light in our school by choosing this subject. Brother Almus Adams of Nebraska was here in February, and preached the Word of God in a new light. I united with the Church of God at the age of seventeen. I will send this, and perhaps it will send a gleam of light into the heart of some one who has not thought of the truth.

MABEL CARPENTER.

The Promises made unto the Fathers, or the Covenant with Abraham by God.

Who are the Fathers? Moses was commanded to say to the children of Israel, "The Lord God of your fathers the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob hath sent me unto you," Ex. iii. 15.

Peter says, "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified His Son, Jesus," Acts iii. 13.

Paul says, "To Abraham and his Seed were the Promises made," Gal. iii. 16.

When Abraham left Mesopotamia, and came into the land of Canaan, the Lord said to him, "unto thy seed will I give this land. Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." The Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying, "unto thy Seed have I given this land from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates. I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generation, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee. I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God. Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 14-15; xv. 18; xvii. 17 18. The same promises were repeated to Isaac and Jacob, and are verified by the fact that about sixty-seven years after the last promises that I have quoted, the Lord said to Isaac who was dwelling in the same land, "Unto thee and to thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxvi. 3-4.

About forty-four years after these promises to Isaac, the Lord said to Jacob, who was also dwelling in the same land, "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxviii. 13-14.

When about to die Jacob said, "God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan and blessed me, and said unto me, behold, I will make thee fruitful and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people; and I will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession."

Having now learned what the promises are let us consider the following important points.

Who are the heirs? How long may individuals hold this land? How may they obtain a personal interest in these promises?

It is plain enough who Abraham Isaac and Jacob were, but perhaps there are some who imagine that the word "seed" here refers to the Jews who came into the land of Canaan under Joshua. This question, however, is not left to human conjecture, for the inspired Paul settled it plainly forever. [illegible] all the world, wherever the [illegible] is read, would hear [illegible] tion and would [illegible] import. "To Abraham [illegible] seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as one, 'And to thy seed,' which is Christ" Gal. iii. 16. Here then, we discover that a real and tangible inheritance on this earth has been promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Christ, for an everlasting or eternal possession.

The Bible shows [illegible] through that Christ and these [illegible] thers" have sojourned personally in that land, yet not one of them [illegible] [illegible] received the promises," Heb. [illegible] 39. The Blessed Savior in the very [illegible] [illegible] and the birds of the [illegible] but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Matt. viii. 20. Although his enemies [illegible] crucified him he arose from the dead and ascended to heaven. And from that day until now "the land of promise" has been deserted [illegible] [illegible] It would [illegible] the part of an unbeliever to conclude that the promises have become a failure. "The Scripture cannot be broken. "Though the vision tarry, wait for it, it will surely come."

The Blessed [illegible] for [illegible] people [illegible] God would reject him [illegible] [illegible] and reign.

In the parable of the vineyard [illegible] [illegible] kill [illegible] inheritance." Matt. xxi. [illegible] represents his inheritance as on earth, for, of course they could not expect to sieze an inheritance above the skies by killing him. Having crucified him, his resurrection intervenes at this point as the golden link which connects this parable with that of the Pounds, for without his resurrection the latter parable could not be [illegible] Luke xix. 12. In this parable we behold the risen "heir" as the "noble man" arrayed in the [illegible] immortality and [illegible] country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. Yet [illegible] a glorious retinue or body [illegible] [illegible] yet through the [illegible] the skies, [illegible] Father's right hand. While [illegible] were looking steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel which also said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11.

The parable of the pound is based on the fact that the kings of Judea in those days used, before commencing their reign, to go on a journey to Rome in a far country to be invested with the royalty and for which they would return and reign in Judea. And also [illegible] the Savior's kingdom will be [illegible] he has gone to heaven to receive it or rather to procure for himself the royalty. The Lord has not [illegible] ed yet, nor has he established his kingdom, for his apostles asked him if he was going to restore again the kingdom of Israel, and he said unto them, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power, but ye shall receive power [illegible] that the Holy Ghost is come [illegible] you." We find in the second chapter of Acts that the apostles received the Holy Ghost, on the day of Pentecost, but it does not say Christ established the kingdom of Israel, and when Christ does return having been divinely invested with royalty, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory established in the land of promise [illegible] and divine kingdom, [illegible] [illegible] sion." It will [illegible] [illegible] inheritance [illegible]

How [illegible] Abraham and his seed? [illegible] ness of reign [illegible] Mount Zion and Jerusalem [illegible] mortal shall immortal be, and [illegible] [illegible] commandments how will you [illegible] [illegible] hovah's law [illegible] Can you reply, "I [illegible] commandments?" The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 13, 1893. NO. 46.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the [illegible] saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Judea.

On Sharon's plains still blooms the fragrant rose,
The lily bright still on the mountain grows,
When verdure clad the hills in spring appear,
Their stately heads aloft, the palm trees rear.

E'en in its desolation, Judah's land now tells
Of fairer times, when o'er its heights and dells,
Nature outpour'd her costliest gifts, and spread
Her sheaves of plenty—and her branches shed.

The gleams of light which gild that hallowed land,
The flowers that bloom e'en on the parched sand,
The plains that wave with harvest's golden store,
The streams that gush from hill to rocky shore:

These are the pledges of returning grace,
These are the smilings of the Father's face;
They speak a language which amidst Israel's griefs
Tells of a time of happiness and peace.

The day shall dawn for thee, thou land of bliss,
Fruitful and fair shall be thy wilderness,
And Israel's tribes from utmost earth shall come,
To dwell forever in their ancient home.

A series of discourses delivered by A. J. Eychaner in the Gospel tent at Hickory Grove, Sept. 9-26, 1893.

"The things which are seen are temporal."

One of the principal features of the world in which we live is the transitory character of all natural things. The student of nature is early impressed with the constant changes that are going on in silence around us. The seasons come and go and with them in turn the leafy spring time changes to the garment of summer, then comes autumn, to be succeeded by the frosts and snows of winter and all the changes in the vegetable world which this term implies. The earth changes. Where once the ocean rolled its restless tides now are verdant plains or sunny dells where waves the golden grain. Life and death too mark important changes in the animal world. The insect of a day, and the man of a century, live and die.

Nothing is quiet, nothing stationary, nothing at rest. There is no emblem of immortality in nature. Every plant, every animal, every object in the natural world is but a silent index finger pointing in one direction, viz., the things that are seen are temporal,—change, transition, decay, death,—everywhere.

It has been my aim to study nature in connection with the Bible and I have found everywhere the most perfect agreement. They are but companion volumes from the same great author. They must harmonize if they came from the same Divine hand. Do you read in the Bible, "The soul that sinneth it shall die?" You will find in nature the man who departed from God dying. Do you read in the Bible, "The dead know not anything?" You will find in nature that when man is once dead there is no expression of knowledge or feeling. And everywhere upon this subject of man's nature the Bible corresponds exactly with our observation and experience, and the doctrine of eternal life as promised by Jesus to those who believe shines out with greater brilliancy as we see man's certainty of death and the need of a resurrection.

We desire now to notice the arguments of those who believe in natural immortality as drawn from nature.

1. Man shrinks from death. It is argued from this proposition that because man is afraid of death—because man's very nature rebels at the thought of giving his life that God would never have created him with this aversion unless he were immortal.

'Tis true man has an aversion for death. He does not like to give up the present life. But a little thought upon the subject will enable us to discover the reason that man shrinks from death. The reason man shrinks from death is not found in the supposition that he is immortal, but because he is afraid that death is a sober reality. If "there is no death" why should man fear it? If he were immortal he could never die and could never fear to die. The fact that he has a fear of death is evidence of liability to death. The fear of death finds a place in his nature. His constitution is such that the attack of disease or accident may overcome life, and his fear is grounded upon that possibility. He knows he must die. "The living know that they must die." We could never fear the cholera or small-pox if there were no such diseases. The dread of imaginary diseases never affects mankind, but the fear of that which exists does affect them. The argument then of this proposition is in favor of man's complete mortality or his liability to death.

Again this fear of death answers a wise end in the economy of nature. It is an instinct for the preservation of life. The fear of death is the best life assurance. Where death is feared, life is at par. Whether, therefore, the fear of death rests upon the liability to disease or is founded upon instinct for the preservation of life, in either case death is a reality and therefore man is mortal.

2nd. Man longs for and aspires to immortality. Strange as it may appear, this proposition has been marshalled into line to do duty in defense of the dogma of natural immortality. Stripped of all its rhetorical flourishes it simply is—because a man desires immortality, therefore he has it! Because a hungry man desires a good dinner, therefore, he has it! Because one longs for and aspires to a position as a king, therefore, he is a king! Such a proposition breaks down of its own flimsiness, and were it not that hundreds use it to support present immortality it should not deserve serious consideration. Man's desires are founded upon his demands and not upon his supply. The Bible declares that, "The hope which is seen (or realized) is not hope." If we hope for any thing, it is proof that that thing is not possessed.

Hope, aspiration and desire all look to the future for realization, and the very fact that we desire any thing is proof that we do not possess it. That God intended that every desire shall be met is not disputed. That human existence shall some glad day emerge into immortality is a proposition abundantly sustained by the Scriptures, but it will be beyond the present. It will be by a resurrection, a new birth into a higher life and is not realized while we bear the image of the first Adam. When this corruptible shall have put on the incorruptibility, and this mortal shall have put on the immortality, so long a matter of promise and hope, then will the desire for that condition cease. Hope will then be realized and the immortality be ours in possession. This is positively set forth as being conferred at the resurrection and sounding of the last trump. As the trumpet has not yet sounded and as the dead have not yet been raised, we conclude that we are yet mortal, and although we hope for and aspire to immortality, the fact that these remain unsatisfied, proves that the reality has not yet been reached.

There are some things existing in nature from which arguments made, or rather attempted, to show man's immortal nature and that he survives death. But the analogy thus drawn is based upon the statement that death is only apparent and not real. This is begging the whole question. The very point to be proven is here assumed to be true. If death is a reality, its analogy will be found in nature, so on the other hand if death is only apparently death, but not really, then there will be no real death any where in nature: and this leads us to examine

4th. The revival of vegetation in the spring time. When winter comes with her chilly breath and mantle of snow, then there comes a change over the vegetable world. A careful study will reveal the fact that two effects are produced by the frost and cold. 1st. Some plants die, and 2nd, some apparently die, and just at this point is where we want to be the most critical and the most careful in our investigation. It is assumed by the advocates of natural immortality that all plants pass through apparent death yet possess life and reappear to bloom upon the approach of the warm springtime. The real facts are, however, that some plants actually die while some do not. Those individual plants which die never appear again upon the earth; but nature has provided for their perpetuation in the seed, where lies wrapped up the potential energy or life of a new plant stamped in the kindred mould. But in the other class of plants life has never departed from them. They are not dead. At the retouch of spring all the vital energies spring into activity. The tree puts out leaves again, the bulb sends up a new stalk and the seed a new plant. The reason is at hand—life was ever present through the long dark night of winter. They had not died at all. But how is it with man? When he lies down in death is that death real or does it only appear to be so? Do the dead come back to us and show us that they are yet alive? In the language of Job, "Man dieth and wasteth away. Yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" These theorists must show that man still lives after the event we call death before they can claim this class of plants as an analogy. They assume what they ought to prove and then they ask us to take that assumption as proof. The evidence furnished by man's death is wholly of a different nature. He is like the plant which falls at the approach of winter never to appear again, and unless there shall be a resurrection for him he has perished. This agrees perfectly with inspiration, "If there be no resurrection of the dead then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." The only way these theorists can make a show of analogy is to boldly assert in the premise that man does not die. But this assertion is against the facts. Both the Bible and universal experience assert that man does die and in death he wastes away just like that class of plants do which die. The living plant does not waste away and disappear, but the dead one does and as man in death wastes away the analogy is perfect between him in death and the dead plant. The other plants reappear in life with all the former vigor but man never so appears. The place which once knew him knows him no more forever. His reappearance in vigor and life are necessary to establish the analogy of the living plants. Similar to the above argument is the one from

5th. The appearance of plants from seeds long buried in the ground. The appearance of plants in localities where they have never been seen before has led to much speculation as to their origin. Investigation has shown that they sprang from seeds long ago covered up and by exclusion from air and sunlight have remained dormant. When exposed to the warm sun and air they came again into the world of active life. But these seeds had all those years been alive waiting for the proper conditions to manifest that life. No death at all, so no analogy and no argument for present immortality. In man, however, there is no such awakening after the sleep of thousands of years. If now, man came to life one in a thousand, or one in a million after a dormant state, then there would be analogy. In man there is no such manifestation of life. His death is final and his sleep perpetual. You may open the tomb, let in the sunlight and air, yet he heeds it not. The returning spring may wreath the earth with flowers and carpet the ground with living green, but man slumbers on, aye and will slumber on until the resurrection voice awakens him. Seeds are said to grow after centuries of burial, but man, proud, peerless man, lord of the creation, has never manifested life beyond the event we call death. Nor are these events so hidden in the process of nature that only the philosopher may study them, but they are seen and known by the unlettered rustic everywhere. The humblest son of man may read in nature's volume. Her book lies wide open before him. There are no facts in nature which all may not read. Theology has no patent on nature's teachings. Her voice is the whisper of God. The Bible says to man, "Thou shalt surely die." Nature echoes "surely die." On every page of nature's volume there is death. The grassy plain and flowery meadow only echo the Savior's words, "tomorrow we are cast into the oven." All flesh is but grass.

Dear ones in the Gospel:

And that means a goodly number when they are all counted.

O, how grand it will be when the children all come gathering home some bright, beautiful morning, with the glorious sun shining, the birds of paradise warbling their happy notes as they flit from tree to tree, in the lovely garden of God, and see on yonder bank sitting beneath the lovely tree of life, near the sparkling waters issuing out from underneath the throne is our Elder Brother, and gathered close within his arms, with happy face resting upon his bosom is some dear child of his whose mortal life had been so weary, others pressing up to gaze within those love-lit eyes, to hear his messages of love unspeakable and full, yes, full of glory. We can gather just a faint prospect of it all, this Thanksgiving Eve—as we sit by our own fireside, after a stormy day of rain and snow outside. How sweet are these hours when we can talk, and read, write and rest at home while waiting for God's appointed time to again begin our work.

Since coming from Ill., the Elder has been quite poorly, and the last week has been tussling with LaGrippe and rheumatism, two very unwelcome visitors, but he is entertaining them with all the patience imaginable, and I am glad to say he is improving, and we hope (D. V.) to be able soon to be about our Master's business.

We were very sorry indeed to have to leave our work in Ill.,—for the interest was good, audiences good, and good brethren to cheer us in our labors. How strange it is, the strong attachments and brotherly love that springs up even in a day between those of like precious faith. When we find one earnestly contending for the same thing we are, we are drawn to them, and such we found in Ill., earnest, faithful, liberal, remembering their servants in the Gospel were human and needed not only their love and sympathies, but the workman's hire, and so gave liberally for that object. May God bless you all with all needed blessings, and may the God of all truth keep us all till he comes again.

Your Sister in Christ.

Mary A. Woodward.

P. S. Perhaps the most of the brethren know why we came home, on account of Mother Woodward's sickness. We are glad to say, she is again as well as usual, and although she is in her 87th year, her mind is strong, and her greatest delight is in reading The Restitution, Totten, and her Bible, the latter she has read for several years. She has read the Old Testament through three times, the New five or six times, and the Psalms and Prophets several times besides. She enjoys life extremely well, and hopes to live until the Lord comes.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

It must be evident to any candid mind that the story of the rich man and Lazarus is a parable. The style of language employed, and the fact of its immediately following several other undoubted parables, are sufficient to dispose of the belief that it is a literal statement of fact, and also to establish that the teaching is unquestionably parabol . A close examination of the parable must show any one, whose aim is truth, that if there is to be any support found for the popular belief in heaven and hell, search must be made elsewhere than in this portion of Scripture. Is it in keeping with the popular belief that those in the "torments of hell" can see and recognize the righteous in their enjoyment of heaven? That the righteous can see the wicked in their suffering; that their respective places of abode are in such close proximity that they can converse with each other? Is that like a reasonable, not to say attractive, idea of the state of the redeemed? Could there be perfect happiness there if by looking across "a great gulf" they could see in torments their more unfortunate kinsmen? Even hear their piteous cries and yet have no heart to pity and no arm to help them in their agony and distress? Other questions might be raised, but even these show how untenable this parable is as proof of the popular theory.

The question still remains, what did the Lord mean by the use of this parable? Why should he employ this style of language? Why should he speak of Abraham's bosom? Of Lazarus being carried there after his death? Of the rich man also dying, but instead of going to Abraham's bosom being consigned to the hades where he endured torments? The only explanation, which seems at all feasible, is that this was the belief of the Pharisees. Robinson in his Greek and English Lexicon, says, regarding Hades: "The Hebrew Sheol signified the under world, and was held to be a vast subterranean place, full of thickest darkness, where dwelt the shades of the dead; but no distinction of place is indicated in the Sheol of the Old Testament between the righteous and the wicked. For the Hebrew Sheol, the LXX. have almost everywhere put Hades and in accordance with this usage, the idea of Sheol is found among the later Jews more developed and assimilated to the Greek Hades. The souls of the righteous and the wicked were held to be separated; the former inhabiting a region of the blessed, the inferior Paradise, or Eden of the Rabbis; while lower down was the abyss called Gehenna or Tartarus, in which the souls of the wicked are in torment."

By this parable the Lord took the Pharisees on their own ground, reasoned with them from their own standpoint, and from these effectively established the position he while at the same time claimed, he exposed them before the people—showing that instead of serving God they were base hypocrites serving themselves, whited sepulchres which appear beautiful on the outside but are within full of dead men's bones and rottenness. The moral of the story is found in the closing words, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." The Pharisees professed to "hear" and have respect for Moses, but it was a mere lip profession. If it had been genuine they would have been able to identify Jesus of Nazareth with the One foretold by Moses. "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of Me. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, Moses, in whom you trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me: for he wrote of Me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" John vi. 39, 45-47.

The Lord by this parable showed the Pharisees their real position, that although they sat in Moses's seat, were clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, yet they were to be less than the common people whom they despised, less even than the beggars who sat at their gates, who were fed by the crumbs which fell from their tables, and whose sores were licked by the dogs that so commonly prowl about the streets of eastern cities.

Some may, however, think that by this admission we admit too much. Well, we simply say we have no theory to uphold, it is entirely a question of what is the truth. But how far does our admission carry us? Does it necessitate us to believe that the Lord took the same view of hades as that held by his religious contemporaries who had become corrupted by Grecian mythology? Certainly not. But then some may say the Lord would never have spoken this parable unless he believed hades was the place these Pharisees believed it to be; and they may think the parable is misleading unless he held the view of hades as the Pharisees. Not so. The Pharisees said of Jesus, "This fellow doth not cast out the devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils." Did he say to them in reply "you are under a delusion, there is no such being as Beelzebub, and therefore it cannot be by his power that I cast out devils!" No, he simply replied to them as if Beelzebub actually existed, and put them to shame by saying, "If Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself: how shall then his kingdom stand? And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges." Matt. xii. 26, 27. Yet surely the Lord's use of the name Beelzebub did not commit him to the belief of the Pharisees any more than our use of "lunatic" (from lunar the moon) commits us to the belief—at one time held—that insanity is caused by the influence of the moon. Take another example, the parable of the ten pieces of money. Luke xix. One servant is therein represented as coming to the nobleman, saying, "Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin: for I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow." Is that true of the Lord? No, it is absolutely false; we know instead of being austere, he is gentle, kind, and merciful, and never expects grain where seed is not sown. Yet the parable is the Lord's. He used the words ascribed to the slothful servant, but does he thereby mislead? Only those who are wilfully blind will be mislead? He expresses the state of mind of a careless slothful servant who failed to use the money committed to his care. When not strained there is a forcible lesson conveyed by the parable as shown by what follows: "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow: Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have received mine own with interest." The wicked servant is thus condemned out of his own mouth. In like manner, the Lord, by the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, in which he embodied the foolishness of Greeks engrafted on Jewish belief, completely confounded those religious teachers who had made void the Word of God by their traditions.

Why should men bolster up untenable theories by straining language, or by pushing parables to extreme absurdities? If such a momentous question as that of torments for the wicked in hell can only be found in parabolic language, is it wise to tenaciously cling to it when it is as clear as day that the whole teaching of Scripture is against it, and it is utterly inconsistent with the principle which runs through Revelation from beginning to end, and which finds expression in those sublime words "God is love?"

The Parliament of Religions at Chicago.

We are glad that Dr. Pentecost has had the courage to call this absurd thing "an Oriental humbug." We have been astounded, all the year, at the names of prominent ministers of the gospel who have allowed themselves to be drawn into this disgraceful compromise. But God wisely overruled the proceedings so that the Parliament brought its own retribution. Some of the Buddhists from India and Japan took advantage of the opportunity so unexpectedly offered, to pour a whole battery of hot shot into the Christian camp, and to denounce Christian missions in the most bold and misrepresenting manner. They could not be blamed for it. When we go on the devil's ground, the best thing that can happen to us is to get a good thrashing. There is absolutely no common meeting-place between Christianity and the false religions of heathenism. They are wholly false and devilish. Christianity is wholly divine and requires no argument to establish its claims.

It speaks to man with the authority of God, and there is no pathway for us to take out to the plain of Ono, to confer with Sanballat, Tobiah and Geshem, the Arabian. Sanballat and his friends always get the best of Nehemiah when they meet him off his own ground. Such servants are not likely to be trusted long with the honor of Christ and the interest of his kingdom.—Christian Alliance Weekly.

Everywhere the seed of Jacob are coming more and more to the front; whether as objects of hate in some quarters, or of favor in others, they are now in evidence all the world over. Their widespread recognition by men proves that they are not forgotten before God. Amid all the varied phases of experience through which they are led, they are still "beloved for the fathers' sakes." "God has not cast away his people whom he foreknew." All the changes and turmoils of their course are under Divine control, and inevitably tend to their ere-long restoration to the land, and reconciliation to God. The Lord hasten it in his time, for "if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?"—The London Christian.

REMEMBER the suggestion of Brother Dwiggins in our last week's paper. Let this be a genuine "love-feast," with no one left out. Send in your letters in time.

WE deem it best for the discussion that has been published in our paper for some time past, to rest a few weeks, till after the Holidays. We want the space to be taken up by letters from the brethren and sisters, so will ask the forbearance of our contributors for this short time.

IT is enough to believe what is written.

Paul says we are renewed by knowledge, and alienated from the life of God through ignorance.

KING Humbert of Italy is said to be so very unpopular with his people on account of the Triple Alliance that he is contemplating an abdication.

LATE dispatches from Europe say that the Czar of Russia is stealthily preparing to seize Constantinople, but will have to fight Austria and Germany, while France will come to her assistance and England is strengthening its navy.

THE Truth creates sides. The for it side and the against it side; between these two sides there is no neutral ground. "He that is not for me is against me," saith Jesus. Those who are of the truth cannot encamp with the enemy and associate with them.

AN Arab proverb says: By six qualities may a fool be known—Anger without cause, speech without profit, change without motive, inquiry without an object, putting trust in a stranger, and wanting capacity to discriminate between friend and foe."

WE are glad to inform our readers that our columns for some time to come will be enriched with notes from the Scrap-book of our venerable and highly esteemed Brother J. C. Woodruff, of New Jersey, whose pen has long been used in defence of Gospel Truth.

Father Perrone says the Priest is God in Jesus Christ when he teaches, also when he binds and loosens the consciences of men; and also when he transmits the invisible grace in the external rite of the sacrament. The priest is God and man. Oh!

THE Spirit in Psalm cxii. 4 says, "Unto the upright there ariseth light in darkness." From this it would seem that there is a connection between integrity of purpose and clearness of perception—that strict conformity to right is generally followed by a discernment of what is true.

[illegible] partial excavations of [illegible] near the Euphrates a coin was found on which was engraved three figures of men in a burning furnace. A gigantic idol is placed opposite the furnace and two or three people paying homage to it. This, doubtless points back to Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, and is another testimony to the truth of the Bible narrative.

DR. SPRECHER, a Presbyterian Minister of Cleveland who created quite a stir by assuming championship of Higher Criticism in this city was handled pretty roughly in several churches last Sunday for asserting that if Jesus Christ were to come amongst them he doubted if he could unite with any of them as he would have to subscribe to the Creeds or be cast out as a heretic, or to that effect.

DEVOUT but troubled is expressive of vast numbers in these days. They desire to have faith but are unable to exercise it because they see nothing tangible to lay hold of. Theology bewilders them; revivalistic extravagance outrages them; atheism revolts them, and science chills them. The Gospel of Christ is able to help them out of all their difficulties if they but realized it.

QUESTION—Can one truly believe who has never been made sensible and convinced of unbelief.

LET one and all get ready for the feast of love proposed by Bro. Dwiggins. Like David tell what the Lord has done for your souls, and of the sustaining power of the Truth when believed and obeyed, and of the strength of the anchor which enters within the vail and how faith takes hold of God's strength and lifts you above clouds and storms, above enemies, above doubts, and arms you with divine strength, an irresistible power.—Yes; tell us how the Father's Word answers all objections for you and solves all difficulties in your chart, your guide, your passport, your guarantee, your assurance, your song.

The Reviewer Reviewed.

No. 5.

In resuming our review, we first notice the words "Having shown that Christ was One with the Father and that he is called Lord and God, and we are commanded to worship him." Christ himself showed that; but does it say he was One with the Father in a pre-existent state? Reviewer showed his opinion of that oneness and it should be rejected because out of harmony with Jesus explanation of it. We call for PROOF that in a pre-existent state he was called Lord and God and was worshipped and then we will believe it.

Phil. ii. 6 is next referred to. "Who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God." The Diaglott and all other helpful translations are set aside and the common version is held to be just right because it seems to make the Son equal to the Father. We propose now to give the origin and progress of this doctrine, as perhaps some may not have the documents we are about to quote. Our readers need not be told that the Gospel had been adulterated with both Judaism and Paganism even in apostolic times, some even holding that Christ did not come in the flesh 1 John iv. 1-3, and its progress can be traced in the 2nd and 3rd of Rev. And its downward tendency is further marked by what is called "The Apostle's Creed" the adoption of which was a Saving test, although not very wide of the truth; it holds one God the Father Almighty the maker of heaven and earth and Jesus Christ his only Son who was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, etc. etc. Just One God.

But the creed of the Council of Nice held in 325 starts out the same. "I believe in one God the Father Almighty maker of heaven and earth, and all things visible and invisible, and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten of God; [mark the departure here] begotten of his Father before all Worlds, God of God, light of light. Very God of Very God; begotten not made, who for us men, and for our salvation came down from heaven and was incarnated by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man and was crucified," etc. Here are two Gods fairly and squarely set before us, and the next paragraph says, "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of life, who proceeds from both Father and Son, who with the Father and the Son together is worshipped and glorified, who spake by the prophets."

The above prepares the way for the next step downward, we mean by installing still another to equal God—making three in all.

The Athanasius creed is as follows: "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he should hold the Catholic Faith, which except every one do keep whole and undefiled without doubt he shall perish everlastingly. And the Catholic faith is this, that we worship One God in Trinity and Trinity in Unity, neither confounding the person nor dividing the substance. For there is one person, of the Father, another person of the Son, and another person of the Holy Ghost. But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one; the glory equal, the majesty co-eternal. Such is the Father, such is the Son, and such is the Holy Ghost. The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate, and the Holy Ghost uncreate. The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible, and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible. The Father eternal, the Son eternal, and the Holy Ghost eternal and yet there are not three eternals, but one eternal. Also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreates but one uncreate, and one incomprehensible. So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son is Almighty, and the Holy Ghost Almighty, and yet there are not three Almighties but one Almighty. So the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God, and yet there are not three Gods but one God. So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son is Lord, and the Holy Ghost is Lord and yet there are not three Lords but one Lord. For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity to acknowledge every person by Himself to be God and Lord, so we are forbidden by the Catholic religion to say there be three Gods or three Lords. The Father is made of none, neither created nor begotten. The Son is of the Father alone, not made nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding, so there is one Father not three Fathers, one Son, not three Sons, one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts. And in this Trinity none is afore or after the another, but the whole three persons are coeternal together and co-equal. So that in all things as is aforesaid, the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped. He, therefore that will be saved must thus think of the Trinity."!!

We ask our readers if it is any wonder that the Spirit anticipating this awful apostasy, branded it as a "mystery of iniquity," and "Mystery Babylon," that is, a confusing mystery? In all the realms of literature secular or religious, is there anything so confusing as the document just quoted? And singular enough, all who teach anything akin to this, unwittingly appropriate this opprobrious epithet! We never yet knew a teacher of this so-called Trinity in Unity, who encouraged a Scriptural investigation of it; they cannot stand the light. With long-drawn faces and uplifted hands they invest the "Holy Trinity" with such an awful sublimity that none but the clergy dare approach it. The Creed does not condescend to a single quotation from God's Book. It robs the province of the Bible and makes the Catholic Church the sole authority in matters of faith and practice. Sublime indeed! Three times one are are, three? oh, no: three times one are ONE!!!

But in the light of Divine truth, reason and common sense, of what does the INIQUITY OF THE SYSTEM CONSIST? We have seen that it commenced in apostolic times by denying that Christ came in the flesh; this implied that he came in Spirit; and the real Christ coming in Spirit and living in a body born of Mary proves that all such had imbibed the Platonic Philosophy of the immortality of the soul, that sprang out of the lie of the Serpent, "Thou shalt not surely die." Therefore as man did not surely die, it was not necessary for the real Son of God—the Savior of the World to really die for mankind: and man being by nature immortal, of course they were not indebted to Christ for it,—did not have to seek for it; and we see by the full-grown—ripe apostasy that salvation by grace was lost sight of and works and pennances take its place; and the dual nature led them to add hosts of advocates with the Father from among the Ghosts of dead ones canonized. From this aspect we see plainly what an iniquitous system—God-dishonoring, Gospel-nullifying, and soul-destroying system it is.

But this is a small thing in comparison with the virtual dethronement of the Eternal God and compelling him to share his honor and power and glory with two others of their own invention, in the face of the fact that there are 17 passages in the New Testament where the Father is styled One or Only God, and nearly 200 in which he is styled God absolutely; while there is not one in which the Son is so called; and 90 passages in which all prayer and praises are directed to God through Christ; and out of 1300 passages where the word God is mentioned, not one implies plurality of persons; and over 800 passages where Jesus Christ is declared by implication to be subordinate to the Father. The Father is called Jehovah six thousand eight hundred and twelve times and if any other person is ever called Jehovah without some qualification we do not know where or when. The inevitable conclusion is, that all this is descriptive of the Serpent's Seed. It has a numerous progeny, and the testimony of a few of them will establish their relationship: Dr. Adam Clark in his comments on 2 Samuel xxi. 10 says:—"God will not have man's blood for sacrifice no more than he will swine's blood." This is stated as a principle in the economy of God. What a statement to use in view of the fact that it was the blood of the Man Christ Jesus that was shed for many for remission of sins!!

One of the same church with Dr Adam Clark the Rev. C. L. Brown of the Eastern Genesee Conference, of the M. E. Church, in a work sold by the M. E. Book Concern, says: "He is every way equal to God."

"The Rev. J. M. Steel of the Methodist Church says of the words: "I have power to lay down my life," the life of the perfect human nature, which was united and deified with the Deity—a union most mysterious to the world and ever to remain so. The human nature did die; and if Jesus received his power he could not trust him."

Henry Ward Beecher said: "God died as Man dies.'

Albert Barnes says: "The work of creation is uniformly ascribed to the Holy Trinity." He also says: "what we have previously shown from Gibbons History, that the followers of Plato among the Greeks spoke of the Logos, or word as of the second person of the Trinity long before John wrote his Gospel." This is the fountain head, observe. Trinity is sublimated Platonism.

Storr thinks that in consequence of the union of the Man Jesus with the Logos, the Man is God. p. 420.

Spurgeon says, "A Gospel without a Trinity! It is a pyramid built upon its apex. A gospel without the Trinity is a rope of sand that cannot hold together. A gospel without the Trinity, then, indeed, Satan can overturn it. But give me a gospel with the Trinity, and the might of hell cannot prevail against it." No man can any more overthrow it than a bubble could split a rock or a feather break in halves a mountain. Get the thought of the three persons and you have the marrow of Divinity. This is the Golden Key to the secrets of nature; this is the silken clue to the labyrinths of mystery, and he who understands this will soon understand as much as mortals can know.

This to us is most abominable doctrine:—Three persons and each separately considered is the very Eternal God, and yet there is but One God! Are they finite or infinite? If the latter then there are three infinite beings—an utter impossibility, besides being the extreme of absurdity. If finite there is no infinite God, for neither three nor all the finite beings in the universe could constitute an infinite being any more than a circle of ciphers reaching round the globe would make a unit. The Scriptures teach plainly, 1st, That there is "ONE God;" and 2nd., That God is ONE, and 3rd., That Christ is the Son of God; and that the Spirit proceeds from the Father.

This article is intended to prepare the way for an examination of Phil ii. 6.

A CARD from Bro. N. H. Geiselman dated Dec. 2, says, "I have just returned home after a 600 mile trip through the State of Florida. Preached 18 times, and five embraced the truth. Returning home I found little Coral very sick with typhoid fever. I am very uneasy about her, as she is very bad. Remember us in your prayers. I should have been pleased to meet with you all at the conference, but could not. However I thought of you often."

THE matter contained in the Scriptures demonstrates its heavenly origin,—it being such that it cannot be the product of a creature.

"WE must take nothing for granted. Man needs to be reminded of everything, for he soon forgets everything."

Russia's Demand on Austria.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—The announcement through press dispatches from Vienna that the Russian government has declared it imperative that the Killa arm of the Danube shall be made navigable has served to attract renewed attention of the serious situation of affairs in Europe. The Globe says Russia's demand that the Killa mouth of the Danube be made navigable is the most alarming of the ugly portents of trouble so numerous of late. Reference is also made to the hostile attitude of Russia toward India.

Poultney Bigelow, who has just returned to London after a stay of several months in Germany, has written the following on the situation in Europe.

Russia wants Constantinople and is preparing to take it. Russia cannot succeed in accomplishing this desire without first fighting Austria. She cannot fight Austria without fighting Germany at the same time. Russia wants the mouth of the Danube—a desire as strange as if France should wish to reoccupy Louisiana. Russia therefore has one enemy particularly in mind—that is Germany—and in this hatred of Germany was born the comical friendship between Russia and France, for France means to get back Alsace-Lorraine. The Russian government has now massed all its active army west of Moscow and the great bulk in Poland. It is persecuting the Germans and Lutheran religion in the Baltic provinces, and is fanning rather than allaying the prevailing hatred of Germany.

Russia has been observing great secrecy of late with regard to movements on her railways. Sometimes several days have passed when all traffic on the roads has been stopped save that of the government. Oddly enough the money she has been spending upon forts and stores has nearly all been expended against the German frontier. She knows that she must settle with Germany before she can get the Bosphorus.

The German Emperor is awake and knows what is passing about him but he knows also that he has much to lose and little to gain by a successful campaign. The Kaiser knows that in a war with Russia he will be fighting the battle of all civilized countries against a power representing commercial stagnation, political barbarism, and religious intolerance.

Louis Kossuth in his Old Age.

The fourth volume of the memoirs of Louis Kossuth has just been published in Buda-Pesth, and is said to be full of internal evidences of the isolation in which the old patriot now lives. It is plain that in dealing with questions of the day he has depended for his facts upon the most sensational French and Italian newspapers, and consequently has been betrayed into many unfortunate indiscretions. As he is almost blind, he has to rely upon a reader, and in this way he has been made a victim of misplaced confidence. When, however, he speaks from his own personal knowledge he proves that his intellect is still vigorous and his comments are interesting.

M. Kossuth discusses the two leagues, the Triple Alliance, and the more recent Franco-Russian union. Both of them are, in his opinion, unnatural and dangerous to the peace of the world. He approves unconditionally of the alliance between Germany and Austria-Hungary, but considers that the adhesion of Italy alone drove France and Russia into each other's arms, with the result that Europe will some day be plunged knee-deep in blood. He quotes a speech of Cavour, in which the remark occurs that for the Italians to oppose France would be such monstrous ingratitude that the repentance of centuries could not wash away the stain. M. Kossuth believes in the proximity of a great European war, on the principle that there is no case in history when the longing for peace has prevented any great power from going to war as soon as its interests have demanded and its strength allowed it.

Conference Report.

The conference convened according to call, at Ashton, the third Sunday in Oct., the attendance of brethren was small, but the interest manifested was good.

There was no business transacted owing to the small attendance.

The preaching brethren present were, T. E. Adams, H. N. Williams and S. C. Oliver.

The brethren thought the interest manifested would justify of a week or more meeting in November which we have had. The preaching brethren present being, S. L. Miller, S. C. Oliver, H. N. Williams, and T. E. Adams. We had a good meeting. Three young ladies were brave enough to manifest their faith by having the ice broken and going down into the water, and obeying the Savior's command. Their names are Miss Sarah Schapelle, Miss Della Miller, daughter of Bro. S. L. Miller, and Ella Reed, daughter of Bro. [illegible] Reed.

Now brethren, let us try and attend our conference meetings. Let us not make the Lord's business a secondary matter. Let us be up and doing while it is day, for the appearing of the Master is near at hand. Let us be found at the post of duty that we may be counted worthy of a crown.

In hope,
E. F. RANDOLPH, Sec.

Dear Restitution:

Well do I remember the precious words of Brothers Reed, Lyon, Chase, and Allen B. Magruder. I was baptized by Bro. Chase 17 years ago. I have, in my weakness been fighting the good fight of faith ever since, with here and there a weak spot in my work, trying to work and preach, but I have given up all and am giving my entire time to my Master's service.

I came to Dixon on the 5th of September, and preached four discourses in the Universalist Church, having to pay $1.00 a night for the use of it. From there I went to Lanark and preached four discourses, then to East Plum River, then to Union Church, and then to East Plum River. I attended conference and there met Brother and Sister Woodward of Michigan, who are workers that need not to be ashamed. They are able to rightly divide the Word, and my prayer is that their harvest may be Life Everlasting in the Kingdom of God. The conference was profitable to all.

From here I went to Rockford, and thence to Yankee Hollow.

I have baptized eight persons into the faith, since coming to Lanark, and I feel confident much good can be accomplished for, and in the name of the Master.

I shall report my work at each appointment hereafter, so the brethren can know of my work, and whereabouts.

Yours in the faith and hope of the coming of the Lord, to be glorified in his saints. Your Brother,
D. M. HUBLER.

Dear Restitution:

Again I wish a little space to report our meeting held at Mount Moriah, Clark Co., Ill.

My father left our home the 10th of Nov., and my husband and I followed on the 18th, and remained over Sunday. We had hoped to see some additions to the church but there were not; we hope for the best all the time. In these perilous times we must work and endeavor to save all we can, for the time seems short in which to work.

We parted on Monday, Father going to his home, and we to ours.

Our prayers go up to-night for my dear father, who I presume is laboring for the church at Argos, Ind., where he expected to go last Thursday. I think there never was a time when preaching was more needed than at the present time. There is work for us all to do.

Bro. Rogers was also present one week at the meeting and very much desired to remain until its close, but could not for he felt uneasy about his youngest child, it not being well when he left home.

I enjoyed these meetings that I have attended this fall so much, for it is so seldom I hear the truth preached. I do not go to sectarian meetings for there is no food there for those who understand the Word of God.

I love so well to read the letters from dear ones of like precious faith. There is sometimes a name that is familiar to me.

I pray that we may meet all the loved ones in the Kingdom, where we will worship the King forevermore. Your Sister in the one faith.

AZORAH M SCROGGS.

Editor Restitution.

Your notice came to hand last winter and I was unable to respond. In the first place I got hurt, nearly killed, and in the next place I could not raise 3 cents to prepay a letter to you.

I am now able to be about again but cannot work but a little every day. I am not able at present to pay my indebtedness, but hope to some time in the future.

The weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION have come to an end, and it seems like parting with an old familiar friend. All through my sickness I re-read the old papers, 2 and 3 years old, and they have been a comfort to me. I have a long file of them, and the matter is just as good as the day they came from the press. It will take me a long time to read it all through.

I happened to open a paper a few days ago and found the notice, a small slip of dark paper with kind, Christian sentences on it, and I thought I must write you that you may know the reasons why I did not answer the notice. I shall always pray for THE RESTITUTION, and its officers. It is the best paper published, and the lovers of truth know it. I am nearing my three score years and ten, and cannot expect to abide much longer.

Yours expecting the kingdom.

S——

[Here is another case, brethren and sisters. Who will be the one to send THE RESTITUTION to this old brother. We will give his address to the one paying for him.—ED.]

Sow seed. Send THE RESTITUTION to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

The Pansy

Announces many new and important features. A special department, "Our Christian Endeavor Bulletin," will be devoted to the work of the Christian Endeavor Society. The editor, Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy), has long been one of the prime movers in Christian Endeavor work. Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin, D. D., contributes in November an article on "The Immediate Future of Christian Endeavor." To be followed by helpful and progressive papers from Christian Endeavor specialists. Other departments of the magazine are broadened and enlarged. One is the department of "Athletics," and "Indoor Games in the Family Circle." Mr. A Alonzo Stagg, the famous Yale pitcher, will contribute an early paper, to be followed by other experts. Pansy's new and fascinating serial, Vira's Motto, will be illustrated by H. P. Barnes. Margaret Sidney's Golden Discovery Papers will have important subjects. The Pansy Reading Circle is to take up Greek history this year. Elizabeth Abbot will prepare interesting papers. An important new feature will be "Daily Thoughts," comprising daily readings for Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday-schools. The Missionary and Foreign fields of labor will have special departments. Baby's Corner will be continued. So will the stories about animals, pets, etc. The Pansy is $1.00 a year. A free subscription will be presented to any one sending direct to the publishers two new subscriptions, with $2.00 for the same. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass.

Santa Claus has induced the Nickel Plate Road to sell Excursion tickets at very low rates during the Holidays.

Poetry.

"When I have Time."

When I have time, so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are now crowded down with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair—
When I have time!

When I have time, the friend I love so well
Shall know no more these weary, toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise—
When I have time!

When you have time! The friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of your intent,
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with joy and sweet content—
When you had time.

Now is the time! Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words of cheer
To those around, whose lives are now so drear;
They may not need you in the coming year;
Now is the time.

The Immortal Book.

No. 4.

"My heart standeth in awe of thy Word. I rejoice at thy Word, as one that findeth great spoil." Psa. cxix. 161, 162.

In article No. 3. (misprinted No. 2.) I made mention of a red thread which passed through every foot of rope belonging to the British navy, and made comparison to a cord—a golden cord which passes through every book of this wonderful library, which finally connects with the beautiful city of gold. This precious cord is God's Anointed One, represented by the various names and titles ascribed to this marvelous Personage. Let us pass along this precious line until we reach Isa. liii., and at that point we will meet with a cluster of gems most precious. Many hundreds of years before the Blessed One came into existence, Isaiah wrote about him, and gave an accurate account of the grand and noble life he would lead, and describes him as being very humble, lowly and meek, and on this account he would be "despised and rejected of men," and they will "esteem him not," and will cause him much "sorrow," and "grief," and will even "hide" their "faces from him," and yet for all this he will unselfishly carry their "sorrows" and "griefs," and even be "wounded" for their "transgressions," even though they "like sheep have gone astray." He will even submit to cruel "stripes" that they might be "healed." He will be "oppressed" and "afflicted" by them and yet he will suffer in solemn silence, and will not open "his mouth" to revile them, or refute false accusations. They will cause him to be made a prisoner, and he will be taken from "prison and from judgment," and be "cut off out of the land of the living," on the cruel cross, and he will make "his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death," and yet "he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth." "He hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors, and he shall bear the sins of many and made intercession for the transgressors"—"Father forgive them they know not what they do." Yet, for all this noble life of unselfishness says the prophet, "he was cut off out of the land of the living." Yet "he shall prolong his days, (be raised from the dead) and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands," when he shall reign in glory as earth's Universal Monarch.

How is it possible that Isaiah the prophet, knew hundreds of years in advance of these things becoming historic facts, that this wonderful chain of events would certainly happen? Had he foresight greater than his fellows? Certainly not. It is not thus possible for the human mind unaided to penetrate futurity and relate in minute detail, yes, even with the preciseness of historic fact. It speaks of a power greater than man's.

The testimony of another book in this marvelous library is not less explicit, and history furnishes positive evidence also, that it existed many hundreds of years prior to the existence of the ever blessed Son of God. From this book I quote as follows:

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying, "He trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him." "They part my garments among them and cast lots for my vesture." "The assembly of the wicked have enclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet."

That the above are historic facts is amply confirmed not only by sacred historians in this Blessed Book but outside of it, both from friends and enemies.

I will now add a few historic confirmations from those who are not Christians. Some of whom hated both Christ and the Bible, and knowingly would not do a thing to confirm the record, but God has used their utterances to confirm it in these last days when scoffers should arise and do their best to throw discredit upon the sacred Word.

THE TESTIMONY OF ENEMIES TO CHRISTIANITY.

In the Roman historian, Tacitus, who flourished in the reign of Trajan, about the year 110, we have an unequivocal testimony to the existence and death of Christ, of the period at which his death occurred, and the name of his judge, all of which is in harmony with the New Testament account. In the fifteenth book of his Annals, writing the history of Nero, speaking of the Christians, A. D. 64, he says: "The author or originator of that (sect or) name was Christus, who in the reign of Tiberius was put to death by the procurator, Pontius Pilate."

Tacitus bears further testimony. He says: "The author of that sect or name was Christus, who in the reign of Tiberius, was punished with death by the Procurator Pontius Pilate. This pestilent superstition, though thus checked for awhile, broke out afresh, not only in Judea, where the evil first originated, but even in the city of Rome."

Even Gibbon, that inveterate opponent to the Bible says: "The most skeptical criticism is obliged to respect the truth of this extraordinary fact," the persecution of the Christians under Nero, "and the integrity of this celebrated passage of Tacitus."

Lucian, a contemporary of Celsus, and a bitter enemy of Christianity, speaking of Peregrinus, who was then imprisoned as a Christian, says: "The genuine Christians, from many cities of Asia, to relieve, encourage, and comfort him. For it is incredible what expedition they use when any of their friends are known to be in trouble; they spare nothing on such occasions. For these poor creatures are firmly persuaded that they shall one day enjoy immortal life; therefore they despise death, and even surrender themselves to suffering and punishment. And besides, their first lawgiver has taught them that they are all brethren, when once they have turned and renounced the gods of the Greeks, and worship that Master of theirs who was crucified, and engaged to live according to his laws, they have a sovereign contempt for all things of this world, looking upon them as common, and trusting one another with them."

Celsus, a very bitter antagonist, says the founder of the Christian religion lived but a few years before his time. He speaks of Jesus being born of a Virgin, worshipped by the magi, his flight into Egypt, the slaughter of the babes in Bethlehem, baptism of Christ by John, his death, his resurrection, and all the circumstances connected with his crucifixion. He does not dispute the miracles he performed, but says he did them by the power of the magic art he learned in Egypt. If these things had not become historic facts, they would not be matters of current report, to be either accepted, rejected, or opposed by any one.

"Josephus, although not either a professed Christian, nor enemy, yet as an early historian bears remarkable testimony; he says: "Now there was, about this time, Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he performed many wonderful works. He was the teacher of such men as received the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him many of the Jews, and also many of the Gentiles. This was the Christ. And when Pilate, at the instigation of the principal men among us, had condemned him to the cross, those who had loved him from the first did not cease to adhere to him; for he appeared to them alive again on the third day; the divine prophets having foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe (or sect) of Christians, so named from him, subsists to this time."

The above quotation from Josephus, stings the infidel to the core, and they labor hard to show that Josephus never wrote it, but for all that, we have the clearest evidence of its being genuine and authentic, and can be confidently relied upon.

In some future article I may cite more of this class of evidence, but will now quote some of

THE BLOOD SEALED TESTIMONY OF CHRISTIANS.

One point in the epistle of Ignatius to the church at Smyrna, which is still extant, is worthy of notice. He mentions the fact that the apostles ate and drank with Jesus after his resurrection, and adds: "They believed, being convinced both by his flesh and spirit. For this cause they despised death, and were found to be above it."

Ignatius, be it remembered, was acquainted with Paul and Peter, and was chosen bishop of Antioch in the year 70. His opportunities for ascertaining the truth cannot be doubted, and his estimate of the credibility of the facts may be judged from his conduct when called on to face imprisonment and death, or renounce his belief: "I thank thee, O Lord, that thou hast condescended to honor me with thy love, and hast thought me worthy, with thy apostle Paul, to be bound in iron chains."

And in a letter to Rome, before his martyrdom, he writes: "Let fire and the cross, let the companies of wild beasts, let breaking of bones and tearing of members, let the shattering in pieces of the whole body, and all the wicked torments of the devil come upon me, only let me enjoy Jesus Christ. All the ends of the earth and the kingdoms of it will profit me nothing. I would rather die for Jesus Christ than rule the utmost ends of the earth. Him I seek who died for us; Him I desire who rose again for us."

Justin Martyr, one of the most learned fathers of the second century, was converted from heathenism in the year 133. His sincerity, learning, and antiquity, constitute him a witness of the highest importance. He says: "Remember that we were not born Christians, but were made such. We were infidels like you, and studied with you at Athens and elsewhere. Indeed, we were not so foolish as to believe without having most seriously examined the truth of the Gospel and Christian faith, because by embracing Christianity we were exposed to lose everything, even our very lives."

Here we find that some of these early Christians subjected the truth of the Gospels (in which the prophecies of Isaiah and David are recorded as being fulfilled) to close examination before accepting them, and well they might, when they were liable to loose both property and life by accepting them. Under such conditions it is not at all probable that they would accept the Gospels and the Christian faith without evidence strong enough to amount almost to being an eye-witness of the fact. It amounts to almost this, when some of them had both seen and heard the apostles Peter, Paul and John:

Still earlier than Justin lived Papias, bishop of Hierapolis, in Asia (who was a hearer of the apostle John, and companion of the venerable Polycarp), who bears express testimony to the gospels of Matthew and Mark, has quoted the first Epistle of Peter, the first Epistle of John, and alludes to the Acts and Revelation.

Barnabas was a fellow-laborer with Paul, who wrote an epistle which is still extant, in which he cites passages from Matthew, with the words, "It is written," a formula employed by the Jews in quoting their sacred books.

Clement, another fellow-laborer with Paul addressed an epistle to the church at Corinth. It is spoken of by Irenæus, as follows: "Written by Clement, who had seen the blessed Apostles, and conversed with them, who had the preaching of the apostles still sounding in his ears, and their traditions before his eyes."

In this epistle are several distinct quotations from the gospels, Romans, Hebrews, First Corinthians. Clement died in the year 100.

The above are facts recorded in history, but condensed to save space. Praise the Lord for the marvelous evidences he has given us to strengthen our faith. "The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." Psa. cxix. 72.

What is Death?

If "death is the voice that Jesus sends to call us to his arms," is it not a friend, a blessing? and should we not look and long for it as a welcome visitor? But the Scriptures teach that death is an enemy, "even the last enemy that is to be destroyed." 1 Cor. xv. 26. If it be true that death is the "gate to glory" (as "orthodoxy" teaches), seeing the Scriptures teach that it is an enemy to be destroyed, does it not follow that when Christ destroys death he will destroy the "gate to glory?" If death be both the liberation of the immortal soul from this "mortal coil" and the "gate to endless joy," then are we not indebted to sin for our liberation and for the gate to endless joy, in view of the fact that the Scriptures teach that sin brought death into the world? Rom. v. 12.

Death, philologically, is "that state of being, animal or vegetable, but more particularly of an animal, in which there is total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions." - Webster.

Death, Scripturally, is that condition of being in which there is total cessation of life ("Thou shalt die and not live." Isa. xxxviii. 1), thought ("In that very day his thoughts perish" Psa. cxlvi. 3), in short, of all the vital functions ("The dead know not any thing." Eccl. ix. 5).

Theology teaches that "death is the gate to endless joy," and the Scriptures teach that the devil has the power of death. Heb. ii. 14. Now if both be true, then the devil has the power of the "gate to endless joy," which is too absurd to entertain for a moment. Which then shall we accept? "Let God be true though all men are liars." Why will the people be duped? and why will the clergy deceive by declaring that "death is the voice that Jesus sends to call us to his arms," when the Bible plainly speaks of death as an enemy which Christ came to abolish? 2 Tim. i. 10. Why will intelligent people believe that the dead are "not dead but gone before," which is a reechoing of the lie uttered by the serpent, ("Ye shall not surely die"), when the Bible declares that "we shall surely die" (Gen. ii. 17)? that "in death there is no remembrance" (Psa. vi. 5)? that when a man dies his "thoughts perish" (Psa. cxlvi. 4)? that "the dead know not any thing, but go down into silence" (Psa. cxv. 17)? Why, we ask, will the clergy continue to teach such things, if it be not that they have "made a covenant with death and entered into agreement with hell?" They have "made a covenant with death" to preach it as their best friend—one that will transmit them to "the courts where angels dwell;" and they have entered into agreement with hell (sheol), or the grave, to preach it as being satisfied with the body, while the soul is allowed to escape to realms of bliss.

Reader, shun these profane and vain babblings of so-called orthodoxy, and accept God's Word which, while it is in harmony with natural facts, treats death as the cessation of life, offers you a resurrection from the dead; while it teaches that man is mortal, (Job iv. 17), offers you immortality upon the condition that you "by a patient continuance in well doing seek for it." Rom. ii. 7. Of course, as long as you allow yourself to be deluded with the theory of the immortality of the soul you will not have any use for the gospel, which has "brought life and immortality to light" (2 Tim. ii. 10); neither will you be apt to seek for that which you believe you are in possession of. The traditions of the religious world say:

"I'll praise my maker with my breath,
And when my voice is lost in death
Praise shall my nobler powers employ."

But the Bible says: "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks" (Psa. vi. 5) that "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psa. cxv. 17). Tradition says: "What we do not know now we shall know when we die." But the Bible says: "The dead know not anything. * * * their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished," Eccl. ix. 5, 6. Tradition says when a man dies:

"Up to the courts where angels dwell
It mounts triumphant there;
Or devils plunge it down to hell, in infinite despair."

But the Bible says that when a man dies "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; and in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4.

Tradition says:

"A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify;
A never-dying soul to save
And fit it for the sky."

But the Bible, instead of saying the soul is "never-dying," says: "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. xviii. 4, 20); and instead of saying that the soul goes to the sky, it says: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." Psa. xlix. 15.

Tradition says that the dead are "not dead, but gone before;" but the Bible says of the faithful: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises" (Heb. xi. 13), and that if there is no resurrection of the dead, they "that are fallen asleep in Christ have perished." 1 Cor. xv. 18.

Tradition makes the Word of God of none effect. For if the wicked go to their punishment at death and the righteous go to their reward, what need would there be for a resurrection?

Tradition says men are recompensed at death; but the Bible says they shall be "recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Luke xiv. 14.

Death, then, is the cessation of life, resulting in dissolution; and resurrection is the re-formation of man and the renewing of life.

When we fully apprehend the real character of the punishment of the wicked, and their final destiny; when we fully realize the words of the Apostle that "The wages of sin is death,"—not Eternal Torments, then God's character shines out clearly as a God of mercy and love and compassion, though Just and Holy; and see a wisdom and beauty in the decree of the Almighty, that before was blinded by superstitious tradition. Why submit to the befogging theories and dogmas of popular teachers? God has given us a revelation of his own will and purpose, not to place on the book shelf, but to study! How can it be a "revelation" if he does not intend us to understand it? Those who tell you it is not to be understood, proclaim at once their own ignorance, and give the lie to God, who has said that "all that was written aforetime was written for our learning." The reading of it was suppressed for a long time, and men had to accept whatever a wily priesthood cared to impose upon them, and thus it is now that we have the remnants of Papal superstition interwoven with the truth, but now all who wish can read for themselves, which at one time was impossible. This is a great privilege, and those who do not make the best of it will have themselves to thank if they come short of God's salvation. It is not our object to detract in one iota from the severity of God's judgments and punishments of sin. God forbid! but rather to show that he, though "a consuming fire," will not find pleasure in the endless torment of the damned.

Items of Faith.

1. There is one God the Father, dwelling in heaven, the Creator and Sustainer of all things.

2. There is one Lord, the Lord Jesus Christ; Son of God by conception, and Son of Man by birth. In the days of his flesh he manifested the Father by the perfect character presented to the sons of men. He was obedient under trial; condemned sin's flesh in his death, and thus reconciled us to God in the body of his flesh. He is now a life-imparting Spirit.

3. The Spirit is the power of the Highest everywhere existent.

4. Salvation is a deliverance from death.

5. Man is mortal; in condemnation because of transgression.

6. Eternal life is promised conditionally to men.

7. The conditions of salvation are:—

(a) Belief in the revealed will of God.

(b) Obedience to his precepts.

8. Death is a cessation of being; resurrection is a resumption of being.

9. The just and unjust will appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, to render an account and receive a just recompense.

10. The righteous will receive immortality. (Unending perfection of being—eternal life.)

11. The wicked will be punished with everlasting destruction. (An unending cessation of being—the Second Death.)

12. Christ is now in the heavens, preparing abiding places for his people.

13. Christ will appear on the earth again. He will reward his servants; establish his Kingdom; rule the world in righteousness, and fill the earth with glory.

14. It is Christ's mission to obliterate all the imperfections now marring the works of God. This will be accomplished, and the devil will then be no more. Neither sin nor sinners will exist in any part of Christ's dominions. "He was manifested to destroy the devil and all his works."

15. The unseen state into which death resolves all men is the Hell of the Bible. (Hades—the unseen state—the grave. Gehenna, a locality outside Jerusalem, where punishment will be inflicted at the return of Christ.)

16. The Gospel comprises

(a) The things concerning the Kingdom of God.

(b) The things concerning the name of Jesus Christ.

17. The earth will abide for ever, and become the everlasting dwelling place of the redeemed.

18. There will be a personal reign of Christ on the earth for a thousand years.

19. Ultimately, sin in all its forms (the diabolos—devil) will be destroyed, and death be no more. The earth's population will consist of immortalized spirit-beings, in whom God will dwell, and thus "God shall be all and in all."

Please Read and Heed.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION know full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

THE RESTITUTION has been issued each time during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure, some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

An eminent clergyman who was much maligned in his day was asked why he did not contradict the false stories circulated about him. He replied: "Any man who would believe the stories, would not believe my denial."

We cannot prevent our thoughts coming any more than we can keep the birds from flying over our heads; but we can keep them from building nests in our hair.—Lorenzo Dow.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to Patrons of the Nickel Plate Road. Special Excursion dates Dec. 23-24-25-30-31 and Jan 1st, good returning until Jan. 2nd 94.

[illegible] is pouring down,
[illegible] Sunday morning.
[illegible] distant church bells from the town
Ring an unheeded warning.

I pause beside the study door,
Whence churchly sounds are stealing;
I look within. Upon the floor
I see the children kneeling.

They rise and sing. Then, silent, wait
While Jamie tells the story
Of Jacob's sons, the brothers' hate,
Their crime, and Joseph's glory.

"Now let us try," I hear him say,
"To always love each other;
And whether we're at work or play,
Be kind to one another."

Original.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 14.

1. And it came to pass when he had gone into the house of a certain one of the rulers of the Pharisees during a Sabbatic period to eat bread, and they were [illegible] watching him:

2. Lo, there was also a certain person with dropsy in his presence.

3. And Jesus answered and spake unto those versed in the law and unto the Pharisees saying, Is it proper to heal during the the sabbatic-period or not?

4. And they were silent, and laying hold of him he healed him, and released him:

5. And answered and said unto him, whose son of yours or whose ass, should he fall into a well would one not drag up straightway on a day of the sabbatic-rites?

6. And they were not strong enough to give an answer to these things.

7. And he spake a parable unto those who had been invited calling attention to how they were accustomed to choose out the chief couches, saying unto them.

8. Whenever thou hast been invited to nuptial-ceremonies, do not recline on the chief-couch, lest perchance a more honourable person than thou, may have been invited by him.

9. And the one who invited thee and him shall have come and say, give place to this one; and then with shame thou shalt begin to take (lit. hold down) the last place.

10. But whenever thou hast been invited, go thy way and recline in the place most remote, that when the one who hath invited thee shall have come, he may say unto thee, friend, come up higher. Then will there be glory for thee in the sight of all those reclining along with thee.

11. Because every one who exalteth himself will have been humbled; and the one who humbleth himself will have been exalted.

12. And he said unto the one who had invited him, whenever thou makest a lunch or a supper, do not invite thy friends nor thy brothers, nor thy kindred nor thy neighbors nor the rich, lest they perchance invite thee in return, and thou become repaid.

13. But whenever thou makest a reception invite beggars, the inexperienced, the maimed, the blind.

14. And thou wilt (shalt C. V.) be blessed happy, because they have nothing with which to repay thee. It will have been repaid thee though in the resurrection of the justified (ones).

15. And when a certain one of those who were reclining along with him heard this he said unto him, blessed happy is he who shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

16. And he said unto him; a certain man made a great supper and invited many.

17. And he sent his bond-servant at the hour of the supper to say to those who had been invited, come, because all things are ready.

18. And they all began with one accord to excuse themselves, the first said unto him, I have purchased a field and I have to go out and see it. I request thee to have me excused.

19. And another said, I have purchased 5 yokes of cattle and I am going my way to test their values. I request thee to have me excused.

20. And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I am unable to go.

21. And the bond-servant arrived and told these things to his lord. Then the master of the house was wrathful and said unto his bond-servant, go out quickly into the public-squares and narrow streets of the city and lead in here the beggars and inexperienced and the blind and the maimed.

22. And the bond-servant said, lord what thou didst direct hath occurred, and still there is room (lit. place).

23. And the lord said unto the bond-servant, go out into the highways and hedges, and compel to come in that my house may have been filled.

24. For I say unto thee that not one of those men who were invited will taste of my supper.

25. And many crowds were going their way along with him, and turning he said unto them,

26. If any one cometh unto me and shall not hate his father and his mother, and wife and brothers and sisters, yea more, his own soul, he cannot be my disciple.

28. Who of you forsooth intending to build a tower, doth not first sit down and count the cost to see whether he hath the means in readiness.

29. That he may not perchance when he hath laid his foundation and is not strong enough to complete it, have all who behold it begin to mock at him.

30. Saying, this man began to build and was not strong enough to complete it.

31. Or what king who is going his way to join issue in war with another king, will not first sit down and take counsel as to whether he is able with ten thousand to meet the one who is coming against him with twenty thousand?

32. And if not while he is yet afar off, he sendeth an embassy and asketh the terms for peace?

33. Even so then any one of you who doth not bid adieu to all his own possessions cannot be my disciple.

34. The salt forsooth is good; but if even the salt hath lost its savor in what way will it have been seasoned? It is fit neither for earth nor manure. They cast it outside. The one who hath ears to hear let him hear.

COMMENT.

"Not strong enough" instead of "could not" R. V. which does not state why they could not.

"Those reclining along with thee" instead of "sit at meat with thee" R. V.

"Nor neighbor nor the rich" instead of "rich neighbors" R. V.

"A reception" instead of "a feast" R. V.

"The inexperienced" instead of "lame" R. V.

"The justified" instead of "the just" R. V.

"Wrathful" instead of "angry" R. V.

"Public-squares and narrow streets" instead of "streets and lanes" R. V.

"Soul" instead of "life" R. V. Let us be consistent. Of course organic natural life is meant here. That is all we have left to give after we have "renounced" or "bade adieu" to every body and everything else, as here demanded.

The paradox of Christianity, the paradox of paradoxes is that we are required to give our soul in order to save it. And yet this is plain teaching when compared with the exhortation to an already "immortal soul" to seek after "immortality" or "eternal life."

ala; the salt of wisdom, ale salt itself. This is the idiomatic use of the two words.

MARRIED

BEERS—WORTHINGTON.—At the residence of the bride's parents in Schoolcraft township, Tuesday evening, Nov. 7th, by Rev. D. H. Reiter, Mr. James Beers to Miss Carrie Worthington.

The evening was one of the most beautiful of the autumn season. The company numbered some 80 guests from Kalamazoo, Dowagiac, Mendon, Portage, Schoolcraft, and Vicksburg. The presents were numerous, well selected, and many of them valuable.

Elder Woodward was expected to officiate at the wedding but we were at the time in Ill., and could not be present. No other minister of our faith being within reach the Congregational minister was called. We extend our warmest congratulations to Brother and Sister Worthington for their new son, and to the happy pair, all the good that God can send them.

B. W. & M. A. WOODWARD.

Announcements.

The first quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, will convene D. V. at the new church in Frontier Co., commencing Friday evening Dec. 15th and hold over the following Sunday.

On account of the great increase of interest in the state during the last six months, a corresponding ratio of interest should be taken by the brethren at these meetings.

At the business meeting at 2 o'clock on Saturday some new business will be taken up, and the attendance of every brother and sister is earnestly requested.

There is a great work ahead for the brethren during the coming season. Are we prepared for it? Will we buckle on the whole armor? A crown of eternal life is promised only to the faithful ones.

J. J. CADY, Sec.

The Church of God known as the Northern Nebraska and Southern Dakota Conference will convene if the lord is willing, at Ainsworth, Nebraska, in the Court House Hall at that place, commencing December 15th, 1893. All brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic Faith are cordially invited to attend this conference as we expect to do a good work for the Master's cause. There will be other business matters of importance at this meeting, and brethren we want your help, as this conference is anxious to unite and be in union with the State Conference that we work together for the good of all in building us up and lifting up God's fallen creatures to a perfect knowledge of his great love that we may all share in the great blessings promised in his Kingdom to come. "Watchman what of the night? The morning cometh and a night also. If ye will inquire ye may inquire ye." Isa. xxi. 11.

WM. H. BENSON, Sec.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto those who are of the household of faith." Send THE RESTITUTION to those of the household of faith who are not able to take it but enjoy reading it.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

The Thief on the Cross.

This is the title of a tract that needs no introduction, having been printed in this paper substantially as it appears in the tract. Written by M. Joblin. The design has been to issue this work as cheaply as possible, and sell it as near cost as can be. It makes 16 pages, and the price is placed at one cent each in quantities, the buyer to pay postage. The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents, so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 60 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Change of Schedule on the Pennsylvania Lines.

A change in the schedule of passenger trains on the Pennsylvania Lines went into effect Sunday, Nov. 19th. Under the new schedule the time of trains at Plymouth, Ind., is as follows:

Depart for the West at 4:00 A. M. 9:09 A. M. 2:05 P. M. 6:10 P. M. 6:30 P. M., accommodation arrives.

Depart for the East at 2:36 A. M. 6:30 A. M. 10:35 A. M. 7:35 P. M. 8:07 P. M.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 20, 1893. BC NO. 47.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the [illegible] the kingdom of God on the [illegible] the Christ as King of kings, and the [illegible] saints as joint heirs with him in the [illegible] of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Read thou, and pray;
Life's little day
Is all too short for thee.

Read thou, and weep
That sin doth keep
So strong a hold on thee.

Read thou, and see
Sufficiency
In him who died for sin.

Read thou, and raise
A song of praise,
Because He lives to plead.

Read thou, and bring Unto thy King
A consecrated heart.

Read thou, and learn
That warfare stern
Must be thy portion here.

Read thou, and dare
This world of care
Of treachery and pain.

Read thou, and work,
Nor ever shirk
The stigma of the cross.

Read thou, and die;
Eternity
Shall crown thee with its joys.

Original.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 15.

1. And there were drawing nigh unto him all the obdurate sinners to hear him.

2. And both the Pharisees and the Scribes were murmuring saying, this one is receiving obdurate sinners and eating along with them.

3. And he spake unto them this parable saying;

4. What man of you who hath an hundred sheep and hath lost one of them doth not leave the ninety-nine behind in the wilderness and go his way after the lost one until he shall have found it?

5. And when he hath found it he putteth it upon his shoulders, and having come to his house he inviteth his friends and his neighbors, saying unto them, rejoice along with me because I have found my sheep that was lost.

7. I say unto you that in this wise will there be joy in the heavens over one obdurate sinner who repenteth rather than over ninety-nine justified persons who have no need of repentance.

8. Or what woman who hath ten drachmas, if she lose one drachma, doth not light a lamp and sweep the house and seek until she hath found it?

9. And when she hath found it she inviteth her friends and neighbors saying, rejoice along with me, because I have found the drachma which I had lost.

10. In this wise, I say unto you there comes to be joy in the sight of the angels of God over one obdurate sinner who repenteth.

11. He said moreover, a certain man had two sons.

12. And the younger of them said unto the father, father give me the portion of the property (lit. the being) that is my allotment. And he divided with them his living.

13. And not many days afterward gathering together (lit. leading together) everything, the younger son went away from home into a far country and there scattered his property (lit. being) living in an abandoned way (lit. an unsaved way).

14. And when he had squandered his all, there became a mighty famine throughout that country and he began to get behind.

15. And going his way he got joined to one of the citizens of that country; and he sent him into his fields to pasture swine.

16. And he longed to get full-fed with the carobs (fruit of the locust tree, Com. called St. John's bread) which the swine were eating; and no one gave unto him.

17. And when he had come to himself he said, how many of my father's hirelings have more than enough of bread, and I here am perishing with famine.

18. I will arise and go my way unto my father, and say unto him, father I have been sinning against the heavens and in thy sight,

19. I am no longer worthy to be called thy son; make me as it were one of thy hirelings.

20. And he arose and went unto his father. And while he was yet afar off his father saw him and was moved with compassion and ran and fell upon his neck and embraced (or kissed) him.

21. And the son said unto him, father I have been sinning against the heavens and in thy sight; I am no longer worthy to be called thy son.

22. And the father said unto his bond-servants, quick. bring the chief robe (royal or priestly) and clothe him with an under-garment (the other is an outer-garment) and give a finger-ring for his hand and sandals for his feet;

23. And bring the fatted yearling; sacrifice and let us eat and be of good cheer:

24. Because this son of mine was dead and hath revived; was lost and hath been found. They began to be of good cheer.

25. Now his elder son was in a field; and as in coming he drew nigh to the household, he heard sounds of harmony and choral dancing:

26. And summoning one of the house-servants he inquired what this might be.

27. And he said unto him, it is because thy brother hath come; and thy father hath sacrificed the fatted yearling because he hath received him back in good health.

28. And he was wrathful and would not go in. His father came out and exhorted him:

29. And he answered and said unto his father, lo, so many years am I serving thee as a bond-servant and never have evaded thy commandment, and me thou hast never given a kid, that I might be of good cheer with my friends.

30. But when this son of thine who hath devoured thy living with harlots, hath come, thou hast sacrificed for him the fatted yearling.

31. And he said unto him, child thou art ever with me, and all mine is thine.

32. And it is befitting to be of good cheer and rejoice, because this thy brother was dead and hath come to life; was lost and hath been found.

COMMENT.

"Obdurate sinner" instead of "sinner" merely R. V.

"Justified" instead of "righteous" R. V.

"The drachma" instead of "the piece" R. V. The ten drachmas make about one dollar and sixty-six cents in American currency.

"The portion that is my allotment" instead of "the portion that falleth to me" R. V.

"Divided with them" instead of "divided unto them" R. V. This a parable, remember of God's dividing with his sons his "being" and his "living"—and teaches not "the fellowship" merely, but "the common participation" that the sons of God realize here and hereafter.

"In an unsaved way" instead of in "riotous living" R. V. This makes the prodigal son" represent all the unsaved instead of those who live riotously merely.

"Scattered" instead of "wasted" R. V.

"Squandered" instead of "spent" merely R. V.

"To get behind" instead of "to be in want" R. V. true to the record and much more suggestive.

"Got joined" instead of "joined himself" R. V. The record does not tell us how he got joined.

"Going his way" instead of "went" R. V. however suggests the how of it.

"Pasture" instead of "feed" R. V. They didn't feed swine in a trough and keep them in a pen in those days. He became a swine herd.

"Carobs" or "St. John's bread" instead of "husks" or the "husks of carobs" R. V. They are rather poor feed; but a person can live on them on a pinch.

"And clothe him with an under-garment" instead of "And put it upon him" R. V. The word [illegible] here used used is not used of putting on an outer-garment, which the "chief robe" was.

"And give a ring for his hand and sandals for his feet" instead of "put on etc." R. V.

"Sandals" instead of "shoes" R. V. This would be an anachronism of course.

"The fatted yearling" instead of "the fatted calf" R. V.

"Sacrifice" instead of "kill" R. V.

"And be of good cheer" instead of "be merry" R. V. This takes away and removes the feasting into the limbo of heathendom.

"Choral-dancing" instead of "dancing" merely R. V. for the same reason.

"Revived" instead of "is alive again" R. V.

"A field" instead of "the field" R. V. spoils the picture is the reason of it.

"Choral-dancing" instead of "dancing" merely R. V. for the reason that this was a regular and essential feature of a religious festival and as much a form of worship as singing. This was not a heathen merry-making here described.

"The fatted yearling" was the "symbolical victim" and he was "sacrificed" not "butchered."

"The enduement" of the son was his clothing of "justification" and "the chief-robe" was his "robe of glory" and the rejoicing and feasting were typical of the heavenly rejoicing over a repentant and returned sinner.

"Harmony" instead of "music" R. V. There is an other word in the Greek for music per se.

"House-servant" instead of "servant" merely R. V. This not unimportant, because the household here is a type of the great household of faith and this sort of a servant was born in the household, and he was not a "bond-servant" either.

"In good health" instead of "safe and sound" R. V. So is the repentant sinner and for the first time too.

"Who" instead of "which" R. V.

"Child" instead of "son" R. V. It wont do to mix these words in this way. The elder son was not exemplifying true sonship about this time was he?

CHAS. GARDNER.

Contend Earnestly.

"Beloved, ... it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints." Jude 3.

What were the brethren exhorted to do?

Earnestly contend for the faith. If it was necessary to be contending for the faith 60 years (thereabouts) this side of Christ, how much greater the necessity after the apostasy has been doing its work for these many centuries?

With what force his words come to us, and how it should inspire every true believer's heart to use every means in their power to place the saving truth before mankind.

What is saving truth?

The gospel which Paul said he was not ashamed of.

Why are you not ashamed of it Paul?

Because it is the power of God unto salvation, Rom. i. 16.

Turning to Eph. iv. 4-5, we find this important fact, that there is "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism."

In Gal. i. 9-10, this awful curse is pronounced against any one who dare preach a false gospel. "As we said before so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that you have received, let him be accursed."

What gospel had they received?

The saving gospel of "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism."

What then of those who were, and are preaching several forms of baptisms, or innumerable faiths, with that most harmful of all things, the immortality of the soul? Paul's earnest words, "seek for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life," denied in the assertions of so many that they already possess immortality.

Do they realize what those words mean?

"If any man preach any other doctrine, let him be accursed."

How few realize that the idea of the divine attribute of immortality inherent in man, came from the serpent, and will come under the curse of the apostle. But no curse, no false theory, no denial of the Word of God, when we read and believe. "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, then ye shall receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away." Ah, the true and false, see how they look side by side.

Paul, tell us again what you told the brethren down at Ephesus that day, "That at that time, (what time? Why before they understood the promises) ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." Now will some of the Shepherds of the flocks tell us where their hope is. Not in the covenants of promise for they know nothing of it, and of course cannot teach others. I asked a minister in Philadelphia who had been preaching forty years, if he would tell me what the promise was God made to Abraham, and he frankly confessed he did not know. Was he without hope? Yes, if Paul's words were true, for he says again, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 27-29. Then the hope that saves is according to God's immutable promises.

Then again, "Be ye not conformed to this world." O brethren, is not the tendency of our times to do just that? I have often thought that some who profess to understand and love the truth, care much more for the feelings of those who are teaching and clinging to a false hope than they did for the precious blood-bought gospel of the Kingdom of God. They would like a few gospel sermons preached, if it could be done without touching upon much doctrine, as that would cause division, we are working very harmoniously now with the——— Church and would not like to have anything unpleasant to occur, so dont preach on baptism, immortality, kingdom, or coming of Christ. As if the gospel could be preached without preaching on those subjects. It reminds us of a minister who went into a place to preach, the deacon met him at the church door and says, "I would like to advise you a little as to the best things to speak on. Brother A. does not believe in hell-fire—please don't say anything about that. Brother B. is a goodish sort of man, but he drinks and trades horses, dont mention those subjects. Brother C. is rich and we need his money. He will lie and steal, but do not touch him any." The minister began to look blue and asked, in a far-away voice, "Well what under the sun shall I preach about?" O, says the anxious deacon, "give the Jews fits."

Sam Jones said a true thing when he said it took a man with 95 per cent. back-bone to be a Christian.

O, brethren, do we realise that these days need just such men as have the spirit of a Huss, or Wickliffe, or Rogers, of Martin Luther, who said he would go to Worms if the devils were as thick as tiles on the house-top. Let us be brave and true, willing to work, or fight for the grand truths of God though there be no popularity or praise in it. No, cushioned pews, or stained glass windows, no worldly honors now, but the kingdom with its wonderful things prepared for those who love him by and by. We need not meet in caves and dens of the earth as did the early Christians, preferring those meeting places with the truth to sustain them, rather than the costly Jewish temples, with all their luxuries, but without their Savior. We must be men of iron with nerves of steel to pass through the perils of these last days, while contending for the faith. It is sometimes said, "The Old Pioneers did much harm by preaching so plainly, and teaching so much doctrine." But they were the men who made the converts, and when they were made they knew what they believed, and staid made. It is not the men who say those smooth, pretty, unmeaning things that do the good, and convert people, but those who dare preach as did those of old, and show the difference between truth and error.

"O for a faith that will not shrink
Though pressed by many a foe."

Yours contending earnestly for the faith.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Editor Restitution:

Of all the things in THE RESTITUTION I believe I best enjoy reading Gardner's translations, and I can hardly say for why, his style is so hard and dry, and the moods and tenses of his verbs are so involved, yet, we can gather by comparison a great deal of the original sense of the Word.

I am also interested in the discussion of W. Jones, and M. Joblin. They are both very combative fellows, in a way—if a glass-house resident may be accorded the privilege of throwing a stone. As for me, I am in sympathy with the doctrine of Oneness, the Singleness, the Unit-y of the Creator and Father of all. As to the Unity of God with his Son and his elect, of course that is another idea, that in no way conflicts with the first idea. Bro. Joblin has marked that out very well in No. 4. I doubt however, if he is correct in his reading of John xvii. 4-5. "And now, O Father," etc. I rather think the glory of the Savior there referred to was not the future glory, but the then imminent glory, the glory of his victory over self, of his obedience and self abnegation. The glory that we see in him and admire now, that all the world even reverences him for. Crowns and realms can never add to that. They are but the result, so to speak. The crown of Jesus' triumph was actually in Pilate's hall and Calvary. I am not detatching from the glory that shall be revealed in him. I merely say that I read his prayer then, as referring to the immediate climax which he then saw.

I sometimes think our good brethren are rather carried away by the idea of golden glories of a future age and of a kind rather material—to speak mildly, and I rather fear we are all a little unappreciative of the fact that the real glory and triumph of character is in the battle and victory of life.

I claim that our Lord already has thus triumphed, has already been thus glorified, and that this was all the eminence he desired to attain and supplicated the Father for us to the rest—"Set thou on my right hand," "Ruling from the river to the end of the earth"—these do not —nothing does detract from Calvary.

Of course the question of the pre-existence of the Christ Jesus, that is not init—no where near it—any where for a thousand mile, as Mark Twain would say. It is a sad comment on human logic such "theological" mix, and all for what? To revive the idea of the plurality of God.

Bro. Joblin will have to excuse me when I say that I have a great deal of consideration, and that I believe the Good Father will also make a great deal of consideration for all sorts and conditions of theological mix, where the motives of the individual are pure,—God being Judge—for when I look around I see some of our good brethren about as much in the mud as they are in the mire, and I dont "take down any bars" either.

Yours in The Truth.

J. F. GELLETLY.

Selected.

I am the Resurrection and the Life.

The above words were spoken by Jesus to Martha, the sister of Lazarus, whom he raised from the dead. It seems, from the nature of the words, that Martha needed some light on the important subject of the resurrection and the life related to it, else the "Great Teacher sent from God" would have no need to tell her what he did. She believed that he possessed the power to keep men alive if he willed to do so. This we learn from her own words: "Lord, if thou had'st been here, my brother had not died." She could not help believing in his power so far, for she would be aware of the miracles which he had done of the same nature. She believed that if he asked power from God to raise her brother to life again, he would receive it, for she added, 'But I know that even now whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." But she did not know that Jesus had received the power even to raise the dead to life as a necessary credential to prove that he was the Messiah whom God promised to send, and that he carried that power about with him, and used it as occasion required without needing to ask God for power each time he worked a miracle. Nay, more, she had to be told that her beloved Lord had been appointed "the resurrection and the life." "Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Her words show that she believed that God could raise her brother at the last day; but Jesus answered her, "I am the resurrection and the life."

The same testimony, concerning the possession of the sole power to raise the dead to life by Jesus, is given in the v. chap. 21 to 29th verses of the gospel by John. Jesus said, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life. * * Verily, verily, I say unto you the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself: so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself * * * Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." All his hearers seemed to marvel at his doctrine of having been appointed the agent and representative of Jehovah to the Adamic race. That was what Martha required to be taught. And it would seem from the narrative that Jesus purposely permitted Lazarus to die in order to give his sisters, and all who had eyes to see, ocular demonstration of the truth of his claims by raising Lazarus to life. When Jesus heard the news of Lazarus being sick, he told his disciples plainly—"Lazarus is dead: and I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe."

From the above we learn—

1. That God has constituted Jesus the Light and the Life of men.

2. That he gives them "the light of life and immortality by his gospel."

3. That he will give eternal life and immortality by resurrection.

4. That in order to have a resurrection men [illegible] in Christ by believing his gospel.

5. That to be resurrected does not necessarily secure eternal life and immortality.

The first proposition is proved by the following: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever [so] liveth and believeth in me shall never die" [again]. "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (chap. viii. 12). "Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10. It is of the greatest importance to men, then, to know and believe the gospel of the Christ; for without him, and his glad tidings, all men would remain for ever in the congregation of the dead—there would be no resurrection. That strikes at the root of the natural immortality of man. It is "by a patient continuance in well doing" that men "seek for immortality." Rom. ii. 7. Therefore, all who believe and obey that gospel, "rejoice with a joy unspeakable and full of glory." The following is proof of the second proposition: "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." John vi. 47. "Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark xvi. 15, 16. The third proposition is proved by the following: "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22. The fourth proposition is proved by the words, "He that believeth in [or into] me, though he were dead yet shall he live." "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." If Christ is "the resurrection and the life," it is clear that we must be in him—a member of his mystical body, or one of his brethren—in order to be resurrected and obtain the life which he hath to give. And if men require to believe in him in order to be raised up at the last day, it follows that those who do not believe will not be raised up. And if men require to be in Christ in order to be made alive, it is clear that those who are not in him will not be made alive.

In proof of proposition five, we refer to "Whosoever [believeth in me [of the resurrected ones] shall never die." From this we draw the inference that those who have been in Christ, and have ceased to believe, will die the second death. But we produce direct proof on the subject: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." John xv. 6. Daniel says (or rather the Spirit through him), "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." It is not enough, then, to be in Christ, and thereby have a resurrection, we must obey the truth, and "overcome the world, even as Christ overcame," in order to have our vile body "changed and fashioned like unto his glorious body," and be privileged to sit with Christ on his throne. In order to realize that blessed hope we "must purify ourselves, even as he is pure." 1 John iii. 3.

Remember the suggestion of Brother Dwiggins in our last week's paper. Let this be a genuine "love-feast," with no one left out. Send in your letters in time.

Bro. Wagoner is at his new field in Kentucky, and reports having immersed three on Dec. 11, and thinks others will be ready soon.

Bro. D. M. Hudler is busy at work in the Master's vineyard, taking for his field Illinois, about East Plum River, Adaline, Lanark, and Dixon. He writes very encouragingly of his work. May the Father in heaven add his blessing.

A letter from Bro. N. H. Geiselman, dated Dec. 12, says his child is some better, and they are hopeful that the worst is over. He speaks very highly of the kindness of the people in their trouble. He expects to preach again as soon as his family cares will allow.

Editor Restitution:

I think our subscription has about run out, and I cannot ask you to continue sending the paper without money, as I am aware that it takes money for you to live on, as well as us. We do not like to miss a copy as we are isolated from any of the faith, and it is the only preacher that we have to visit us. We hope we will be able to renew our subscription soon. Remember us, and ours in your prayers. We are trying to so live in this life as to inherit eternal life in the kingdom of God. Yours for truth.

[We give another sample of the sort of letters we get. They come from those who have taken our paper for years. Not simply trial subscribers, but old veterans whose names have been on our list since far back. You who have means, can you let these brothers and sisters go without their paper? We don't ask you to beggar yourself, but if you have in pocket an extra $1.50 that you can well spare, and not suffer yourself, send it and have The Restitution continue to go to these of the Lord's poor. You can't by the payment of $1.50 buy the Lord's blessing, but you can get in position to receive it.—Ed.]

That Blessed Hope, the glorious appearing of the Lord is the next great event, loved ones. It is a divine certainty,—the Scriptures make it the ground of argument: they hold it up as a powerful motive,—they use it to strengthen faith, encourage hope, promote humility, fortify patience, mitigate sorrow, incite watchfulness, impel obedience, inspire prayer, increase holiness and awaken joy. What a blank there would be in the Word of God without it. Let us cherish it more and more—be ever on the tip-toe of expectation for it. •

It has been truly said that "the faith which finds acceptance at the revelation of Jesus Christ must be one which is better and purer through having been severely tried—as gold is tried by fire. There is no use in being contented with a faith which will not bear comparison with the Word for fear of finding it defective. It must have that Word for its basis or else there is no sustaining power amid darkness and gloom by linking the glory of the future age with a successful warfare against sin in the present time. •

The Arabic name for tare is zowan, and this is thought to be the root of the Greek name zizanion. The tare abounds in the East and is a great nuisance. A Bloody riot took place at Girardinelio on the 13th: eight of the rioters were shot down by soldiers and fourteen others were wounded. After a scene of wildest confusion and shouting of "Down with taxes," and "Long live Socialism" the mob directed their fury against the tax collector, killing both him and his wife, and dragging their bodies into the street where they were horribly mutilated. Their heads were cut off and stuck on pikes and carried through the streets, followed by the crowd dragging the bodies of the murdered couple. •

Progress of the best kind is comparatively slow. Great results are not acheived at once, and we must be satisfied to advance as we walk step by step. De Maistre says that "to know how to wait is the great secret of success." We must sow before we can reap, and often have to wait long, content, meanwhile, to look patiently forward in hope, as the fruit best worth waiting for often ripens the slowest. The proverb says, "Time and patience change the Mulberry leaf to satin." The great point for us, is, to be careful of the seed we sow. If we sow to the flesh we reap corruption; but if we sow to the Spirit we shall reap life everlasting. •

According to Promise.

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise,"—agreeable to the promise to Abraham, that is. What consolation there is in having a hope springing out of faith in what God promises to those who believe and obey him. We opened a book the other day entitled, "According to Promise;" that seemed to ring of the right metal, so we concluded to take a look at the contents. We found Spurgeon was the author of it; and that that man of world-wide renown knew nothing about the promises to be inherited by those who belong to Christ. All the promises he knew anything about were those made to believers, and realized in this life, not the life to come. He knew nothing of the exceeding great and precious promises by which we may be partakers of Divine nature. To him the gospel was made up of facts of history, the essence of which was substitution; and the hope of heaven the result of its acceptance. In truth, only those who become Abraham's seed by believing what he did, have any claim upon God's provision for his children in this life. They only have an advocate with the Father,—they only have access to the family throne of favor; they only are promised sustaining grace under the trials of life; they only can rejoice in hope of the glory of God, because they only have complied with the conditions imposed. With fervent love and profound gratitude we praise God for a knowledge of those life-giving promises which center in his glorious Son Christ Jesus. Bless his Holy name. We have something to hope for, because promised by him who cannot lie. •

Selected.

An Universal Monarchy.

To proclaim unto mankind that the time is near when an universal Monarchy will be established in the earth, is to be scoffed at, and treated with scorn. For the human mind cannot of itself comprehend how such a state of things can be brought about, seeing the diversity of nations, that at present exist on the four Continents that comprise our globe, nations ruled over by kings, queens, emperors, and presidents, some of whom reign over millions of people. There have been in past ages great and mighty nations, greater than any that exist now, yet not one of them had universal sway. There were the mighty emperors of Babylon, the Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman, but with all their might and glory they have passed away, and are not to be compared with the one that will be established in the near future, and which will never be superseded by another, for it will stand for ever. It appears an impossibility that the whole of the nations, which are now existing upon the earth, can be displaced by one which does not at present exist, and that in the near future; but that which is impossible with man, is possible with God, and as he has declared it, there need be no doubt but that it will be brought to pass. Through his servant Daniel, the fall of the mighty Empire of Babylon had been declared, and that mighty and supposed impregnable city was taken by the Medes and Persians in one night. Through the same prophet has been declared that at a certain time, "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and it shall stand for ever." Now if we can find out anything about this kingdom of God's, which is indestructible, we will no doubt be able to discover something about this "universal monarchy," which in the near future is to supersede all others. The Son of God, when here upon earth, taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Matt. vi. 9, 10. That this must be the kingdom, which is to be universal, there can be no doubt, for it stands to reason that God's will will not be done on earth so long as any of the present kingdoms of the earth exist, and they must, therefore, give place to the one that is to be set up by the God of heaven. That they are to do so is evident to all who believe in the Bible as a revelation from God, for when his servant John was a prisoner in the isle of Patmos, by the command of the Emperor of Rome, he had a revelation that at a certain period of this world's history, "The kingdoms of this world" shall "become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Rev. xi. 15. Christ then is the one who is to be the universal Monarch over an universal kingdom, and the apostle Paul shows that the kingdom of God is also the kingdom of Christ, for he writes, "that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolator, hath inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." Ephes. v. 5. Hence it is seen that the kingdom of Christ and that of God is one and the same. God speaking through the prophet Ezekiel, to the last king of the line of Daniel, declared he would overturn the throne of Israel until he come, whose right it is, and he will give it him. And the angel Gabriel, in announcing the birth of Christ, declared that "the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33. Is this not very like the indestructible kingdom that is to be set up by the God of heaven? The capital city of the kingdom of David was Zion, and it is there that God declares that he will enthrone his Son, unto whom he says, "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Psalm ii. 8. This surely is an universal kingdom, seeing that its dominion is to be to the uttermost parts of the earth. The kingdom of David, to which Christ is heir, has been destroyed for centuries, but unlike all other kingdoms that have passed away, it will, according to the promise of God, be restored. This could not be so with any other nation that has been destroyed, because the people who composed them have been swallowed up amongst those nations that succeeded them, and hence have disappeared for ever. Not so the children of Israel, although in dispersion amongst the nations for centuries, they are still as a people distinct from all others. The reason of this is to be found that, although scattered, they are preserved by God in fulfilment of his purpose, for he declared that he would be unto them as "a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." Ezek. xi. 16. And again, he says, "I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee." Jer. xlvi. 28. That the time is near, for the restoration of God's people Israel, is evident from the many signs that are abroad in the earth. Large numbers have already settled in their own land, and although a great scheme is on hand to transplant many of the Jews, who are suffering persecution at the hands of the Russian government, one of those principally interested in the emancipation of the Jews, and who, at the request of the promoter of the scheme (Baron Hirsch), is taking a leading position in it, declares it may relieve but it will not settle the Jewish question, or the Jewish longings to return to their land and home. The establishment of this universal monarchy was to be at a time when God would bring all nations against Jerusalem to battle, and that the time is near is evident from the fact that the nations are arming to an extent that they have never done before, and it was at such a time as this, as described in the last chapter of the prophecy of Joel, when they should beat their "plowshares into swords," and their "pruning-hooks into spears," and go up to the valley of Jehoshaphat when they would be destroyed by the Son of God. Having taken possession of the Royal City Zion, and overthrown those who were oppressing his people Israel, he issues his mandates to the nations of the earth, to disarm, and learn war no more, and the nations and kingdoms that shall not serve him shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Isaiah lx. 12. And this will result in his kingdom extending from "sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." And in that day "the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name One." Zec. xiv. 9. Christ asks for associates with him in this kingdom which is to be universal, and hence he says, to those who will hear, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33. And it is written that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27. Here again is an universal dominion, which is an everlasting one, and undoubtedly is the one in which Christ will reign with all his faithful saints when the present kingdoms of this world shall have given place to that which shall be established in the near future by him who "hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords." Rev. xix. 16. Christ is coming, but the scoffer still declares that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." And they will scoff on until he come to do this mighty work in the earth, and cause men to do the will of God in earth as in heaven; for all who refuse to submit to his righteous sway, will perish from the face of the earth, for in that day "all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him." Psa. lxxii. 2. Verse 17, "His name shall endure for ever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed." Let all those who are desirous of life everlasting with him in his kingdom, put themselves under the shadow of his wing, and follow in his footsteps, and an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Peter i. 2.—P. A. Hutchison.

Life Insurance.

Amongst the provident class of society, whether rich or poor, there is a great tendency to effect a "life insurance," and by payment of a certain sum of money, £100 (or more, as the case may be,) will be paid to their nearest relatives upon the death of the insurer. So popular is this system of making provision in case of death, that several periodicals have adopted the notion of insuring all their readers, and in case of death by accident large sums of money are paid to the next-of-kin to the deceased. But there is one system of life insurance which by the majority of people is overlooked: and, although advertisements and prospectuses of the scheme are to be found in almost every house in the land—from the royal palace to the laborer's cottage yet very few avail themselves of its advantages. Other systems, which are of more recent date, and which are based upon infinitely inferior security, seem to be patronized very largely, and to be received with gratitude and confidence by the multitude. To become a member of one of these societies, necessitates, in most cases, an examination by some medical man, and a certificate to prove that the candidate is free from chronic physical ailments. When this has been done to the satisfaction of the insurance "company," certain payments must be made periodically, and if these payments are neglected, the benefits of the transactions are lost. The old-established, yet much neglected system, is founded upon more liberal principles than the modern system, and can boast of members whose names are famous in the world's history. The Originator and Director of this ancient scheme of Life Insurance is the Most High God, Maker of the Heavens and the Earth, who is from Everlasting to Everlasting, the same unchangeable Creator. His wisdom has planned the scheme whereby the mortal sons of men may become immortal, and those who are subject to death and corruption, may be partakers of His Divine nature, and die no more. Unlike all human systems, the Divine scheme is not restricted to those who are in perfect bodily health, but is open to all sorts and conditions of men—the strong and the weak, the great and the small, the lame and the blind, the deaf and the dumb—all whose minds are capable of receiving the instructions and rules are eligible to receive the benefit of this grand scheme. That benefit is Eternal Life. This Eternal Life, however, is not to be purchased; it is a free gift from God, through faith in his Son, Jesus Christ. Rom. vi. 23. No amount of earthly riches can purchase this gift; it is attainable only by faith and obedience to God's commands, which are to be found in the advertisement and prospectus—the Bible. Within the pages of that Book is contained the complete plan of God's great scheme for redeeming man from the power of the grave, and of bestowing upon him immortality. The invitation is to all "whosoever will" Rev. xxii. 17, and the gift is to be obtained "without money and without price." Isa lv. 1.—W. A. Brewster.

Colonel Ingersoll once lived in Peoria, Ill. He set himself for the destruction of Christianity. Upon the spot where his residence was, there is now a Young Men's Christian Association Building with a Bible depository and reading rooms in which are all the religious periodicals, and everything else calculated to help the young man in a religious life. The Colonel ought to visit his old home.

"After we have heard the voice of Jesus calling to us through the gospel, we have something else to do besides merely believing the things which he taught. Concerning his sheep, Christ says, "they follow me." That is the most difficult part of the matter, but it is the test of our sincerity.

Draw back in horror from the first taste of the cup that intoxicates. It allures to ruin. It destroys the faculties of mind and body.

How to Escape the Wrath to Come.

The coming of the Lord is near. If so near we cannot say; but if we are wise we shall take care that that day does not overtake us as a thief. The world at large will be altogether unprepared for the event; for we are told that "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction shall come upon them."—1. Thess. v. 3. Christ himself, in speaking of that time, said: "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.

The brethren of Christ will do well to keep on the watch-tower, lest, coming suddenly, the Lord will find them sleeping. Let them obey their Master's command to "Watch and pray always, that they may be accounted worthy to escape all the things that come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Matt. xxi. 30.

To those of our readers who are interested in these things, but who have not yet united themselves to that "only Name given under heaven whereby men may be saved," we would say, make haste! Time is short, and delays are dangerous. The Lord Jesus is about to be revealed "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of his Son." 1 Thess. i. 8.

The righteous judgments of God are about to be poured out upon a wicked and disobedient world. How do you stand in relation to these mighty and terrible events?

God has provided an Ark of Safety, a Refuge from the Storm in the person of His own Son. He is willing and ready to receive you. "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that is athirst come: and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. 17.

There is only one "road to life, which is narrow," and the "road to destruction, which is broad." Which will you take? Which is best? To yield yourselves to sin and its mortal penalties now, and then ultimately to make food for worms; to be as chaff in a furnace; as stubble; as ashes; as castaways; or to be lifted up now to a high moral standard in Christ Jesus, and at last to glow with the Divine effulgence of glory which shall be ever-enduring, when all that is sinful, painful, and death-like, shall have passed for ever away. There can be no doubt which is the best end. If you remain in Adam, you will suffer the penalty imposed on him, and remain under his condemnation, which is death. If you are Christ's, you will no longer be the heir of death and hell, but the heir of everlasting life, and a position in his kingdom, for "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." The occupants of hell are all those who have passed away in death since man first dwelt upon the earth. Old, young, rich, poor, male, female, all are there, not in heaven, nor in torments, but where there is "no remembrance of God," no work nor knowledge. Some will remain there for ever, but some will be called therefrom by Christ at his return from his Father's right hand. It remains with you whether you will accept God's offer of "life," or whether you will be blotted out of creation for ever. God holds out his hand of love to you! Do not reject his offer, but be thankful you are able to see him as represented in Jer. ix. 24. Put on Christ and shake off Adam, and rest assured that God will not forget you when he redeems his people from the grave.

"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Isa. lv. 13.

The Bible is the only history that begins in eternity and ends in eternity. All other histories are imperfect, unsatisfactory, because incomplete touching the most vital question.

Where is the Throne?

Spiritualizing makes strange work of many passages in prophecy. "The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David." Mr. Burlington Wale says of this text: "How few Christians believe this! and how many distort this and similar passages by spiritualizing them! We would ask these brethren what, in their principle of interpretation, we are to understand by the above promise—The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David?' Is it a spiritual throne in human hearts? When did David occupy that? Is it the throne in heaven which the Savior occupies now? When did David sit upon that? Did David ever have a throne in heaven? Has Christ ever had a throne on earth? No! But he will; for the only throne that David ever occupied was in Jerusalem, over Judea and Israel, and that throne has never yet been occupied by the Lord Jesus; but if the above promise and prophecy speak truth, he will yet occupy that throne, or weild dominion from Jerusalem over Israel and the world.

How to Become Great.

A young artist once called upon Mr. Audubon, the great student of birds, to show him some drawings and paintings. Audubon was much interested, and after examining the work of the artist, said:

"I like it very much, but it is little deficient in details. You have painted the legs of this bird nicely, except in one respect. The scales are exact in shape and color, but you have not arranged them correctly as to numbers."

"I never thought of that," said the young artist.

"Quite likely," said Audubon. "Now, upon this upper ridge of the partridge's leg, there are just so many scales. You have too many. Nature does her work perfectly. Examine the legs of a thousand partridges, and you will see that the scales are the same in number. All partridges are made alike."

The lesson shows how Audubon became great—by patient study in small things.

"Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

An ill-mannered youth once boasted in the hearing of Alexander the Great that he bore the same name as his sovereign. "Then change your name," was the just reply of the indignant monarch. "Change your name or mend your manners. Do not disgrace the name of your sovereign by coupling with it the conduct of a knave."

The Immortal Book.

No. 5.

"How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, [illegible] how great is the sum of them!" Psa. cxxxix.

In article No. 4. I cited a paragraph from Josephus which contains remarkable confirmations of prophetic utterances concerning Jesus. The confirmation is so remarkable, that infidels would have us believe the quotation is a forgery by some Christian.

True Christians do not commit forgery, even in defense of the Holy Book. The moment a person is guilty of forgery he ceases to be a true Christian. A bad man never commits a forgery against his own interest, and surely never to defend the Book he hates. Considering this I thought it profitable to present historical confirmation of the paragraph from Josephus' day to the fifteenth century. Since then it has been frequently quoted. While the first two quotations do not mention Josephus, yet there is evidence that their information was derived from Josephus. Josephus wrote his Antiquities in A. D. 93, just seventeen years prior to the first quotation. Apart from all this, Josephus gives the history of Herod and John the Baptist in exact accord with the gospels. He also speaks of James as the "brother of Jesus, who was called Christ."

A. D. 110. Tacit. Annal. lib. xv. cap. 44. "Nero in order to stifle the rumor, (as he had himself set fire to Rome) ascribed it to those people who were hated for their wicked practices, and called by the vulgar Christians: The author of this name was Christ, who in the reign of Tiberius, was brought to punishment by Pontius Pilate, the procurator."

A. D. 147. Just. Mart. Dialog. cum. Tripho. "You (Jews) knew that Jesus was risen from the dead, and ascended into heaven, as the prophecies did foretell was to happen."

A. D. 230. Origen Comment. in Matth. p. 230. "This James was of so shining a character among the people on account of his righteousness, that Flavius Josephus, when, in his twentieth book of the Jewish Antiquities, he had a mind to set down what was the cause why the people suffered such miseries, till the very holy house was demolished, he said, that these things befell them by the anger of God, on account of what they dared to do to James the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ: and wonderful it is that he did not receive Jesus for Christ."

A. D. 250. Contr. Cels. lib. i. p. 35, 36. "I would say to Celsus, who personates a Jew, that admitted of John the Baptist, and how he baptized Jesus, that one who lived but a little while after John and Jesus wrote how that John was a baptizer unto the remission of sins: for Josephus testifies in the eighteenth book of Jewish Antiquities, that John was the Baptist, and that he promised purification to those that were baptized. These miseries befall the Jews by way of revenge for James the just, who was the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ, because they had slain him who was a most righteous person."

A. D. 324. Euseb. Demonstr. Evan. lib. iii. p. 124. "Certainly the attestation of those I have already produced concerning our Savior may be sufficient. However, it may not be amiss, if, over and above, we make use of Josephus the Jew for a further witness; when in the eighteenth book of his Antiquities, when he was writing the history of what happened under Pilate, made mention of our Savior in these words: 'Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as had a veneration for truth; he drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles: he was the Christ. And when Pilate at the suggestion of the principal men among us, had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at first did not forsake him. For he appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had spoken of these, and ten thousand wonderful things concerning him."

A. D. 330. Hist. Eccles. lib. i. cap. ii. "Josephus in the eighteenth book of the Antiquities writes thus of John: 'Some of the Jews thought that the destruction of Herod's army came from God, and that very justly, as a punishment for what he did against John that was called the Baptist, for Herod slew him who was a good man, and one that commanded the Jews to exercise virtue both as to righteousness towards one another, and piety towards God, and so to come to baptism.' When Josephus had said this of John, he makes mention also of our Savior, in the same history, after this manner: Now there was about this time one Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, for he was a doer of wonderful works * * * And when Pilate at the suggestion of the principal men among us had condemned him to the cross, those who loved him at the first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, as the divine prophets had foretold." etc.

A. D. 360. Ambrose or Heggesippus de E. cid. Urb. Hierosolym. lib. ii. cap. 12. "We have discovered that it was the opinion and belief of the Jews, as Josephus affirms, that Herod lost his army not by the deceit of men, but by the anger of God, and that justly, as an effect of revenge for what he did to John the Baptist, a just man, who had said to him, 'It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.'"

Josephus also says, that there was at that time a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man, * * * who appeared to his disciples after the third day from his death, alive again, according to the writings of the prophets." etc.

A. D. 400. Hieronym. de Vir. Illustr. in Josepho. "Josephus in the eighteenth book of his Antiquities, most expressly acknowledges that Christ was slain by the Pharisees on account of the greatness of his miracles; and that John the Baptist was a true prophet; and that Jerusalem was demolished on account of the slaughter of James the apostle. Now he wrote concerning our Lord after this manner: 'At the same time there was Jesus, a wise man. * * * And, when by the envy of our principal men, Pilate had condemned to the cross, * * * He appeared to them alive on the third day." etc.

A. D. 410. Isidorus Pelusiota. lib. iv. epist. 225. "There was one Josephus, a Jew of the greatest reputation, and one that was zealous of the law. What then does he say? Now there was about that time, Jesus a wise man. * * * He was the Christ. And Pilate at the suggestion of the principal men among us had condemned him to the cross. * * * He appeared to them the third day alive again as the divine prophets had said." etc.

A. D. 1060. Cedrenus Compend. Histor. p. 196. "But as concerning Christ, Josephus says, that about that time there was Jesus, a wise man. * * * Whom when Pilate had crucified, those who at first loved him did not leave off preaching concerning him, for he appeared to them the third day alive again, as the divine prophets had testified."

A. D. 1080. Theophylact. in Joan. lib. xiii. "The city of the Jews was taken, and the wrath of God was kindled against them; as also Josephus witnesses, that this came upon them on account of the death of Jesus."

A. D. 1120. Zonaras Annal. tom. i. p. 267. "Josephus in the eighteenth book of his Antiquities, writes thus concerning our Lord, now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, * * * he was Christ. And when Pilate, at the accusation of the principal men among us had condemned him to the cross, those that had loved him at first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them the third day alive again, as the divine prophets had said." etc.

A. D. 1170. Got Fridus Viterbiensis p. 366. "Josephus writes thus concerning Christ. There was at this time Jesus, a wise man." etc. (same as above.)

A. D. 1360 Nicephorus Callistus Hist. Eccls. lib. i. p. 90, 91. "Josephus adds that all Herod's army was destroyed, and that that he suffered this on account of the unjust slaughter of John. Moreover he makes mention of his baptism agreeing in all points thereto relating with the gospel."

A. D. 1450. Hardmannus Schedelius Chron. p. 110. "Josephus the Jew, who was called Flavius, a priest, the son of Mattathias, a priest of that nation, a most celebrated historian, * * * who had the highest opinion of Christ."

A. D. 1480. Platina de Vitis Pontificum in Christo. "Flavius Josephus himself, who wrote twenty books of Jewish Antiquities in the Greek tongue, says, 'There was in those days Jesus, a certain wise man. * * * Pilate instigated by the principal men of our nation, had decreed that he should be crucified. * * * He appeared to them the third day after his death alive, as the divinely inspired prophets had foretold."

A. D. 1480. Trithemius Abbas de Scriptor. Eccls. "Josephus the Jew, although he continued to be a Jew, did frequently commend the Christians, and in the eighteenth book of his Antiquities, wrote down an eminent testimony concerning our Lord Jesus Christ."

The above citations not only tend to prove the integrity of the above passage of Josephus, but shows the undoubted continuity of the Bible and the Christian religion from the time its founder was put to death on the cross by order of Pilate, of which he wrote a full account to the Roman government, which was filed away among their state papers. Those papers were frequently referred to by the early Christians in their disputes with the Jews, and in their appeals to the Roman Emperor and Senate. What folly such a procedure would be if such papers did not exist?

I have much more historical evidence of great interest. Those who do not have access to this evidence, would do well to purchase extra copies of The Restitution, and paste in their scrap books for future use.

One Fig Tree.

In The Restitution of Sep. 20th, I noticed an article with the above heading, which I think will bear criticism. Only think of figs growing during a Lebanon winter so as to be ripe in May. And this may appear strange when it is known that the fig tree is very sensitive to frost. I think I have a better explanation of Christ's visit to the barren fig tree. I think the cursing of the barren fig tree is a scenic parable. A parable enacted in part, and brought to view further on.

While I was in Palestine, I had occasion to partake of the hospitalities of a friend at a little village called Irtas, about a mile from Bethlehem; and on the supper table I noticed a plate of something which I thought were figs. As a dessert my host passed me the plate and said, "take some of these." Said I, "what are they?" "They are fig blossoms" said he. Fig blossoms, said I. So he cut one in two cross-wise and said: "don't you see the blossom in the center?" Sure enough, there was something that had the appearance of a blossom. I ate several and thought I could make a meal of them about as well as I could of apples. This was about the first of July. I started from Jaffa on my return home on the sixth of July, and found the same kind of fruit in Palermo on the Island of Sicily

In the account of the cursing of the barren fig tree in Matthew and Mark, they do not say that he came seeking figs, but, "if haply he might find anything thereon." He evidently came to the fig tree seeking fig blossoms "for the time of figs was not yet," but as he did not find even that, the fig tree was cursed.

This parable evidently teaches that in Christ's advent to the Jewish nation, he did not seek for fruit, for it was not the time for fruit, but if haply he might find anything thereon: but of the nation he found nothing but leaves only. So he cursed the national fig tree. "Ye shall not see me henceforth until ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

We will now turn to Matt. xxiv. 32, where the Savior brings this parable again to view. He says, "Now learn a parable of the fig tree," but in the Greek I notice the definite article is used. (Literally,) "From but the fig tree learn you the parable." The Savior evidently referred to a previous parable in regard to the fig tree, and tells the disciples to watch for the tender branches and leaves of the fig tree. "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke xxi. 31.

Was Christ's Mission a Failure?

If it be true that man possesses inherent immortality, then he is not indebted to Jesus Christ for Eternal Life.

If the real man never dies, but consciously exists uninterruptedly after separation from the body, then he is not indebted to Jesus for a resurrection from the dead.

If the real man on separation from the body can enter Heaven, then he is not indebted to Christ for salvation, because Jesus does not reward his followers until the second advent. 1 Pet. v. 4: Rev. xxii. 12: Matt. xvi. 4.

If man goes to heaven immediately after separation from the body, he is not indebted to Jesus Christ for the privilege, because the followers of Christ are to be rewarded on earth. Rev. v. 10; Matt. v. 5. "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth." Prov. xi. 31: Psa. xxxvii. 9-11-18-22-29-34: Prov. ii. 21-22.

If man then is not indebted to Christ for immortality, for resurrection, for salvation, for a future inheritance, or forgiveness of sins what part or interest has he in Jesus Christ or Christ in him? And why do men assume the name of Christians?

The Holy Land.

Major Conder, the well known Palestine explorer, has recently written an article in favor of the Jewish Colonization of the Holy Land. "There is room and to spare for another million of inhabitants," says the writer and he goes on to speak hopefully of there being a large settlement of the Jews in the country in the near future. The following description of the present condition of the Land of Promise will be read with interest:—

"In spite of all that has been written on the subject, the popular conception of the Holy Land seems to be that it consists of sand plains with palm oases, and of barren mountains entirely stony and incapable of cultivation. It is commonly believed that a curse rests on the land, and that thus the rains have failed, and the plains no longer bloom with flowers. The truth is . . . . . that those who have looked down on the glorious carpet of flowers which covers the Jordan Valley in Spring; who have heard the wild doves cooing in the oakwoods of Nazareth, and have seen the roebuck stealing through the glades of Carmel: who have ridden by the mountain brooks of Gilead among the forests of pine and oak; who have seen the corn on the red Sharon and Galilean plains; who have crushed thyme on the Samaritan hills, and sat in the shady gardens where the fig, the olive, the mulberry, the apricot, and many other fruits are grown, well know that the "good land" is a good land still. The curse that hangs over Palestine is the curse of unwise and unjust government. It is the oppression of the peasant that has ruined agriculture, and made a field of thorns of the corn field. The greedy pasha, the unjust judge, and the farmer of taxes have been the instruments of wrath. Nature still offers us corn, and wine, and oil from broad plains and green mountain walls and shady olive groves, but the tithes, the taxes, and the blackmail of the tax-farmer's guards swallow all the profit which an industrious population might gain from their toil."

Language like this from the pen of a prominent English officer is a strong indictment against Turkish administration. Happily the "greedy pasha" and "the unjust judge" will soon be superceded by a different class of rulers. Jesus Christ, having returned to the earth, "will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." Isaiah xi. 12. That being accomplished, he will "reign over them in Zion from henceforth, even for ever." Micah iv. 7. Jerusalem will then be the "City of the Great King,"—Matt. v. 34, 35—and the "throne of the Lord." It was declared at the birth of Jesus that he should ultimately "reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and that of his kingdom there should be no end," —Luke i. 30—and his own promise to his own immediate disciples was that "In the regeneration, when the Son of Man should sit in the throne of his glory, they also should sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28.

"The "curse" of "unjust government" which, Major Conder justly remarks, "hangs over Palestine," will soon be removed; for Jehovah has declared that "like as I have watched over them to pluck up, and to break down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them to build and to plant." Jer. xxxi. 27, 28.

"Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married." Isaiah lxii. 4.

Some people are often found praying because they love to pray; it is the desire of the heart. As a dying man said, who loved to hear people pray, I cannot talk loud but I like to pray. What shall we say of those who do not love to pray neither love to hear others pray and absent themselves from the prayer circle?

On Oct. 8th 1893, at her home in Goodland, Ind., after a lingering and painful illness, Sister Susanna Spinney. Having compassed the allotted three score years and ten.

She was born in Ireland, May 1st 1823, and was married in the Province of New Brunswick to Arthur J. Spinney, Dec. 23, 1841. She was the mother of eight children, five of whom, and the husband survive her, three daughters, and two sons, the eldest, so well and favorably known to the Brotherhood in Ind. Mrs. Wm. Mills, now of Andover, S. D., the second, Mrs. Cones of Chicago, and the youngest daughter, Mrs. Baines, with the two sons Arthur and Charles of Goodland, Ind., all grown up to manhood and womanhood, married, of the highest respectability, and an honor to society.

Deceased with her husband came to Goodland from Kankakee County Ill., in 1875 where they have since resided. During said year she with her husband on hearing the Glad Tidings of Life and Home Eternal, in the renewed earth of promise, to be given through the Christ, responded to the call in hearty obedience, being buried in the likeness of his death, arising to walk in newness of life, in which she continued faithful unto death. Naturally of an extremely modest, and retiring disposition, her religious life was not so much manifested by her much talking, as it was by the more potent language of acts and deeds, which left its impress on all with whom she was surrounded.

The Blessed Hope was her solace through all the weary and painful days of her last illness. Her mortal life work is done, and well done. She now sleeps in Christ.

Her noble and ever faithful companion is now indeed bereft of her dear companionship. But how blessed it is to know that neither he, nor the faithful bereaved children, can mourn as those without hope.

May His coming again, and our gathering together unto him soon be here.

D. T. Halstead.

At Kewanna, Ind., Blanche Singer, daughter of Florrin and Emma Singer. She was born Feb. 26th, 1884, died Oct. 22nd, 1893, aged 9 years, 8 months and 22 days. Appropriate funeral services were held by the pastor at the Christian Church.

"Life is a span, a fleeting hour;
How soon the vapor dies!
She was a tender, transient flower,
That e'en in blooming dies."

The New Testament is one of the smallest of books. One can read it through in a few hours. But it has made a greater stir in the world than any other book. It has contributed more to the improvement of society and the advancement of civilization and the comfort of the afflicted and the happiness of individuals than all other books in the world. It is one of the oldest books extant, and yet it is the freshest of all books. It is read by more people and with a keener relish than any modern production. It has been assailed more bitterly and violently than any other book, many of its enemies declaring and believing that they had killed its influence forever, and yet no other book shows such unmistakable signs of life as it does today. The most potent factor in modern civilization and thought is this little book. No book has been studied and explained and commented on half so much as the New Testament, and yet no intelligent man is so foolish as to claim that he has thoroughly mastered its wonderful lessons. The limits of the treasures of wisdom stored up between its lids are past finding out. It is written by men who, with one or two exceptions, had no opportunities of culture, and it contains a system of human redemption and improvement promulgated by One whose earthly origin was obscure and whose educational advantages were limited, and it is the study, the marvel, and the admiration of the most intelligent and cultivated men of this most enlightened age.—The Christian Advocate.

The readers of The Restitution know full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

The Restitution has been issued each time during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure, some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not able financially to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation, in the last day.

Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles.

"Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears ......Let the nations be wakened and come up to the valley of Jehosaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the nations round about: ......Multitudes, multitudes, in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision,....the Lord also shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem....but the Lord will be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel."—Joel iii. 9-16.

the Truth, God or the Serpent?

You will think this an irreverent, irrelevant and strange question; but notice God said, "Thou shalt surely die" (margin, dying thou shalt die)—Gen. ii. 17: and the serpent said, "Thou shalt not surely die." Chap. iii. 4. "Of course," you will say impatiently, "God told the truth, who will question it?" Have patience. Did it ever occur to you that, according to "orthodox" belief, it was the serpent that told the truth, and not God? You have heard the preacher, speaking of the corpse say, "He is not dead, but gone before," "There is no death, but change," have you not? Now, if when a man is a corpse he is not dead, and if the preacher's words, "There is no death," be true, was not the serpent correct when he said, "Thou shalt not surely die?"

Seeing the "orthodox" preacher and the serpent say the same thing, and that God says the opposite, our question is pertinent; and we put it in this apparently irreverent form to arouse you to reflect and consider a few facts. You have, no doubt, seen a person unconscious -nearly dead, and heard people talk about a dying person as having been unconscious for a long time. Now, what do you think about such a case? Do you believe that persons in such a condition are really unconscious? "Of course I do," you will impatiently answer; and it will, no doubt, occur to you that many persons, after having been unconscious for a long time, have been restored to consciousness. You see, therefore, that it is possible for a person to become unconscious. Now suppose such a one, instead of being restored to consciousness, were to die, would he then be conscious or unconscious? Will your common sense allow you to believe that death restores an unconscious person to consciousness? Can you believe that a person nearly dead may know nothing, but one absolutely dead knows much?

Is a man dead after he has breathed his last breath? If so, God told the truth. If not—if he is still alive, in heaven or anywhere else, the serpent told the truth, and the "orthodox" preacher is right when he says, "There is no death, but change." Which will you believe, God or the serpent and the preacher?

Observation, reason and facts tell us that death is real; but we do not depend upon these alone, because God has spoken. Death, according to the dictionary, is "that state of being in which there is total and permanent cessation of all the vital function; the cessation of life."—Webster.

Death according to the Bible, is the cessation of all the vital functions—the cessation of life.

Proof: "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Psa. vi. 5; "The grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth"—Isaiah xxxviii. 18; "His breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth; in that very day shall his thoughts perish"—Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4. "The dead know not anything. . . . their love, their hatred, and their envy is now perished"—Eccl. ix. 5, 6; "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10.

Does death end all then? you will ask. If it were not for resurrection it would. Proof—"For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised, and if Christ be not raised, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 16-18.

If the serpent's words, "Thou shalt not surely die," are true; and the preacher's words, "There is no death, but change," are true; and if man goes to his reward or punishment at death, there is no need of a resurrection. But seeing the serpent uttered a lie, and God's words, "Thou shalt surely die," are true, the resurrection is so important that apart from it death ends all, apostolic preaching is rendered vain; and there can be no hope of future life. 1 Cor. xv. 14-19.

But death does end all in some cases. If not, what is to become of all the savage tribes that are no more responsible than the beasts? To preserve them in torment would be unjust. To send them to heaven would be equally so; because that would be putting a premium upon savagery. But God's words are true; death in the case of those not responsible ends all.

Proof: "I am as a man that hath no strength, free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more." Psa. lxxxviii. 5. "The army and the power, they shall lie down together; they shall not rise; they are extinct." Isaiah xliii. 17. "They shall be as though they had not been." Obadiah xvi. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave: death shall feed on them." Ps. xlix. 14.

Death does not end all in the case of those who are responsible to law—those who are "just or unjust."

Proof: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." Psa. xlix. 15. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Dan. xii. 2., "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Acts xxiv. 15.

God does not reward the just and punish the unjust from the time they die till the resurrection, and then judge them. That would be inconsistent. If the just could go to their reward at death there is no need of Christ coming to judge them, as Paul says he will. "He shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 1. God "will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life; but unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth . . . indignation and wrath." This is to be "in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." Rom. ii. 6-8, 16.

Seeing it is true that men die and remain in the grave till the resurrection, at which time they are raised to be judged before they are rewarded or punished, we must discard the serpent's lie and cast to the moles and to the bats the preachers' falsehoods, and "Let God be true though all men (even the serpent and the preacher) are liars.

It is foretold in Deut. xxviii. 64, that the Jews should be torn out of Palestine and scattered "among all people from one end of the earth even unto the other." How strikingly is this fulfilled, even today! Jewish authority attests God's truth. Under the head of "The Ubiquitous Jew," the Jewish World says Jews are found in all parts of the world. The writer names Mesopotamia, China, Hindostan, the West Indies, Persia, Tartary, Australia, and the heart of Africa where this scattered people are found, and says they are "in Europe from Norway to Gibraltar, in Africa from Algiers to Good Hope, in Asia from Cochin to Caucassus, and from Jaffa to Pekin." Yes, and the Jews are a constant reminder that Jehovah will not allow sin and rebellion against his laws in any nation to go unrebuked. All the nations of the earth should take warning from the fate of the Jewish nation.—Messiah's Herald.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The time to travel cheaply will be during the Holidays. Special rates on the Nickel Plate Road.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

The Thief on the Cross.

This is the title of a tract that needs no introduction, having been printed in this paper substantially as it appears in the tract. Written by M. Joblin. The design has been to issue this work as cheaply as possible, and sell it as near cost as can be. It makes 16 pages, and the price is placed at one cent each in quantities, the buyer to pay postage. The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents, so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 80 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to Patrons of the Nickel Plate Road. Special Excursion dates Dec. 23-24-25-30-31 and Jan 1st, good returning until Jan. 2nd 94.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Mar[illegible] Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

OUR "LOVE FEAST."

Being letters of greeting from scattered members of the Household of Faith, as suggested by our Brother R. S. Dwiggins.

Dear Brethren:

As it is near Christmas, and seeing that the years are fleeing fast, should we not be up and doing?

I see the signs are thickening up in the Eastern country so much so that it is even alarming many people of the world, and certainly the time is near when we can say, "Blessed be he, whose name is great in all the earth." Then we can say, "Lo this is our God we have waited for Him and he will save us." Brethren, one and all, let us strive to enter into the kingdom of our God, that we may have a right to the Tree of Life. That we can live forever there with angels whose grandeur and glory is eternal. Oh, how I long to be there. To sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets of God. That we can say, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." The eternal age will roll on with no sickness, no pain nor death to enter that country sublime. Where the inhabitants have no need of a physician. Where all is love and joy, and peace forever more. Then we will be satisfied, being like unto our glorious Redeemer, and equal to the angels, not to die any more, while the endless cycles of eternity roll on, we can sing praises unto our God, and to the Lamb. Giving glory and honor to Him that sitteth on the throne of David who will reign over the House of the God of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there will be no end. Brethren, this will be one grand and eternal day, and let us think from this Christmas forward that we will try to gain for ourselves a position in the new earth, to take our place with all who are worthy, when he says, "Come ye Blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," or was prepared for you from the creation had man not sinned.

May God forgive us all our wrongs, and save us, is my prayer.

JOHN BOYD.

Indiana.

Dear Restitution:

As I look out this beautiful Sabbath morning, upon the silently falling snow covering the earth, and every tree and shrub in its coating of white, so pure and clean, speaking to me ever of a loving and merciful Father, and I watch those beautiful feathered objects as they flit and hop about chirping their sweet accents of morning praise to him who has said that "not a sparrow falleth to the ground unnoticed," I can but learn a lesson of trust and confidence, and I cannot suppress a feeling of repentance and gratitude to my Heavenly Father, who has cared for and watched over me these years with such tender and loving mercy.

How ungrateful we mortals are, and how much we really have to be thankful for. More than the birds of the air, who do not think of the morrow and its consequences, more than the lilies of the field, who never have a care for their lovely coating, whose beauty and fragrance has cheered many a discouraged heart, and brightened the path of many a weary traveler.

Could we but realize that we are the recipients of a love, never equaled by a mortal man, not even the mother who gently caresses the little babe upon her breast, and who would willingly give her existence for its life.

Would we but remember that our Savior, that gentle Jesus, willingly and openly to the world, sacrificed his life, which was just as dear to him as ours is to us today, for the purpose of redeeming an ungrateful world and allowing us to gain, once more what we had lost through a tempted and yielding brother, eternal life, a home in the kingdom of God, and a place forever with the Lord.

Let us then, considering all these benefits, "Seek the Lord while he may be found," and "call upon him while he is near." Ever remembering that he will not turn us away empty handed, but will give us a blessing today, and as a reward for our labor, everlasting life.

I love to read the testimonies in THE RESTITUTION of those of like precious faith, for I cannot hear them spoken.

Kindly remember your brother in the faith of the soon coming King.

C. L. AUSTIN.

Michigan.

To the Faithful in Christ:

How are you? How do you do? are but expressions of common salutation. Sometimes with a real desire to know, but more frequently with little thought or care. Used only with reference to physical health and temporal prosperity. But to the faithful in Christ, it means much more than this. Paul to the Philippians says, "That I also may be of good comfort when I know of your state" (by means of Timothy's visit) which state (of affairs) he had previously spoken of in a former part of the letter, saying, "That I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel."

As THE RESTITUTION kindly offers [illegible] as Timothy, to learn of your affairs and make report at Christmas time, I also expect to be of good comfort in hearing the report.

Could I but then hear from all, with whom I have held sweet communion in the years gone by, what a feast of love it would be. But some have made their last report, they sleep in Christ. Others - sad thought - may have fallen away possibly stumbled and fallen over the stumbling block of some professed brother! O, how comforting it is to hear words of love, and feel fully assured of their sincerity, being attested by corresponding acts and deeds. Kind words are comforting in proportion to our confidence in them. Many whose deeds are eloquent, will not be heard by word in this report, possibly because they have noted the discrepancy between word and deed of some poor erring one, whose language was only words. If so, I would say beware that you err not on the other extreme. Words of cheer are comforting - often a true index to the heart. They should go hand in hand. God comforts his children through his Word, having always proven true in the performance of the same. He says, comfort one another with these words. But I would not be so selfish as to eat and drink to satisfaction from your response to the salutation, and then refuse to respond to it myself, at least, while I think some of you may possibly be saying, I would like to know how it is with Bro. Halstead?

I am glad to be able to say to you, the anchor still holds. While I lament the little comparatively I am doing and want of ability to do, still I have a craving appetite, and highly relish gospel food, a goodly portion of which is properly digested and assimilated—am hungering and thirsting after righteousness, hence have hope of being filled. Knowing that "the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Dear Brother, dear Sister, let us settle it once for all, that without righteousness right doing on our part, professions of faith will avail us nothing. It must be so builded up in us as to become the motive power of action. The predominating, ruling power in our life work. Thus, and thus alone does Christ dwell in us. Thus it becomes a faith that works by love. Thus it becomes purifying, and thus the Gospel understood and obeyed becomes to us, "The power of God unto salvation. . . . For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith. The just by faith shall live, for the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness." As the years go by I only feel the more certainty as to the correctness of our understanding of the faith once delivered, containing the great and precious promises of life everlasting and the kingdom of God, to be given through Christ, conditioned on faith and obedience. The Gentile times are nearing their close to be soon superceded by the times of restitution. Are we ready? Be ye ready, is the command of the Master. How? Having on the robe of righteousness. May we be found ready with our lamps trimmed and burning.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed is Express Money Order for $2.00 to apply on my account.

I like THE RESTITUTION very much. Many good things are published every week.

I have been thinking much lately of the importance of believing the Word of God. Jesus told a certain class at one time, "In vain do ye worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments or precepts of men." Now it seems to me, that the cause of all, or nearly all of the divisions among those that profess to be the followers of Jesus is the substitution of the opinions of men for the Word. When the angel Gabriel made the important announcement to Mary, I believe that he meant just what he said. The first part of his message was fulfilled to the letter. Will not the rest of it be just as literally fulfilled?

Let us look at the prophecy, "Thou shalt have a Son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called Son of the Highest." This part all are willing to admit, is to be taken just as it was given, and believed. "And the Lord God shall give to him the throne of his Father David." Oh, some say, that cannot be, for Jesus is reigning in heaven. This very important part of the message must give place to men's opinions.

"And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." O, says one, that means that he shall reign over the church. My dear brother does it say so, or are you substituting your opinion for the Word of God?

I have tried to learn what the Word teaches by careful and prayerful study for many years, and I cannot point to one text of Scripture to prove the theory that Jesus is going to reign over the saints. In the first place he told the twelve apostles that they should sit on twelve thrones. He also promised that the overcomers should sit with him in his throne, and the Apostle Paul makes it very plain that Jesus has chosen his Church to share his glory when he comes to reign. Some may ask, who then are to be the subjects of the kingdom? The Word is very plain on this point, so that we need not err if we follow its teachings.

When God called Abraham, he told him among other things that in his Seed should all the families of the earth be blessed.

We read in Gal. iii. 8, that God preached the Gospel to Abraham, saying, "in thee shall all nations be blessed." We see from this Scripture what the gospel is. That it is the promise of future blessings to all nations through the Seed of Abraham. In the 16th verse of the chapter we see that the promises were not through seeds, as of many, but to thy seed which is Christ. The apostle goes on to the end of the same chapter explaining how all of God's dear Saints become one in Christ. In the 27th verse he tells that by being baptized into Christ, we put on Christ, and in the 28th verse, that ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And then comes that wonderful verse the 29th, the portion of Scripture that let in great light to my poor heart, when I was searching for light on this glorious subject. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. By being baptized into Christ the child of God is in Christ, and being in Christ and partaking of the Sacred Emblems of his body and blood, the bread and wine, he becomes a part of the Seed of Abraham, that is, Jesus the Head, the Saints his body, forms one complete man in Christ. What does the Word teach as to the subjects of this kingdom? We read in both the Old and New Testaments of the glories of the coming kingdom.

I will quote a few texts on this subject.

Daniel says, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve and obey him.

John speaks of all nations coming up to worship before him at the judgment, and of the leaves of the "Tree of Life," being for the healing of the nations. Also, that the nations shall walk in the light of the New Jerusalem.

We do not have to give our opinion as to who will be the subjects of the kingdom. The Word of God tells us that it will be the nations.

I pray that all that profess to belong to Christ, may share in the glories of his kingdom.

I am yours in hope of eternal Life.

Dear Restitution:

Find enclosed $1.60 for the renewal of the paper. I am sorry you had to wait so long for it, but better late than never, they say.

I would like to say a few words through the columns of your valuable paper to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith. I would say I am earnestly contending for that faith once delivered to the saints and the more I read the grand truths, which come to us weekly through the grand old RESTITUTION. It gives me fresh courage to stand on the gospel hope and I want to say in the language of Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." I love to read the letters of testimony from the brethren and sisters scattered over this land of ours. Dear brethren let us be faithful to him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. I believe the time is close upon us when he who said I will come again, will come. We have quite a number of people here professing to believe in the one faith of the gospel, but I am sorry to see some of them so loath to step out from popularity and take a firm stand for truth. Among them is a minister joined in with the Baptists. But I thank God I have heard the call, come out from among them my people. Your brother in hope of eternal life.

To the Household of Faith:

Bro. Dwiggins says he likes to read of the hopes and fears of the scattered ones and suggests we write. Well, I am here in Mound City, Mo. Brother Shellenberger and I are all those that are of like faith at this place. It makes me sorry to hear from the isolated ones for I know some thing of what is it to be alone, but I rejoice when they tell of their determination to stand firm to the end. I have not had the privilege of attending a good meeting since I left Severance, Kansas. When I read of the good meetings being held in the different states, how I long to be with them, and when I read the reports of the work being done, how I rejoice and want to do something too, but I work by the day for a living and at night I am at home with my three children to help them—a boy of seven and two girls twelve and fifteen years of age; but if I cannot speak the Word, I can try and live right and tell the good news to those who will hear and give them papers to read, and thank God that I can do that much.

Now, we say to those that are alone, stand firm, don't give up the hope and when the churches hint that you would have more friends and get along better if you would come with them, tell them that you serve God for the truth's sake. Our Savior did not mean for the church of Philadelphia to go in when he set before them an open door, (Rev. iii. 8,) but to come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues. chap. xviii. 4. Now, scattered ones, let us stand fast, let us hold fast the profession of our faith to the end, for there is a crown of life awaiting us. To those that labor for a living, I know just how you feel, with little or nothing ahead, you feel all down cast and discouraged, like you had not a friend in the world; but God is your friend and he is watching you, so remember that you are running a race and if you keep on the right track and run fairly you will win a crown of life. Courage brother, let no man take thy crown. Rev. iii. 11. Don't conclude that you can reform the world by voting for this man or that, for you cannot do it. The time for you to do that has not come, brother; the world will not be delivered from the bondage of corruption until the sons of God are made manifest. Rom. viii. 19, 21. And to all the rest I say, let us all cling to the rock that is higher than I, and when the sons of God are made manifest we can go forth with our elder brother to bless the nations by giving them a righteous government. O, brother and sister that will be a glorious age, no more sorrow, nor death. Brother and sister, let us press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 13. Your brother in hope of eternal life.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I want to join this Christmas Love Feast. The idea is a good one. I hope we shall hear from many dear ones though we may be scattered over all this good land of ours. My poor little letter I expect will be rather late, as I live in far off Oregon. Although so far from the home of my childhood, I can say that I have not hung my harp upon the willow, but that I can sing the Lord's song in a strange land. I am looking forward to the time when the glad news which the angels sang will be verified, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will to man." When we reach that time we shall know as we are known. We shall not then see through a glass darkly, but face to face. Now, we know in part, but then we shall know all the goodness of God, and praise his name for ever. What a blessed assurance we have that Jesus is able to forgive us our sins if we only ask him in faith believing; but if we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us. But if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. When the angel appeared to Mary he told her that she should bring forth a son, that she should call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins; but this must be true, if they would be saved they must come unto him, for he said in a certain place, He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out. In another place he said, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." But as I know that these letters must be brief, I will close with a Christmas greeting to all and a wish that an endless life in the Kingdom of God may be the reward of those that diligently seek for it. Yours in the blessed hope.

Dear Restitution:

As there has been a general call for a short contribution from as many of the Brothers and Sisters as feel disposed, so that all may have a Christmas Love Feast that take our beloved RESTITUTION. It is a feast to me to read a column or a part of one. What will it be to have our paper full? Far better to me than all the turkeys. Brethren, how thankful we should be that our eyes have been opened, our ears unstopped, and our understanding enlightened by the good news of the Kingdom, while there are thousands upon thousands groping their way in darkness, that if they were shown the light would gladly embrace it as we did. Let us help them. As we are near the door of the new year, we might add a resolution that we will live nearer to Christ and do more for his cause for 1894 than ever before. I have often thought if I was a millionaire how I would make THE RESTITUTION buzz and I would make the preachers get, and if they looked back, I don't know but that I would try to turn them into a pillar of salt. But I would feed and clothe their families. Then they would have no desire to look back. But perhaps we may be thankful that we are poor, if we are only rich in faith I think that would suit us best. Then we would be heirs of the Kingdom, that would be worth more than all the millionaires are worth combined. Brethren let us first seek for the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and trust him for the balance.

I once knew how good it was to live where the Gospel was preached: but here in Indianapolis we have no lack of preaching, but if it was boiled down the bottom of the pot would be bare of Gospel. But I will sing praises to my god while I have any being. Because I have been made to understand the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Brothers and Sisters, pray for me that I may ever be found faithful to the cause we all so dearly love. My prayer is that we may all meet in the Kingdom, and have a better Love Feast than these letters will make. Your brother.

To the Brethren and Sisters in Christ, Greeting:

First of all, we thank God for this opportunity of meeting with those of like faith, in this grand "Love Feast," and, whether our Blessed Savior was born in Bethlehem of Judea on the 25th day of Dec., it matters not, one thing is sure, we are hastening on as fast as time can fly, (and it seems to fly very fast of late,) to our eternal home. Another year has almost rounded out, and Christmas is just upon us to remind us, not only of the advent of our Blessed Savior, but that "time and tide wait for no one."

Brethren, have we been faithful to our loving Master in all things? Have his loving arms been around us? Have we been about our Father's business? Have we tried our best to do his holy will? How stands our account? Brethren, let us not be deceived, Jesus is soon coming to gather his waiting ones home. Are we ready? It is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our redemption drawing nigh.

Be faithful, brethren, in love and good works. Let us not sleep as others, but let us watch and be sober, this is no time for idle scorning. Let us be up and doing, that we may meet in that glad day, when Jesus comes to reign. Amen.

Pray for me that my faith fails not.

Editor Restitution:

I have read Bro. Dwiggins' suggestions in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 6th and will cheerfully contribute my mite. I entered the Lord's vineyard many years ago and I am thankful that I have had the privilege to labor in his service. I have not felt at liberty to stand leaning against the wall with hands folded, consoling myself with the thought that I have not plucked one cluster of grapes from the vines nor tasted of the delicious fruits. And though my burdens have not been heavy nor my labors grievous, yet by times I have been negligent in my duties and have wavered out of the established paths and have received reproofs and have suffered chastenings; but we are told that the Lord of the vineyard will soon return to reward his servants. Then won't we have a jubilee? Yours in hope and love.

J. B. CRATON.

P. S. We have moved from Council Grove, Kan., to Fair Haven Springs, Vernon Co., Mo., and we invite all who can of like precious faith to call and see us.

Editor Restitution:

Please find enclosed, $3.50 of which apply $2.00 on my subscription to THE RESTITUTION, the other $1.50 to make glad some poor person, by sending the paper to them one year.

I am glad of Bro. Dwiggins' suggestion to make one copy of our paper a "Love Feast." Surely we need words of encouragement and good cheer sent along the "lines" of this little army oftener than we receive them. Each testimonial of our love and gratitude to Him that has loved us, and our faith and hope of the bright future and the soon coming of our dear Lord to be King and Ruler of this beautiful, though sin cursed earth, is sure to send a gleam of sunlight to some comrade's pathway, and make him feel stronger to bear the worries and trials of this fleeting life.

Opportunities of this sort will not be offered long, and if we want to hear the glorious [illegible] say, "well done," we must look about us to make sure that no members of his body suffer through our neglect.

A box of cut flowers, we suppose from Bro. Geischman, and evidently from a warm country came to our hands on Christmas day. The last few days here have been warm, but not the season for such bloom as this box contained. To the sender we give our thanks and kind remembrance.

THE flood is here—the flood of letters that Bro. Dwiggins spoke of—and it is impossible to get all into this one issue. We will therefore continue them in next issue. Reports from Bros. Wagoner, Hatch, Foore, Cady, Humphreys and others are here for insertion. Also series articles by Bros. Jones, Wilson, Eychaner and Gardner. Thanks, brethren, we will put them in as fast as possible. This "Love Feast" is a pleasing change to many as the interest manifested will testify. We even cut our editorial short to make room for these letters of greeting.

To the loved ones scattered abroad:

I am very glad to greet you at this Christmas time and rejoice with you that Jesus was born and thus a way was made whereby we may be saved.

[In explanation of the letters from Brother and Sister Wince, it may be necessary to say that their house was burned with most of its contents, the morning of Dec. 10, 1893. Letters that were ready to be mailed were burned. We give a part of Bro. Wince's private letter herewith.—ED.]

Dear Brother & Sister Underwood:

Your letter of inquiry and anxious solicitude about our misfortune came to hand. Our home so dear to our hearts as a home of love, peace and plenty, and rendered doubly dear by its sacred associations with the past is in ashes. Last Sunday morning about six o'clock Mrs. W. discovered flames blazing out in the parlor. The neighbors were summoned and assisted heroically to save the household goods and furniture, the greater part of which were saved, toward the last, at considerable risk of safety. We estimate the loss of valuables, including contents of the cellar at $200, but not including the library. The value of this we make no attempt to estimate as it contained in addition to many new books of great worth, many old and rare books, some with the must of centuries upon them; these and many other volumes out of print and consequently beyond our power to replace even if we had the means in hand. Perhaps some of them could be found in collections of old books. Our scrap books, the result of precious spare hours of [illegible] and painstaking on the part of dear wife, containing many rare gems of thought in both prose and poetry, including father Chaplin's writings for the press, covering many years of reading and research, went up in the flames. There is no security of things in this age of change and destruction. Roxana is still suffering from over-exertion, and from inhaling smoke. We are getting comfortably fixed in our new quarters. Wm. Clover tendered us a vacant house on his place. For these, and all other blessings spared to us we feel very thankful to our Father in heaven and thank [illegible] that our trouble is no worse.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN L. WINCE.

Indiana.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:

The letter first written for our social meeting paper "went up in the fire." We have been put in the crucible by our dear heavenly Father, may he grant that we come out pure gold, fit for the master's use.

"Sweet Brier Cottage," the sacred home of my beloved father and mother, rendered doubly dear by many a hallowed gathering of the dear saints of God, has been consumed by the flames; but—it is only for a little while that we shall be homeless.

> "We're looking for a city,
> When Eden is restored,
> A city of foundations,
> Whose builder is the Lord."

And that city—"those mansions bright and fair," will be eternal. I went through the exciting scene thinking, "It will only be a little while until Jesus comes," and I shall have my new and heavenly home. I was glad to think that some things were laid up where the flames could not reach them. I am ever so much richer now, than I would have been had I spent my Father's money to please my eyes, instead of giving it for saving the [illegible] ones.

It is sad to lose our precious books, dear to our hearts almost as life. [illegible] and helpers with us in [illegible] the gospel of the grace of God to others, but we must bear the loss as best we can. We need the books in our work, in our writing and in our teaching; but we have the one Book left, and it is worth all the rest, though the pennings of many a saintly hand was strength and sweetness to us in our onward way.

The last nine months spent in our home have been especially happy ones. The dear little Sunday school was growing in numbers and in interest, the last session numbering eighteen pupils, and the day of the fire, new ones were coming, and many had already gathered to start when the news came to their ears of the fire. It was one of my first thoughts, "what now will become of the school?" O, pray for me that my work be not hindered, for surely the dear Lord has some yet to be gathered, who will wear the crown in the kingdom.

My last evening in father's old study room was a blessed one, I read aloud from the Sermon on the Mount and talked delighted of its precious things as I went along, then I knelt and commended our little household to our heavenly Father's care. He did care for us, for none of us were harmed. And now let me say as I close, we are nearing the end, we have already entered into the time of trouble. Let those who would be delivered, be careful of their walk and conversation. Do not forget that the gospel is intended to purify the life. God has given us directions for our conduct, let us heed them. And above all let us not forsake the house of God. We help ourselves when we try to help others by exhorting them in the place of prayer. We must not forget that it is God himself who commands us to meet together. I use the words with a full understanding of what they imply, He commands, we cannot but obey. If we wilfully absent ourselves from his house we shall lose eternal life. Read the chapter carefully, and see if I am not in the right. It is not a small thing, when a soldier [illegible] out of the ranks [illegible] at his peril, and [illegible] his place others [illegible] watching his steps! [illegible] may, if one [illegible] refuse to enlist [illegible] stand in the [illegible] the foe.

Yours, [illegible] of the new [illegible] new home, [illegible]

[illegible]

P. S. [illegible] home, in St[illegible] burned. [illegible] morning [illegible] til Tuesday [illegible] it was [illegible] and Saturday [illegible] ney had [illegible] they often [illegible] ing caught [illegible] could [illegible] thing [illegible] after [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] as if it were in the lumber room over head and we supposed a [illegible] had knocked something down. [illegible] night I heard something fall that sounded [illegible] again Saturday night, both [illegible] just after I had gone to bed. [illegible] last time I said to myself, "I do wonder if some one has slipped up stairs and set my house on fire," but there was no [illegible] and no sign of anything wrong up stairs or down, so I dismissed my fears. Saturday morning [illegible] I wood [illegible] just before [illegible] up and told "Don" about it, but we could find nothing wrong, and those still wasnoes [illegible] he went away [illegible] all was [illegible] and nothing more was thought of the matter until Sunday morning about six o'clock, when I went to call Miss Dow to breakfast, and heard the plaster fall in the parlor, ran in, and found [illegible] about half a yard [illegible] I threw water both [illegible] ran above, and threw five or six pails full, ran down into the [illegible] room and threw [illegible] plaster clear across the [illegible] already [illegible] ways for help. Mrs. Clover rang the bell for other neighbors [illegible] the flames were then blazing from the south part of the house [illegible] and we could do no more [illegible] to save our things. From the time the neighbors got there, it was probably not more than fifteen or twenty minutes until we could not get in the house. It had caught up stairs by the chimney, where there was no chance for the air to get to it, until it had worked down to the middle of the bedroom, where there was a crack in the plaster. All our seeds, clover, sweet and field corn, [illegible] boxes, super[illegible] foundation, extractors, scales [illegible] were burned, with many other [illegible] things. There was only [illegible] able to do much, and [illegible] others [illegible] could help a little. [illegible] they saved the most of the dishes, but we are very thankful for having as much left as we have. We are so much better off than thousands of others. Not a murmuring thought fills our breasts. God give us grace never to repine.

Dear Restitution:

I have been reading my paper of Dec. 6th, and as Brother R. S. Dwiggins has asked for a Love Feast of letters at Christmas time, I would like to add my mite, as I never hear a sermon of my belief, I do the next best thing that I can. I live in the country, but sometimes go to town and attend services at the different churches. I give the people something to study whenever I get a chance. I can hardly sit still and hear the plain Word twisted into such shape, and yet, I have heard it all my life.

I believe now is the time that we are to be found watching and waiting. How I would like to do something for the cause of Christ if I was able. I see many ways of doing good but have a small supply of this world's goods, but my faith leads me to believe that if I am faithful in this life, I shall gain an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away reserved in heaven for us.

I love to read the letters in THE RESTITUTION from the brothers and sisters, sometimes from someone that I have known personally, and others through our good paper.

My prayer is, that I may so live as to meet you all in the Kingdom.

MRS. L. W. CUMMINS.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I will write you a few lines through our good paper. I wish you all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. I pray that each one may be found discharging their duty fearlessly as the old year draws to a close and the new year is ushered in. I often wish I [illegible] with the brethren of [illegible] how much good it would [illegible] would help me [illegible] rejoicing [illegible] we [illegible] to render an account [illegible] Master. But each [illegible] to assemble [illegible] together, admonish, encourage and build each other up, speaking words of cheer, giving to each the right hand of fellowship. It helps to [illegible] our labor in our Master's cause, it strengthens us for [illegible] warfare, helps us to endure [illegible] and become better soldiers. Brethren, let us all start anew in the [illegible] warfare, all work more fervently, more diligently in our Master's vineyard working till time, that when our Lord comes he will find us awake, having our [illegible] trimmed and burning; and [illegible] continually watching and waiting, studying to show ourselves to be workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the truth, that we may have a good account to give of the talent entrusted to our keeping. Dear friends, we will not have long to wait, our Lord will soon be here, it will be but a short time until our pilgrimage will be over. Oh, then may we hear the Savior say, well done thou good and faithful servant, for blessed are they that wash their robes that they may have the right to come to the tree of life, and may enter in by the gates into the city. Pray for me, that I may be ever found walking in the straight and narrow way that leads to life. Brethren, my prayer is, that we may all have on the wedding garment, all have fought the good fight, have kept the faith, and so receive the crown. And be assured if we ever obtain the crown of life we will ascribe to [illegible] the praise. Your brother in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

I read your paper with great interest and wish that I could meet with more people of the same faith. As I am writing, at a late hour in the evening, I hear the laughter and boistrous talking and scuffling of drunken men in the street. I feel as though we need more of the gospel, or what we have preached in a different way. I wish every one who reads this paper would pray earnestly that we may soon have a minister here to preach the truth as it is in God's Word. I am hoping for that, still, in spite of all the hard times we have much to be thankful for. I feel as though I want to join in this Love Feast you have written about.

> [illegible]
> Will [illegible] through the blackest sky,
> O help me strive and live and pray,
> Keep nearer to [illegible] each day,
> And when earth's light grows faint and dim,
> Sleep [illegible] with him.

I have not written all I want to say, but for fear this will be crowded out I will close. Yours in the blessed hope of life eternal when our Lord shall come.

Tath. Household of Faith:

I profess to be a member of God's family by faith: waiting the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; when we shall be children indeed, by a resurrection from among the dead, or better still by a glorious change from mortality to immortality; and we trust and heartily believe that we are making no empty profession. For this reason do we avail ourselves of the privilege of not only becoming a partaker of this feast [illegible] also of contributing our mite in the direction of making it [illegible] the poor and [illegible]

If we have [illegible] those brothers and sisters [illegible] to read their short [illegible] read of [illegible] accomplished for the Master, of trials and temptations overcome, of faith strengthened of hopes and fears, of joys and sorrows, it shows our interest in and love for [illegible] other, and by this "we know [illegible] we have [illegible] because we love [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] our Father which is in heaven. I can truly say with the apostle "My delight is in the law of God after the inward man." [illegible] there is nothing that gives me such good pleasure [illegible] that [illegible] bless [illegible] and in trying to obey [illegible] doing my best, when I see how far [illegible] I come of the glory of God I am ashamed. But [illegible] we do not trust more implicitly in him; pray and work in harmony with our prayers according to the best light received from his blessed Word; knowing this, that he is able to bring us off conquerors through the blood of him that loved us.

The Church of God here at [illegible] over consists of twenty members, more or less I know not. God knoweth. We meet together every Sunday and listen to the preaching of the Word by Bro. Hatch, who knows how to present it that a child might understand. We hear him pray and attend to the breaking of bread every fourth Sunday, and if that is all God requires of us, we are doing well. But the nobleman when he went into the far country gave to each one of his ten servants his pound, and said, occupy till I come. We are occupying, but I fear that too many [illegible] have our pound laid up in a napkin, waiting our Lord's return. I hope not. I have prayed that it may not be so. The prayers that go up to God in secret from our little band; the tears that are shed; the heart-yearnings for a better state of things, no one but God knows. Hoping that we may use our Lord's money in such a way that we shall hear that, "Well thou good servant, because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." I am yours in hope.

Dear Restitution:

I am glad you suggested the grand idea of a testimonial Love Feast. I hope your paper will be crowded to overflowing. I love the paper, it makes the Bible read so plain, and draws me nearer to my God. I am fifty-five years of [illegible] and have been a professor of religion all my life and a reader of the Bible; but did not understand its meaning.

About six years ago the Seventh-day Adventist denomination came here. Although I could not be reconciled to the Seventh-day; still I saw they had many grand truths of the Bible; but I thank the dear Lord, he has given me more light through your paper. Praise the Lord! I long for his coming and kingdom to be set up on earth; what good news. I want to be ready and waiting. Pray for me.

Dear Household of Faith:

Oh, how this promise should buoy us up, strengthen and encourage us, amid the changing scenes of this changeful life. It is the hope of the gospel which prospects the future, and like a telescope sweeps across the fair, blue sky of the heavenly Paradise. It is indeed an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast.

Blessed be the Lord, he is my strength, my shield, my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort, and although the way be rough, Jesus says he will never leave, or forsake those that [illegible] their trust in him.

Dear Restitution:

Brothers and sisters scattered abroad greeting. Christmas greeting. I feel this morning like I would love to shake glad hands with all of the [illegible] faith. As this is a day of making merry and rejoicing, let us fellow travelers to the kingdom [illegible] the him for whom this day [illegible] and be ready and waiting to hail him back to earth again not as the babe of Bethlehem, but King of kings and Lord of lords. I can say this [illegible] that I am trying to serve [illegible] I may be weak and I am afraid I do not let my light shine out to those around me as I should, [illegible] I am determined by his grace not to lose sight of the beautiful city that is promised to all his faithful children. If we could keep the eternal city and the crown of rejoicing and the precious promises before us, they would shine out through trials and troubles of this life that we may not be overcome by them. Brothers and sisters, let us all do all the good we can in the world, life is short, and there are dear fellow ones around us, give them a kind word, it may be the means of saving them. Hoping we all will meet on the eternal shores of bliss, will close.

Dear Restitution:

It is with my heart filled with love for the brothers and sisters in Christ that I take the present opportunity to address the Household of Faith, through our dear [illegible] paper, and let them know how we are progressing here in [illegible] We have met every first day for Bible class and to partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our dear Savior, who gave his life for a dying world; and to strengthen each other in the glorious gospel, as we see the day of redemption is drawing nigh. For the last three months we have had Brother Thomas from Pittsburg to speak once a month for us, and it rejoices us to listen to glowing words as they come from a mind filled with the knowledge of our Savior's words to poor fallen man. As we listened I thought if it cheered us so much here to hear the Word made plain, what must it be to gain the kingdom, and see the good of all ages, and most of all to meet Jesus who has done so much for us. I trust that all who have taken his precious name upon them may stand firm in the faith, and at last when trials and scoffing are over, that we may enter through the gates into the city of our God, there to rest from all sorrows, is the wish of your sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

As Bro. Dwiggins has proposed a Christmas Love Feast, I thought I would write a few lines to the dear ones of the one faith to let you know that a few here in the far west are still striving in our weak way to serve our Master.

Paul says, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

I could not think of getting along without our paper. The good letters of exhortation from brothers and sisters throughout the land cheer and encourage us, and make us feel more and more like striving for that dear home where sorrow and trouble can never enter.

Yours, [illegible] for the Master,

Dear Restitution:

Being isolated from all of like faith, having not the privilege of meeting with any of you, we feel a sense of loneliness when the Lord's day comes, though we know the Lord is everywhere, and especially abides in the hearts of all his children. We have learned to feed upon his Word, and thereby to drink in his Spirit, which gives us comfort and assurance under all circumstances. We love to read the words of all the children, if they are in harmony with the record given by prophets and apostles, and by the Son of God himself.

It is truly painful to see divisions among our teachers, believers of the Gospel of the kingdom, as we love them and feel that harmony should prevail among them, and they ought to see "eye to eye," especially concerning the fundamental doctrine of the Word of God. We rejoice to know, to be believing, there is a time, not far distant, when the watchman will see "eye to eye," yea; "when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

We enjoy so much reading of the precious seasons you have at your conferences, and wish it were our privilege to be with you, and take part in your worship; but it is otherwise ordered. [illegible] we will try [illegible] help of [illegible] life, that [illegible] Great As- [illegible] of the [illegible] God, the [illegible] east, west [illegible] kindred [illegible] and one Lord and [illegible] God. We sometimes feel because of evil-doers, but we are commanded not to fret on account of them and the [illegible] is given [illegible] they shall soon [illegible] down [illegible] grass, and wither [illegible] And [illegible] "For [illegible] cut off, but [illegible] the Lord, [illegible] earth. For [illegible] the wicked [illegible] and it [illegible] meek shall [illegible] and delight [illegible] abundance of peace." [illegible] can [illegible] profess, among [illegible] stumble [illegible] and preach that the righteous inherit [illegible] and the wicked go into [illegible] torments. How thankful we should be that God has opened our eyes to see the truth concerning the nature of man, and has shown us whither they are tending, [illegible] to the grave, and that without a resurrection they will sleep on forever. He has shown us that in [illegible] alone [illegible] hope of future life, not in [illegible] immortality. If we [illegible] did our [illegible] mortality be- [illegible] Does not [illegible] perfect [illegible] that he not [illegible] the [illegible] mortal [illegible] offered? But thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

I feel sorry to see the letter drawer so neglected. You who have the privilege of meeting every Lord's day, can exhort one another by word of mouth, but do not forget there are many lonely, isolated ones who do not have that opportunity; and let us hear from you often through the paper.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." May we all be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last day.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

The year 1893 is nearing its close. When I look back and take an account of the way the year has been spent, as regards myself, I ask myself the question, have I lived in accordance with the rule that has been laid down in God's Holy Book? Have I done all that I might have done in the way of furthering the cause of our blessed Master, who gave his life for us? When I realize the great suffering he underwent on our account, it makes me feel [illegible] I had not [illegible] done. My health [illegible] year has been very poor [illegible] month or [illegible] done but little [illegible] to [illegible] that [illegible] Since [illegible] RESTITUTION of Dec. 6th, has come to hand and in looking over it my eyes fell on Bro. Dwiggins' article, and I was well pleased. How it will fill our hearts with pleasure to read the testimonies of the faithful ones, telling of their joys and sorrows. It makes me feel sorrowful to read of dear ones that are not able to pay for our dear paper. There are many that are well able to give of their abundance, and if they do not spend some of their Lord's money in relieving those that are needy, what will the Master say to them? Inasmuch as ye have not done it to one least of these, my brethren, ye have not done it unto me. What a fearful saying! May we all so order our lives and conversation that we may hear that welcome saying, well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord.

Dear Restitution:

I received your invitation to a Love Feast in THE RESTITUTION'S last issue. I gladly respond though I am not much given to speaking in meetings, I only ask the lowest seat. I know it will be good to be there.

I have feasted from your pages; they have been a solace for me for many years. I should feel lonely without its weekly visits. It reminds us the time is short. We must be vigilant in the Master's cause. May we all strive to double our diligence in the cause of truth and unity, do more good, pray more during the coming new year, and so make an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God's dear Son, is my prayer.

Editor Restitution:

In accordance with the suggestion of R. S. Dwiggins, in having an old fashioned, Christmas Love Feast through the columns of our most excellent paper THE RESTITUTION, of all, or as many as desire to avail themselves of the privilege, who are watching and waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, permit me to add my testimony in behalf of this the grandest of all events to earth and man, and more especially to the espoused bride, the church of the first-born, whom he hath purchased with his own blood, who will obtain a glorious deliverance from the power of darkness, being sanctified, cleansed and washed by the blood of the Lamb and presented to himself a glorious church; but should be holy and without blemish, then to receive the reward of faithful continuance in well doing—glory, honor, immortality, eternal life in the kingdom of God's dear Son. In that grand and glorious day when the saints of God of all ages shall, amid the glories of immortality in the pavilion of the saint's eternal house, rejoice forever more in the salvation of God, being redeemed from the corruptible and transitory things of this earthly life and from the power and dominion of death, and have received an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. What a glorious hope to those who have accepted the Word of the kingdom and have realized the richness of his grace and have obeyed from the heart the gospel of our salvation, being baptized unto the One Spirit and body. What tongue can describe the joys of the way-worn pilgrims of earth after having filled up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ passed forever beyond the trials, tribulations and persecutions of this present evil world, and to hear the welcome tones of the voice of Jesus, saying, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Then, dear brethren, having this hope, soon to be realized, stand firm and steadfast, for who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword, or the scornful jeering of a godless world? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. Nay verily, neither death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. What a glorious hope, therefore, let us labor on, being faithful to the trust committed unto us, for soon will Jesus come. Oh, what rejoicing then, what a grand reunion then of the pure, the good, the holy. One congregation assembled in the eternal kingdom of Jesus, never more to separate, eternally freed from the cares of this world. For God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them and lead them unto living fountains of water. To be made kings and priests and become associated with him in his glorious reign over all nations, tongues, kindreds and people in the ages to come, is a position, dear brethren, too grand and glorious to lose. Let us then strive with our might toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

R. H. SHERRILL.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

How can any one let this Love Feast pass by without partaking of it? Indeed, I feel it a great privilege to be able to contribute my mite in a few words of love for the Master.

I am at present quite a distance from our own church and probably will not get to attend it any more until spring. But God be praised, I have the privilege of casting my cares upon Jesus and learning the Word of God from that blessed book, the Bible. In my weakness my Lord has given me strength. In my sorrow, he is my comfort. When temptations hover round, he helps me overcome them. I can say for myself that I am trying to walk in that straight and narrow path that leadeth unto life. Dear ones remember me in your prayers. I would like to meet you all face to face, but as that is impossible I will say, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Dear Restitution:

When reading the suggestion by Bro. Dwiggins in this week's issue of THE RESTITUTION, I seemed to wonder why all the readers of that valuable paper did not simultaneously make the same request, but, as he is pioneer in expression, of this I am assured, all will in thought if not by pen thank him for the suggestion, and also the Management for their consent to the devotion of a whole issue for its report. I doubt not, with the latter, the suggestion will extend to the desirability of stereotyping the plates for subsequent issue and sale, for distribution by its sundry readers. The solitary condition of many of the brethren almost indicates the isolated thought of the prophet. Rom. xi. 8. But such a sheet of testimony as proposed would veto the thought in the minds of the reserved but scattered forces of the giant strides of antichrist in its multifarious forms.

In these portentous times it is refreshing to know that all are not bowing the knee to the image of Baal. Carlyle whom you quote is supposed to have been tinctured with Voltairism, but the quotation of his given, would indicate a closer and deeper acquaintance with, and belief in Bible doctrines than is possessed by very many of his strongest opponents. What means the experiences of to day consonant with his suggested expressed thought? The naval and military coquetry among the nations, under the guise of peace? Is not this bringing to pass 1 Thess. v. 3? Also, the rapid increase and growth of communism—assuming the deadly form of anarchism, with its thunder rumblings throughout the continent of Europe? The unrest arising from commercial depression among all nations creating conflict between capital and labor, so manifest in numerous strikes and consequent dire distress. And, also the frequent earthquakes with its multiform calamities, and continuous rumors of war? I ask—are not these indications, with their sequence, sufficient to arouse us, who have awakened to gospel light, to the consideration of deep practical thought and action in view of approaching events. Heb. x. 24-25. How often we are confronted with the thought, what can we individually do amid the surges of the rushing of the day? I am convinced but comparatively little beyond the formation of character, which after the pattern of Christ will be more effective in our immediate neighborhoods than words. It does not fail in the exercise of these as opportunity affordeth as he or she strives to illustrate his or her new life in their sphere of commercial and social experience as a life of example. I am convinced the time is short, prophetic declarations too numerous to quote in limited space are thickening around us, and wrapt in these contemplations we would not lose sight of our many obligations. We are daily the subjects of our heavenly Father's care, and recipients of his bounty and mercy, but especially for the light of the gospel which has dawned upon us. May we be found faithful to the trust in the exercise of family and social duties, that those intrusted to our care may be led by our faith and example (as in the case of our late Brother Cotton of Indianapolis) to embrace the gospel and thus exemplify family faith and unity in the hope set before us, and in our social intercourse and enjoyments, never to forget the Christ, but that our relationship to him in our general deportment and conversation may savor of his life, and prove unmistakably that we have been with Jesus and learnt of him to the extent, that others seeing in us the reflection of his character may be led to glorify God and thus resound to his praise. Fearing I have already trespassed on space I conclude with the prayer

"Lord help us to build each other up,
Teach us ourselves to prove,
Increase our faith, confirm our hope,
And perfect us in love."

Yours in Israel's hope,

J. T. SHAVER.

Dear Restitution:

Having received a copy of THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 6th containing Bro. Dwiggins' proposal of a Christmas Love Feast, I am much impressed with the idea and consider it the duty of all Christians to cheer and exhort one another and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Heb. x. 25.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. (Heb. x. 23.) for to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii. 21.

Christ said to his disciples, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake, rejoice and be exceedingly glad for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets before you. Matt. v. 11, 12.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. iv. 17.

May the Lord's greeting when he comes to his kingdom, be to us, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou wast faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter now into the joys of thy Lord," (Matt. xxv. 23,) is the humble prayer of a sister in the Faith.

IDA I. SHAFFER.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I have no desire to refuse to tell what God has done for me. I wish that I were able, but no words of mine can express all I feel of thankfulness and praise for all his gracious and wonderful ways to me and to all the children of men. I feel glad to know that if we are faithful to the end our tongues and hearts will be tuned to his praises and eternity will not be too long in which to learn and tell the story. Oh, he is faithful, he is true, not one of his promises can fail, and full of love and mercy. Dear halting ones outside the fold, why do you wait? Oh, believe him, put yourself and all you have into his hands. There alone can you be safe. Dear brothers and sisters, be strong and of good courage, fear not, be faithful. Let the memory of past deliverance and mercy make you strong for the future. Let us love one another with pure hearts fervently, and pray one for another. Let us be diligent and strive to do what we can while we may. The time is evidently short and our Master near. May he find us watchful and faithful, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

ALICE ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

As I sit alone this beautiful Sunday evening while my husband is away preaching "The Word of Life" to hungry people, and our children, Pauline and Kate, are asleep, my thoughts are turned to the "Christmas Love Feast."

Dear brothers and sisters, I am glad to meet with you, and I can say I rejoice in the hope of the gospel, and I wish to live better each day, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We are to know Jesus [illegible] to study his character. He says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." We should grow better on our Christian journey, for I realize that the chosen ones will be those who have attained nearer to the character of Christ. Because we believe the gospel and have been baptized, we must not expect salvation if we do not work in his vineyard and live up to the commandments. I have entered the school of Christ and I want to climb higher and work my way through that I may enter the kingdom.

ANNA B. EVERANER.

P. S. I much like the articles of Brother and Sister Woodward in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 6. I wish there were more of them. What we need most is personal holiness, personal consecration and personal responsibility. My prayer is, that we may wake up to that fact and seek to attain.

Dear Restitution:

I am glad of the opportunity of giving my testimony on the Lord's side. I have learned the truths of the Bible, and know in order to put on Christ I must be baptized; and intend doing so at the first opportunity. I love the Lord and want to be ready and waiting for him when he comes to make up his jewels. Pray for me, that he will enable me to fulfil all his laws and ordinances. Yours in hope of eternal life.

LOTTA FORSYTH.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

As we have been granted the privilege of speaking to each other through the columns of our good paper, I am very glad the brother thought of having such a Love Feast, for it will indeed, be a feast to read the testimony of the brothers and sisters. I put on Christ by baptism five years ago, and O how grand it is to understand the gospel of the kingdom as taught by Christ Jesus. How it strengthens us in times of sadness and sorrow to have the promise of that glorious kingdom when Jesus comes, if we do his will. God grant that I may prove faithful. God bless each brother and sister and may we soon meet in his kingdom.

ELLA T. KNOWLES.

Dear Restitution:

To all the brothers and sisters scattered abroad, Christmas greeting. Dear ones in Christ, I will drop my small mite into THE RESTITUTION. As I write my mind runs out to dear brethren east, west, north and south, whom I have met in other days and with whom I have held sweet fellowship. And as I think of the living; in sadness do I remember the dear sleeping ones that are resting from their labors. Oh, how sweet the resurrection morn seems when we think of meeting our Father's family all together. Jesus said, "I came to seek and to save that which was lost," so what ever was lost through Adam will be saved through Christ. Herein is the great love of God manifested. Oh friends, amidst the darkness of these days, let us keep close to our chart that our hearts may not be led away. May the glories of the future shine out before us and beckon us on to joys immortal. The gathering time will soon come and robed in splendor will all who sleep in Jesus come forth; no more to die, but to live on the new earth when the glory of God and the Lamb shall be the light thereof. Until then, dear brothers and sisters, adieu. May God keep you in his loving care, is the prayer of your sister.

HANNAH PROSSER.

United to Christ.

On Sunday, Dec. 17, I had the pleasure of baptizing into the saving name of Jesus, Miss Cora Elvey, the youngest daughter of our beloved Brother and Sister Charles and Fannie Elvey.

Our young Sister is out of health and starts this week in company with an older sister for California to try the effect of the climate.

May our Heavenly Father bless the means used to restore her to health.

Cora was always a good girl, is much loved by all who know her. She loves the truth, and we all know she will honor it by a correct walk in life.

I trust before long other young people will render obedience. It is a glorious thing for all, both old and young to obey, and then honor that Sacred name by a godly life. Time is so short, delays are dangerous, and I trust that all who are contemplating obedience will act at once. It is vain to expect salvation, and remain under condemnation, and the only way to escape condemnation is to come into Christ. "There is therefore, no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. viii. 1.

W. H. WILSON.

Death of Brother Henry Heyes.

I have just received a letter from Brother W. Birkenhead of Manchester, England. He says:

"Dear Brother Wilson: Though unknown to you personally, yet at the request of Sister Heyes, I take the liberty of writing you, to inform you of the decease of our aged brother Henry Heyes, who spent most of his former life in the United States of America, but during the last ten or twelve years has been a resident of this country.

He died Nov. 15, at the age of 8[illegible] years, after much severe and continued suffering. He maintained his faith and integrity to the last, trusting in the living God, and he did not trust in vain, for although his resources entirely failed, and he and his wife were entirely dependent on the contribution of the saints, they were provided for all along, through the generosity of the brethren in Britain and America. And I wish to express my own thanks to those who in answer to my appeal, have given him reason to thank our heavenly Father for his care and guidance.

He was laid in the grave on the 18th of November, in close proximity to other saints, who will with him come forth at the trumpet's sound, to renewed life and beauty. To that time we look for a joyous reunion with those we have loved in the Lord.

Sister Heyes is now to take up her abode in the house of a brother and so considerably reduce her expenditure. She will, however, still need caring for; and a part of our duty will be to provide for her as she is now 75, and unable to earn a living for herself. Any little help the brethren feel themselves able to send to her, will be received with much gratitude."

I thank God we have so many kind and tender-hearted brethren and sisters in the Household of Faith, who though not rich in this world's goods yet can feel for another's affliction. In answer to my appeal some time since, on behalf of Bro. Heyes, I received one hundred and [illegible] dollars. I received from Bro. Heyes thankful acknowledgement for your generosity. And now that he has fallen asleep, he needs no more, and the good you have done him, is the same as if you had done it to the Savior personally. But our aged and afflicted sister still needs both your sympathy and material aid, and I feel assured she will receive both at your hands. I shall be pleased to receive, and send her any contribution you may see fit to send me." Address, W. H. Wilson, 1511 Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

[illegible] full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

The Restitution has been issued each time during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure, some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,— and at the low price it seems as if this might be done — our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Special Evangelist Fund.

Dear Sisters in Jesus:

I have glad news for you. One of our dear young men has at last made the venture, and has begun proclaiming the precious tidings of a coming King and Kingdom, and has made the hearts of the brethren greatly to rejoice.

Another will soon start out. Let not your hands slacken in giving. God will find ways to use the money if we bring it willingly to him.

The day of grace for this dispensation shortens fast. "The King's business requires haste." Let us help to gather in the jewels. We shall be happy when we get over there to have done something for the Master.

S. Roxana Wince.

Report.

Thinking that some would like to know what I have been doing for the Master, I will report.

I attended the conference at Ashton, Kansas, over the third Sunday in October, and it was one of the best meetings I ever attended. Bro. T. E. Adams helped with the preaching, and all was peace and harmony. The Word was listened to by large and attentive audiences, and we hope fruit will be brought forth in due time.

From here I returned to Attica and filled my regular appointment. On Tuesday evening a few of us met at the water and an intelligent young brother was buried in the watery grave, from which he rose to walk in newness of life. May God sustain him in the race for a crown.

On the 25th we started for Oklahoma. We traveled by team across that noted country called the strip which at this time of the year looks quite desolate, but is destined to become a rich country. We arrived at Bro. Albert Oberholts on Saturday evening, and found that he had gone to Kansas.

We began our meeting on Sunday and continued until Thursday evening, with a good turnout, and the best of interest to the Word spoken, and a desire that I should return in the near future. We found some of the faith, and we will never forget the kind treatment while there, and we would mention H. Oberholt and wife.

From here we drove to Perry, a distance of thirty miles, and stayed all night. This place is in the new country and has the name of being a rough place.

From here I went to Oxford and filled my regular appointment. We have some zealous brethren here, who are doing all they can for the Master.

I went home from here and found all well. I then filled my regular appointment at Otto, Kan.

From here I went to Ashton, where Bro. Arthur Chaplin lives to hold a weeks meeting. Bro. T. E. Adams helped with the preaching. Bro. I. S. Miller and daughter of Wichita, and O. B. Cleveland of Attica were also with us. On Thursday we went to the water near Geuda Springs, and after breaking the ice we led three young sisters down into the water, where they were buried with Christ in baptism, that they may be like him in the resurrection. May God help them to run the race with patience ever looking to Jesus the Author and finisher of their faith. Always keeping in mind the great reward at the end.

We have some noble workers in this community, among others, Sister Lydia Chaplin, who is secretary of our evangelist committee. We were greatly encouraged, and this meeting will long be remembered. We realize that the time is short and what is done must be done soon. We fear that some are too much taken up with the cares of this world, and to such I would say, stop and think before it is too late.

I visit this place every third Sunday. Our next quarterly meeting will be held at Attica over the third Sunday in February. Brethren, make a note of this, and remember time and place.

S. C. Oliver.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Thief on the Cross.

This is the title of a tract that needs no introduction, having been printed in this paper substantially as it appears in the tract. Written by M. Joblin. The design has been to issue this work as cheaply as possible, and sell it as near cost as can be. It makes 16 pages, and the price is placed at one cent each in quantities, the buyer to pay postage. The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents, so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 60 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to Patrons of the Nickel Plate Road. Special Excursion dates Dec. 23-24-25-30-31 and Jan 1st, good returning until Jan. 2nd 94.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts go the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Price 35 cents each; 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, 4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as Agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

A Letter to a Friend. A new edition of this popular work has been printed. It is not necessary to say a word about this work to the older readers, but to the new ones we say the subject treated of is the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the One Hope, One Faith, and One Baptism." It was written some years ago by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff, and it is truly "A letter to a Friend." Many editions have been printed and distributed until this little 12 page tract is acknowledged as the most effective missionary that can be handed out. Price 10 cts. each. Send and get a supply to distribute.

Future Probation. By Wm. G. Moncrieff. We have received an invoice of the new book of 148 pages, written by William Glen Moncrieff, subject, "Future Probation: Is That Awaiting Any of the Unrighteous?" Bro. Moncrieff is a writer well known to our readers, and of undoubted ability. This book is in paper covers, and sells for 25 cts. each, and can be had at this office.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Coming Year.

[illegible] to the Lord to bless thee,
Wait on the Lord to guide thee,
So shall no ill betide thee,
Day by day.

Rise with His hour before thee,
Tell of the love He bore thee,
Sleep with His shadow o'er thee,
Day by day.

Clouds with their silver lining,
Hopes and fears intertwining,
[illegible] lead thee through them shining
Day by day.

Each may be thy surrounding,
Still let His praise be sounding,
Praise for His grace abounding,
Day by day.

Waiting for His appearing,
Watching the mist-clouds clearing,
Bright hopes thy spirit cheering,
Day by day.

Take this as New Year message,
Bringing the sweet, glad presage
Of coming strength and courage,
Day by day.

A New Leaf.

He came to my desk with a quivering lip—
The lesson was done—
"Dear teacher, I want a new leaf," he said;
"I have spoiled this one."
In place of the leaf, so stained and blotted,
I gave him a new one all unspotted,
And into his sad eyes smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

I went to the throne with a quivering soul—
The old year was done—
"Dear Father, hast thou a new leaf for me?
I have spoiled this one."
He took the old leaf, stained and blotted,
And gave me a new one, all unspotted,
And into my sad heart smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

OUR "LOVE FEAST."

Being letters of greeting from scattered members of the Household of Faith, as suggested by our Brother R. S. Dwiggins. Continued from our issue of Dec. 27, '93.

Dear ones of like precious faith:

Let us watch and pray, that we may be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man when he comes with all his holy angels. May we live in such a way that the signs of his coming will be a source of comfort and joy, instead of terror and dismay. Don't let us become over-charged with surfeiting and cares of this world, and that day take us unawares. Let us be ready to meet our Lord with joy and gladness, and not to pray that the rocks and mountains might fall upon us to hide us from his glorious majesty. There will be a day when the one shall be taken and the other left. Watch and pray, lest we be the left. For in such an hour as you think not your Lord cometh. Your sister waiting for that day,

Sadie Skeels.

Kentucky.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:

Remembering Bro. Dwiggins' suggestion, I come with a few thoughts, as follows: Dear ones who are striving for Christ's spirit to dwell in you, not all are striving for some do not care for it. with many it is a long and toilsome journey to the point where we are hungering and thirsting after righteousness; but ye who are struggling against sin and temptation—don't give up. If Satan knocks you down you will still have strength enough to craw, to the throne of grace, to Jesus' feet. His dear face will look down in compassion upon you and his dear hand will reach out to lift you up, and if we cry mightily to him for aid—what joy to know that he will aid us. We must be willing to let God deal with us as with sons. He sees the ugly traits of our characters as no one can. Oh, I have felt sometimes there was not a vestige in me for God to begin on, but some flowers of his truth have sprung up in my heart and he is stooping down to water them with the dews of his grace. I see so many ways that he takes to show me how deformed I am. These lessons come in unexpected forms about our daily life and in our intercourse with each other and with those who are outside of the great truths of God, and let us remember that others are passing through their Gethsemanes, as well as we, and think of them kindly. This new man in Christ Jesus, how far has he progressed towards manhood? Beside him walks the man of the flesh: but is the new man growing in strength and beauty and the old man dwindling away? Dear Jesus, you have said, "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be full," but dear Savior, we don't know how to thus hunger, and will you not teach us in thine own way, and will you help us to bear all the bitter suffering that must come between, and will you deign to teach us? We want to walk with thee, but the way is thorny and blood-stained, and we lag behind; but you are patient and long suffering, and we see your face far away at the end of the journey. We must strive to meet you, for without you it is death, eternal death.

Dear Household of Faith:

I hope this beautiful Christmas eve will find us all watching and ready for the Lord's return, whether it be at midnight or noonday. I do hope that we will always keep our lamps trimmed and burning, that when the Bridegroom comes we will not have to say, lend us your oil. Why depend upon some one else? Haven't we the Word: We have the promises of the Father to keep us from sin and temptation if we only ask him in humble prayer. He is our comforter in time of trouble.

Let us on this Christmas eve resolve to try to live more like our dear Jesus, (We have his history while on earth), and where we fail, try again and never give up trying, for the prize is worth all our trials and persecutions. Yours in hope of his coming.

Dear Restitution:

I write to let the dear brothers and sisters know that I am alive and still trusting in our kind heavenly Father.

My dear husband fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 22, 1862. I am living with my son-in-law, G. R. Lake, and my daughter, who show me much love and kindness. My words cannot express the loving kindness of our blessed Master toward me.

I subscribed for The Restitution for three months. Shall take it as long as I live, I think.

There is not one of our faith in the circle of my acquaintances. The Methodist is the Church, and I think the minister is a good man.

I circulate the paper, and may it prove a blessing to those who read it is my prayer. Love to all.

H. C. Dewey.

Dear Restitution:

I've often asked myself this question and would like to ask more professors of Christianity the same question, can we say we are ready to meet the Bridegroom. If not, why not? Is there one thing lacking? If there is, what is it? Is it spite that we have at some person that could be made right with a few simple thoughts? Have we got enemies that we do not pray for as we are commanded to do? Has some one offended us? And we will not worship God, or attend church and hear the good news of the kingdom of God? Are we not patient as we should be? Dear ones, if there is one thing lacking, we cannot say we are ready. Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Again, can we say we are ready? Yes, if we have done all that we could to gain that abundant entrance into the kingdom. What has our Savior told us to do that we might gain that unspeakable gift. 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. 1 Pet. iv. 7. But the end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer. And now go with me to 2 Tim. iv. 5, Watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry. Rev. iii. 5. May we overcome that we may be clothed in that white raiment, and that our names may not be blotted out of the book of life, and that we may be confessed before the Father. And may we so live that we can say, I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, is the prayer of your sister of the precious faith.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, greeting:

I am so glad to tell you of our good meetings at this place conducted by our excellent Bro. J. F. Wagoner. He gave us twenty-four sermons in all. Commenced the first night in December and closed the twenty-first. He had the pleasure of assisting three willing souls to put on Christ by baptism, and left a great many studying their Bibles to see if these things be so. Now there are just eight of us here waiting for the glorious promises to be fulfilled. Waiting till the Lord shall comfort Zion—he will comfort all her waste places and he will make her wilderness like Eden and her desert like the garden of the Lord, joy and gladness shall be found therein and thanksgiving and the voice of melody. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion and everlasting joy be upon their heads: they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. Isa. li. 3, 11. Your sister waiting the Master's return.

Dear ones in the Gospel:

I wonder if any one would care to hear a "Merry Christmas" from Mother Woodward. I have lived over 86 years, and to-night I say, Praise the Lord. O, my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name. My life is passing swiftly, but as it nears its close my faith grows stronger, my love for the truth deeper, and my anxiety to see the King is greater every day. My ears are growing dull, but my mind is yet clear and memory good, for which no days pass that I do not thank my Father.

The statement in a late Restitution was considerably mixed before it reached the place from which it started. I wish to correct it. All my life long I have been an earnest Bible reader, but for the last sixteen years I have read each year, the New Testament through six times, the Prophets twice, Psalms six times. For several years I read the Old Testament each year twice through but later I have given more time to the Prophets and New Testament. I am just finishing the New Testament the fifth time through. My eyes are not quite as strong as they were, and I have been eagerly studying Totten for the last two years, having read all from No. 1 to 10, twice through and am going through them the third time. His works are meat and drink to me as he draws so often from the Holy Writ.

Now, loved ones, be faithful, be strong, quit yourselves like men, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

A Merry Christmas, Bro. Dwiggins, and all the faithful.

Yours in hope of the soon coming King.

Margaret Woodward.

Dear Restitution:

For the last week I have been thinking of the mercy, the love, the long suffering and forbearance of God, our heavenly Father towards me who am so unworthy of all his goodness. Day by day he has fed me: clothed me and given me all things necessary to my comfort in my old age. Sons and daughters to lean upon as an earthly prop. In sickness I have been cared for, and when they thought me at death's door, I had no fear but sweet peace and trust. Through the loving kindness of the Lord I have been raised up. For all things I thank and praise the dear Father in heaven. When I think that God so loved the world that he gave his only Son to die to bring us back to God, and when I think of the love of Christ in giving himself up to cruel mockings and scourging and then the agonizing suffering on the cross, I feel as if every fibre of my being ought to praise God. Glory to his holy name, let all the earth praise him, amen, and amen.

We celebrate the Christmas time as the time of the birth of a Savior who comes to bring peace on earth, and oh, what hope to a fallen world came with him if they lay hold upon the hope set before them in the gospel. How few there are who realize that the consummation is so near at hand, that soon Jesus, that same Jesus, who, as a babe in Bethlehem will come again in power and great glory. Come to reign, now, a King, then, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Now he comes to rule over his people, and to bring all else into subjection to himself. Then will be a time of peace, such as never was since sin entered into the world. May the time of peace soon obtain the consummation of the Christian's hope, even the resurrection of the believer in Christ to eternal life through Christ, our Lord, at his coming. Even so come Lord Jesus.

Mrs. E. J. Rathbun.

Dear Restitution:

Christmas greeting to the brethren and sisters in Christ. Bro. Wagoner has been preaching out here in central Kentucky over three weeks. He is a bold and fearless proclaimer of the truth. There were three who came forward and demanded baptism, and Brother Wagoner baptized them into the all-saving name of Jesus. There seemed to be many more almost persuaded. May they search the Scriptures for themselves and settle the question of life and death. May we all be found watching. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

B. F. Skeels.

Brothers and Sisters:

How I long to meet with you all in some of your good meetings. It has been a number of years since I have had the chance of meeting with any of the like precious faith, except a few sermons preached by Bro. Eychaner here last Spring. Some thirty-five years ago, I in company with my dear parents, Bro. Wince, Bro. Guffin, Bro. Seymore and Bro. Clark attended the third conference of the state of Indiana, held near Fairfield, and on Sunday one hundred members and twenty-five preachers partook of the emblems of Christ. This was a scene long to be remembered by me. I wished I did not have to go home, but stay in the house of worship all the time. Little did I think where my house of worship was to be; but now I find it is my home along with my family where we read God's Word and sing, such grand praises to our Lord for the goodly blessings he is bestowing upon us, and for the hope of eternal life and to reign with him on the earth. And although my children never heard any preaching of the truth, yet I am rejoicing over two sons that have obeyed, and also feel to thank the Lord when I hear others of them show a love for the truth. And now through these many years I have stood some hard trials and deep afflictions, yet I found a friend in Jesus. He was my physician when sick, and he was my company when alone. He gave me food when in time of need, he spared my life when man's hope was gone. Now, age is creeping on and he is still my friend, and I know I shall see him soon, and I hope there to meet with you all in the kingdom of God.

Jennetta Tilman.

Iowa.

To the Brothers and Sisters:

A Merry Christmas to you all.

I cheerfully accept this present opportunity of casting my mite with those of like precious faith. The year is almost gone, and I have been permitted to pass my 57th year, and at least 10 of these years have designedly been given to the development of a holy life. How far I have succeeded I cannot tell. God only knows.

I have sometimes felt as though this life was a failure. Sore trials and temptations beset me on every hand. My confidence in man becomes very much shaken, then comes disappointment, sickness, and death. All these roll up like mountains before my little boat, seemingly unsurmountable, but, brethren, I have all confidence in the Grand Old Ship. She has brought me through troubled waters. Sometimes like Peter, I have felt like going down, but oh, that loving Savior bears me to a lofty position, yes, on top of the wave. Praise his holy name, and amidst all the ups and downs of life and sore trials.

I have a glorious hope and my prospects are far brighter than when I first believed, and suffering of whatever nature only serves to draw me nearer to the cross. My race will soon be done. A few more storms on the wild ocean of life, then a calm, a sweet repose. I see a light across the way, a city pure and clean, which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God. No disappointment there. No sickness, no death, no sorrow, for our sorrow will be turned to joy, and all tears wiped from off all faces. Patiently I am waiting, and while waiting, I look back some 30 years and looking over the ground I find one here and another there, missing. Where are they? They have long since died. In my present wanderings I take a look at old Antioch, near the home, of Bro. Corkaley, or used to be, and this is the place I delight to go. As I near the altar I see vacant seats that used to be promptly filled. I look around, yes, there is where Bro. Corkaley used to be, and Bro. Chaplin, and Bro. Barnhill, and just across there is Bro. Tuber, and Sister Barnhill, and Sister Roberts, and many others that I could mention but space forbids. But, where are they? The enemy has summoned some of them, and they are in prison; but listen, Jesus says, he has the keys to open prisons and let them go free again.

Brethren, the grandest event of all ages is yet future, and while many are slumbering, and waiting the Captain of our Salvation, who will try to fill up the broken ranks caused by death? Yes, while those familiar scenes break up the fountains of my heart, I look forward to the time when all hearts will be gladdened, and no more vacant seats, and we pray none missing.

I must stop and give others room. Come on brethren, let us have a feast as Bro. Dwiggins has suggested. May the Lord bless him abundantly, and also, we pray that Bro. Underwood may be blessed in his faithfulness to God and his Word, and as servant for the body, the church. We realize what a task he has before him. Brethren, let us tender them a vote of thanks for this grand privilege.

May the darkness that hangs over us give way, and the light of God's eternal truth shine brighter until that perfect day.

Remember us in all your devotions.

I. S. Miller.

Kansas.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in The Christ:

Myself and dear companion wish to be represented in the Love Feast of God's dear people, through The Restitution.

We are still strong in the faith, and although beset with many tribulations, trials, and temptations, and disappointments in this unfriendly world, we know in whom we have trusted and we hope to come off more than conquerors through him who hath loved us. We hope to be numbered with the overcomers, and meet you all in the Kingdom of God's dear Son, in the Sweet Bye-and-Bye, when Jesus comes. We believe it is near at hand, thank God. Dear faithful ones scattered all over the land, let us be faithful, take courage, and persevere in the path marked out by our Heavenly Father. Live closer to him, nearer my God to thee, nearer to thee.

Pray for your brother and sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

I hope to be able to renew my subscription before long. (The Lord willing.)

My poor sick mother is still with us, but very low and not able to turn herself in bed. She has been bed-fast about six months, and most of the time has suffered untold agony, but at present writing does not suffer as she has before.

Oh, how strong her faith is in her Redeemer, and her constant prayer is praise to his Holy Name for his goodness to her in all her life down to the present time. She is looking and waiting for his return to earth again. Glorious day, when this mortal shall put on immortality, and death shall be destroyed. No more pain or sorrow. Soon may he come, and come quickly.

On the 16th Bro. T. J. Whitsett and wife made us a pleasant visit, and preached for us over a week, and would have remained longer but the weather turned cold and the people could not attend. At some future time he will return and hold a meeting, the Lord willing. From here he went to visit Bro. Fisher. His mission is to preach the Kingdom of God and his dear Son wherever he goes.

Mother and I wish to say to the brethren and sisters, that we love to read the good letters. They cause us to rejoice in the Lord for his tender mercies over us, and his precious promises found in his Holy Word. Soon may he come is my prayer.

Your brother, waiting for the Kingdom, and return of the Lord in great power and glory,

Geo. W. Haynes.

Iowa.

Editor Restitution:

Dear Brothers and Sisters scattered up and down through the earth, grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and Jesus our Lord.

I rise this morning to tell of God's goodness toward me, one of his poor pilgrims traveling toward the promised land, firm and fixed, with shoes on my feet, and staff in my hand, ready at a second's warning. Although poor in this world's goods yet rich in faith, an heir of the Kingdom.

We are one year nearer home, and are we one year's growth better prepared for that home? Brethren, let not our religion consist in form only, but let us let our light shine out in both our dealing with the outside world and our means and might. Let us spread the gospel east, west, north, and south.

Since Oct. 18, I have traveled over 1000 miles, preached 69 discourses, baptized 17, and married one couple. Last Sunday I preached at the Grady School-house and baptized three young ladies.

I feel the effects of this fall's labor, but strong in faith, giving glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men. Let us then, who know the blessed story of the love of God in Christ, tell abroad the gracious message, the foundation which was laid in the birth of Jesus. "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people," not a few, but to all.

He shall save his people from their sins. Let us make sure that we have accepted him and are his people. Let us be true wise men, and present to him our treasures. May we speak from the heart and not from the lip. Lip-service wont do in the coming kingdom. It may sound very nice and eloquent on paper.

I will close by asking an interest in your prayers. Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

John Foore.

Dear Restitution:

I again attempt to report a few meetings. I left home on Oct. 14, for Brother C. W. Titus', arriving there the same evening. On Sunday we had a meeting. We held one Bible Class at Sister Petties in Sac City, and preached at Bro. Titus' house. The next Friday evening I began a meeting at the Fowler School-house in Calhoun Co., and continued over Sunday. From here returned to Sac City and held meetings at the house of Bro. Rose, and on the next Thursday began meetings at the Fowler School-house and continued over Sunday. From here I went to Farnhamsville, and from there we went to Bro. Fisher's in Polk Co., holding meetings at both places.

It seems good to be able to get around again after three years and four months.

As Dec. 28, is the time designated that each one take a part in the "Feast of love," I would offer my love of him who gave himself, or his life for the life of the world. Peter said, "Ye denied the Holy One, and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God had raised from the dead," and we believing this claim the promise which is spoken of by Paul when he said, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again from the dead, them in Jesus will God bring with him, for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not precede them that have fallen asleep, but shall be caught up with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This ought to be enough to keep us from turning aside from our Master. May his promises and love be sufficient to keep us faithful until he comes again. Then shall we ever be with the Lord.

Your Brother in Christ, waiting for the King in His Beauty.

THE flowers that came to us on Christmas day were not from Bro. Geiselman in Florida, as we at first thought, but from Sister E. T. Morris, of Southern California. Thanks for them. They were very beautiful.

SUCH a number of letters for our "Love Feast" come that this issue had to be given to them. We have more on hand, and every mail brings more. We are glad of this, as showing the lively hope that the friends have, and that they are not ashamed to confess their entire reliance on the promises of God. Next week, and we hope to have them for several weeks to come, we will devote a part only of our paper to these letters. It is a feature that has been neglected, and yet it is read first by nearly all. Write short letters of encouragement. We need them. We thank you for the expressions of favor for our paper. In our next issue we will give Bro. Wiley Jones' next, also Bros. Wilson and Eychaner. Thanks for your patience, brethren.

The New Year.

The year 1893 has died, and 1894 has dawned upon us with its cares and toils and sorrows and joys. Everything goes to show us that the Key to Jehovah's Purposes we have been using for many a year is surely the Divine Key. The troubles of the last day are still brewing; the groundswell of discontent is ever more distinctly felt; crime of blackest hue is ever on the increase, and at the same time the crimes of the polished and educated are annihilating the hopes born of liberal education; science, so-called, is taking the place of God's Word, and the times are full upon us when men will not endure sound doctrine, but are heaping to themselves teachers having itching ears —having enmasse turned unto fables. But we trust that the Great Body of our readers can humbly, gratefully, joyfully appropriate the words of the Spirit, "But ye brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." What hallowed joy this fact affords. What solid comfort it gives when the sky is overcast and the hearts of men fail them with apprehension of some dire calamity, they know not what. Yes; God's adopted children occupy a position that enables them to look beyond the storms and clouds to a haven of peace beyond.

There are indications that the year upon which we have entered will be fraught with gravest import to every waiting disciple. In the history of the world never was there such deep down agitation, and such gigantic preparations for something. Look at France, look at Prussia, look at Austria, look at the frantic efforts of hungry, almost starving Italy to keep abreast of the times and be prepared for any emergency. Look at Russia. Money is passed out lavishly for death-dealing implements, and the ingenuity of man is taxed for the invention of yet more destructive weapons. Peace is on the tongue of earth's rulers, but war is in their hearts—the war spirit is rampant indeed. But beloved, the wrath of man will again praise God. He who has been called to God's kingdom and glory sees God's purpose back of their ambition.

An English magazine just to hand brings word of the intention of the government to add 88 new war vessels and 80 torpedo boats to their already formidable navy, on account of the alliance of France with Russia, and in view of proposals for a Russo-Turkish alliance that never seemed to have entered into the calculations of the other Great Powers. It seems that M. Nelidoff has instructions to push this matter home. The basis of this treaty will be the guaranteeing of the Sultan's dominions in the event of war, coupled with the absolute right of way for Russian men-of-war in perpetuity, the latter clause [illegible] to take effect until the outbreak of hostilities. We think [illegible] of prophecy have generally held that Russia would seize Constantinople; but if we remember rightly, Professor Weethee has stoutly maintained that she would be preserved intact; and the present outlook certainly favors that view. It is with no small concern that England sees that the Russian Mediterranean fleet is to visit Constantinople, and this will surely mark a step toward an alliance.

In order to keep our readers posted in regard to passing events in the East we have arranged to recive from England semi-monthly the latest intelligence bearing upon the interests dearest to us, so that they may keep up with passing events and mark the finger posts to the consummation of their hopes.

We hope if the Lord shall appear for those who are his before the close of the year he may find all who have taken the name, clothed with the righteousness of God and faith, and like a ripe shock of corn fit to be gathered home. But it will require vigilance thus to be found. Besides the purification of our own hearts by obedience to the truth, it is the duty of every one to do something to uphold the Lamp of Life to others; "occupy till I come is the standing order.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I appear before you as a youth of seventeen, and I thank the Lord that he has given me Christian parents to teach me the truth. I have never had the privilege of hearing the true gospel preached as some of you young people have. I have only heard a few sermons by Bro. Eychaner, and never meet in social meetings, which I would very much like to do; but I am determined by the help of God to search that good old Book, and learn its truths and increase that talent he has given me, so when he returns he will say, well done, good and faithful servant. Brothers, pray for me that I may hold out faithful.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

Our dear Savior has said, Behold I come and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. What a glorious promise to those that love and serve him. How careful we should be each day of our life, that we should walk in that straight and narrow path that he has pointed out to us in his holy Word. With all diligence and patience run the race that is set before us, for we know not how soon we shall be called to give up this life. Then our doom will be sealed, for the Bible teaches us, that there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest. Then, let us work, watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation, looking for our blessed Savior, who will quicken our mortal bodies and fashion them after his most glorious body at his appearing and kingdom. Your humble sister in hope of eternal life.

Dear Restitution:

As I like to hear from the dear ones that are scattered abroad over the land, and read of their hopes of the soon coming kingdom, I feel as though I must say a word for my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, he is my all in all. It is about twenty-seven years since I put on Christ, to walk in him and live a new life. I have been much instructed and comforted and strengthened in the faith once delivered to the saints. My hope is in the Lord's coming. I hope we may all walk worthy of his high calling to the end, and at last receive the prize. It does me good to see the brethren stand firm in the cause of the truth. All the preaching I hear is in THE RESTITUTION, that is true and unmixed with the devil's lie. Oh, how I appreciate the reading of this paper. I can't do well without it. A lover of the truth in its true light.

Dear Restitution:

And all my dear sisters and brothers of the one faith: As THE RESTITUTION is all the preaching I have oh what a comfort it is to me, for I am so lonely since my companion died, for all his thought and talk for many years was to try and spread the truth, and many readers of THE RESTITUTION are familiar with his name, P. Plummer.

Just one more brother and sister lives here, Bro. James Haynes and wife, and they are deep in the faith. Fifty miles from here (Scholls Ferry) we have a new church, and Bro. Skeels has just closed a very successful meeting; 70 came out and put on baptism. Oh may they hold out faithful is my prayer. Before another year comes again I may be asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep. I am 80 years old.

I will close, wishing all the brothers and sisters in Christ a merry Christmas.

As ever your sister waiting for the kingdom.

Dear Brothers and Sisters, Greeting:

And Bro. Dwiggins, who suggested our love feast, for we claim to belong to it, or as Bro. Joblin says, we are blood relation, that is through the precious blood of Christ. And what joy it gives us to read of the loving testimonials of the brethren and sisters, of their firm faith in the promises of Israel's King. And we are so glad to hear of so many in Nebraska coming into the faith. Our heartfelt prayer is that we may all be admitted to that other love feast which Jesus is going to prepare for us, if we remain faithful to the end, in his kingdom.

Yours in patient waiting.

Dear Restitution:

Brethren at Lanark desire to join in the "love feast" and take this opportunity to say that an "honest confession is good for the soul," and that while the little body of Lanark have not done for the cause of Christ what we might have the past year or two, we have not been dead, but perhaps a little dormant. Since June last Brother and Sister Woodward have made us two visits and Bro. Geiselman one; and Bro. D. M. Hudler has been with us and the neighboring churches for nearly three months, doing good work—enlivening us all to such a degree that we have buckled on the armor more firmly and enter the battle for Christ, teaching the gospel and life through Christ only, as we are the only people who do teach that future life comes only to the obedient in fact and not to professors (only). May we be among those who shall hear the applaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant."

J. M. GLOTFELTY,

Dear Restitution:

Here is my mite towards making up the love feast that Bro. Dwiggins calls for. I can say of a truth, Bro. D., as the beloved disciple said who wrote so much about love, although we have never seen each other in this life, yet we have that fervent charity for each other which Paul says is the bond of perfectness. And why? Because you have seen and believed the same Bible that I have believed for the last thirty-six years.

As a result we have the like precious faith; having believed the gospel preached to Abraham we have the same faith that our father Abraham had, and I trust, hope and pray that we are not holding this one and only true faith in unrighteousness, but that we are yielding the peaceable fruits of righteousness, which saith the Word is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, etc. If so, we have the blest assurance based on the Savior's words that when he comes his people will come from the east, west, north and south, and see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom. Then will our prayer taught us by the Savior at least be answered, thy kingdom come. Then, dear brother, will be the good time alluded to in your letter, when the Redeemed of all eyes will meet and shake hands immortal. This is the way Paul understood it, for he has said, first the natural, afterward the spiritual; first the mortal, then the immortal. O for a thousand tongues to thank the God of our fathers that the Christian's hope is a glorious reality.

Dear brethren and sisters of the household of faith, let us strive mightily, lawfully, for the prize that will be given us when Jesus comes. Our light afflictions are nothing when compared to the unfolding glory that will be realized in our Father's kingdom that is to be under the whole heavens when the earth is filled with God's glory as the waters now fill the mighty deep.

'Tis a land of fair beauty, a realm of delight,
O'erflowing with gladness refulgent with light;
Its verdure ne'er withers, its flowers ne'er fade,
O I want to cross over and immortal be made.

Dear Readers of The Restitution:

I read the letters of the brothers and sisters, and they are a source of much interest and pleasure to me, so I thought I would write a few words hoping they might encourage some one. We have in our community a membership of about twenty-five. Had Bible reading every Sunday at school house while the weather was warm, but since it has grown cold, at the houses of the brethren. We are but a little band, but we meet together to try to learn something more of God's promises and plans, believing that where two or three are gathered together in His name, there will Christ be also. I only fear we are not doing enough. Brothers and sisters, let us each look to ourselves individually, and see if we are doers of the word or hearers only, and if we find we are neglectful begin at once to do better, and try each day to live nearer to Christ. Sickness in my family has made it impossible for me to meet with the class for a long time. I read an announcement of a meeting to be held at the Baptist church at Blair, subject to be a Bird's-eye View of the Bible. Too many people are satisfied with a bird's-eye view, and never come any nearer, and have only a bird's-eye understanding. But we are told to search the Scriptures. Then let us read carefully and prayerfully and see for ourselves the things that God has promised to those that love him.

Your sister in the hope of the kingdom.

Dear Restitution:

According to your request, I feel that I must write something. But what shall I say? I am reminded that "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God," and conclude that the same rule applies to writing. I think the rule a good rule if every one who speaks or writes would but speak or write according to these oracles what a different state of things we would have! The oracles of God! Living oracles! Where are they? All are contained in the Bible, the oldest of all books—the most loved, the most hated, the most honored, the most abused,—of all the books in the world no other has had half as much said for it, or against it! Only think of volumes upon volumes written to destroy it and the same to uphold it! And yet we can all get a copy of it for a few cents. It is the most valuable Book in the world, and yet no other is so cheap. I certainly do not find fault because the good Book is so cheap—but I am not quite sure but it would be better if it cost a little more. I am inclined to think that in years gone by when a copy could not be found in every home, but several neighbors joined together in order to get a copy, that it was more appreciated. Someway that which costs us but little or nothing is apt to be thought but little of. It is not always the real value of a thing that makes it high or low, but the plentifulness of it, or its scarcity. If the supply of silk goods were so great that we could buy for five cents per yard, and calicoes were so scarce that we could not buy any for less than $2 per yard, then ladies' fancy dresses would be made of calico; not because calico is really worth more than silk or satin, but because it costs more. So I am afraid it is with the Bible, it costs but little and is too often but little appreciated. Of course we must have a copy, but where is it? Of course the big family Bible lies on the stand, but then, that is too large to be read. The family record is in it, and as the Bible is the Book of Life, we have our names in the Book of Life. But really how little is known by the people generally as to what the Bible really contains. In ages gone by the people have taught that it was not for them but for the priests—that the people could not understand it—it was a mysterious book that must be interpreted for them by the priests who have to be trained for that purpose. Though times have changed very much, even yet we have not got entirely free from such thraldom. We are too apt to feel that it does not mean just what it says, but must be explained, and that very often it is explained to mean something very different from what it says. Now let me say to all our brothers and sisters, don't be led away from what it says by any one. No matter how much learning a man may have, if he tells you the Scriptures mean something other than what they say, reject him. No matter who he is—to the law and the testimony, if he speak not according to that—there is no light in him. The wise, and prudent or the learned and the sages never did understand God's will. It was not revealed to them but to babes like the humble fishermen, the apostles. It is so yet. I have read the Bible for nearly or quite sixty years, and I say now that I am fully convinced that an honest-hearted man of good common sense and education, who is unbiased, is more likely to rightly understand the Scriptures than the most learned man in the world.

Brothers and sisters, let us stick to exactly what the Bible says. Insist on a "thus saith the Lord" for everything we believe or teach. Depend upon it that your salvation does not depend on your believing anything that is not plainly stated in the Scriptures. If it needs explaining or interpreting—it is not a matter of faith but of opinion. God has revealed but one faith—if a passage needs explaining it is not revealed. There may be many opinions but only one faith. We are not required to be all of one opinion. Opinion is a thing that is doubtful—is not revealed. There is room for men to honestly differ on. A man may have faith, may be weak in the faith even, but should be received by the brethren, but as to his opinions (doubtful things) don't dispute with him. (Rom. xiv. 1.) He has a right to his opinions, and so have you and I.

My paper is already long enough for once, or I would like to write showing the difference between knowledge, faith, and opinion, which is too often overlooked. We are too apt to think we know, or believe a thing when really we only think so. And yet if a brother or sister differs from us we will not regard him or her as a brother or sister. Brethren, this is wrong—it is dogmatism.

Now, dear RESTITUTION, if you wish any more of this you can have it, and as to this you can put it into the waste basket or print it.

In the one hope,
GEORGE ELTON.

Ohio.

Dear Restitution:

Your very welcome visits stirs us up by way of remembrance, and every number awakens the desire afresh to add our testimony in regard to that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Savior, Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews.

To make our story short, we have an "exhortation" in RESTITUTION, of Dec. 6, from Bro. Woodward. "Let all things be done decently and in order," 1 Cor. 14, 40, and we would suggest that it be read as one of the articles in our "Christmas Love Feast" proposed by Bro. Dwiggins, also the composition for the last day of school, given us by Sister Mabel Carpenter.

Paul says that, "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the father's" Rom. xv. 8. In connection with this see, Acts iii. 18, and Rom. iv.

Let us also "walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being circumcised, for the promise that he Abraham, should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."

On Saturday night the 1st inst., Bro. Jas. L. Moncrief and I met the church at Mt. Pleasant, where we were much refreshed after a toilsome journey. The meeting continued with interest increasing until Sunday night.

The most solemn and encouraging of all was that of commemorating the sufferings and death of our Lord, with our aged and esteemed Bro. Wm. P. Ryland, who has been confined to his bed for six weeks. At his request 14 of the brethren met in his room on Sunday evening and after an earnest exhortation from him, we proceeded while the fire burned within us, to bring to mind what these blessings are, and what it cost our Lord.

And now, brethren, if he so loved us, we ought also to love one another in the same manner. "A new commandment I give unto you."

On Monday, with Bro. Russell we returned home. He remained a day looking about the country.

Wishing you a happy Christmas, and that we may meet all of like precious faith in peace when Jesus comes. We are yours truly.

R. A. HUMPHREYS.

Arkansas.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I wish to join you in the Christmas Love Feast, and tell you that by God's help, I am striving to walk in the narrow way, and do rejoice always, and gladness fills my heart as I meditate upon the coming of our King and his Kingdom, for then, Satan will have no power to cause so much misery and distress in the human family.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may stand firm till the last.

ELIZA A. RAHE.

Dear Restitution:

I have been a reader of your paper for the last two years and as it is proposed to have a Christmas Love Feast, I thought I would add my mite. It is my desire to live in grace and grow in the knowledge of the Gospel for it is able to make us wise unto salvation. May we never be found so cold and in such darkness that we will lose sight of that beautiful home that is promised to the faithful. May we never be found weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. I earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Pray for me, that I may be faithful to my trust, and be among the Redeemed when Jesus comes.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

I will send a few lines to] you and if you think them worthy you may publish them.

My subscription is up, and you will find enclosed $1.50 to pay for another year. I cannot think of doing without the paper as it is the only preacher that I have here. I am 65 or 70 miles from any organization or preacher of our faith, and I think that a good preacher would do much good.

This is a fine country, good land, good health and good climate. I have been here 29 years and it has been about 26 years since my wife and I embraced the faith and were baptized. The rest of the church scattered soon after and we are left alone ever since. We read the Bible and THE RESTITUTION, and the more we read and study the stronger our faith is in the coming kingdom. We love so much to read the letters from the brothers and sisters isolated like ourselves. I would like to see an article in the paper on the millennial reign of Christ as there are some here that teach that it is past. They say the devil was bound from A. D. 6, to A. D. 15, and that it was at that time. The Seventh Day Adventists teach that all that do not keep the seventh day holy will suffer the second death.

I remain your brother in Christ.

Editor Restitution:

As it has been suggested by a brother, that we all of the one faith write a few words for THE RESTITUTION, as a Christmas Love Feast, I will respond for one in the West, that is waiting and desiring the presence of our blessed Savior, as our Redeemer, who is to be the one King in that kingdom, that God will establish on this earth, that is never to be destroyed, through which all the nations of the earth are to be blessed. Dear brother, you and I have a part in that kingdom to perform, if we are faithful to our Master. Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give unto you the kingdom. Surely, if it his pleasure to give, we should be pleased to receive. To Abraham and his seed, were the promises made, not to seeds as of many; but to thy seed which is Christ, and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and an heir according to the promise. Just think, to become an heir to the promises made to him. He is to be heir to the whole world, and king of the whole universe. He is to remove the curse, restore life, raise the dead and rule with righteousness on David's throne. It is time that we were preparing ourselves to be ready, for soon Christ will come to reign, and he will not know to call our name, and if such should be the case, we have ourselves only to blame. May we all have our lamps trimmed, and be ready, for when he comes he will not tarry.

ABNER OLIVER.

Dear Restitution:

If it will be God's will, I will try and be present in letter at the Love Feast. Here we all assemble our letters together in this paper, to tell our hope, just as God's Word says, "that people shall flow into Zion to worship him." I think Zion would be a good Bible name for THE RESTITUTION for 1894. I wish every one a merry Christmas The times are fulfilling so fast, that not many more Christmases will pass before Christ will return with the rewards for the righteous, the ones that suffer for his sake, for Paul says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." We must hold out faithful to the end, if we expect such a reward. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? No persecution shall separate us. Then, let us look forward to the coming of Christ in that glorious kingdom, when Satan shall be chained, and the rough places made smooth. Then God's elect shall be immortal like Christ and be governors, and not be governed.

Dear Restitution:

I have been a member of the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith for about thirty years, and I love to read the letters in THE RESTITUTION from those of like faith, scattered throughout the land; and though I feel my inability to write to the edification of others, yet I feel that I ought to write a few lines telling of my hope and of the encouragement it gives me to read the letters of others. They help to lift the cares when I am wearied of this mortal life. Let us brace up and be strong in the Lord, and not neglect to pray for others, especially those of like precious faith. And let us remember those who are laboring in word and doctrine; striving always to keep our lamps trimmed and burning, and not as the foolish virgins—have no oil in our vessels. I am expecting the return of our Lord and Master very soon, and let us strive to be ready. I ask those of like faith to remember me in their prayers.

MARY J. CRATON.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, greeting:

I feel that I want to rejoice with you by adding to the letter drawer, and reading the letters that others write telling of the hopes of us all meeting and seeing each other face to face and enjoying the presence of our blessed Savior. Oh if we could only shovel time together and hasten the time of the coming of our dear Redeemer. Oh what will it be when we can behold his glorious face through the clouds, as the angels said he would come as he went away, and that was in a cloud, I long for the time when this change will take place, and it surely will not be long, for it seems to be plain that everything is fulfilling the Scriptures and pointing to the nearness of that day. Dear sisters, let us be more careful in living the Word of God daily, so that the number of crown wearers will soon be fulfilled and hasten the coming of our Great King that the earth will be ruled with justice, and then sin will be banished from the earth and this will be a place of peace.

MRS. SARAH BUTCHER.

Kansas.

Dear Restitution:

In complying with the request made by Bro. Driggins, that all who are waiting the coming of the Lord, should write, I feel that I am personally requested, as I am one of them.

Without knowledge there is no salvation for man, therefore we all should be thankful to God for the gift of the Bible—God's Revelation of earth and man, the Kingdom of God the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. That Blessed Book that tells us how man was made, and how he was un-made, and how he will be re-made again.

Man was un-made by disobedience, and re-made by obedience.

God has revealed the awful consequence of disobedience to be death, and when he passed this sentence on the first man, he gave Mother Eve his word of promise that her seed, not a God, should crush the serpent's head, and from that time on, the human family became Adventists, looking forward to the time when that Word of God given in promise, would be verified, and made flesh. John i. 1, reads, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." The 14th verse reads, "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory as of the only begotten of the Father."

Now John says, "In the beginning," and that surely was the beginning when the man, and woman was made. The Word of God is Spirit, and is Life.

Now, 4000 years after God gave his Word to Eve, that her seed not a god, should crush the Serpents head, Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, and wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid in a manger, then God's Word was made flesh and dwelt among the apostles, just as John said, and the Word of God was literally fulfilled.

The Spirit of God said to King David, out of thy loins he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. This promise was confirmed with God's oath. Acts ii. 30-31.

Then the Children of Israel said, "now we know where that seed is to come from that is to crush the serpent's head," then they kept a record of all the sons and daughters of David, down to Mary and Joseph. When Jesus was born they ceased keeping the record because the Wise Men from the East came and said, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews, for we have come to worship him." The 61st chap. of Isa., reads thus: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." 700 years after this was written, Jesus at Nazareth stood up and read the same Word of God, and after he had read he closed the book and sat down, and the eyes of all them that were in the Synagogue were fastened upon him, and he began to say unto them, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears," for they had heard of the things he had done at Capernaum. Christ stopped reading at just the right place. After telling what he had come to do then, and the rest of the chapter relates what he will do the next time he comes.

How important it is to rightly divide the Word of God.

In John iii. 5, Jesus says, "verily verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." Now to rightly divide that declaration, is to stop at the birth of water now, and wait for the Spirit birth until the resurrection morning. I find many who claim to be born of the Spirit, but when tried by the Word I find they are flesh yet, and lack "of the Spirit." I fear many of them were buried before they were dead to the world.

I would say to all, let us examine ourselves and see if we are dead to the world, and alive in Christ, for if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his.

Dear Brothers and Sisters, you must not think your trials and crosses are greater than others have to bear. I am not going to tell my trials but I believe no one will enter the kingdom of God who has not been baptized into Christ, the Second Adam, and bore a cross, but remember, the heavier the cross, the brighter the crown.

Brothers and Sisters! I say as did Peter, "To them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and our Savior, Jesus Christ: grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and Jesus our Lord according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."

Paul says, "we are not of them that draw back to perdition, but of them that believe unto the saving of the soul. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your whole Spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. Brethren pray for yourselves that we may all meet in the Kingdom of God in the New Earth. I hope to meet you all there, and then we will make heaven and earth ring with "Glory to God, peace on earth and good will to man" through Christ, who redeemed us by his blood.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:

I come to join you in your Love Feast. I am one of the isolated ones, but hope to meet all the dear ones in the "Sweet Bye-and-Bye." I know I shall if I live up to my privilege. What a comfort is derived from living the life of the faithful. I do regret that I have not lived more faithful. I do not have the privilege of meeting with the brethren and sisters, and as Sister Alice Taber says, "We lose our Christian Graces." I would say to those, if there are any such that read these lines who have never known the mercy that endureth forever, make haste to find in him a refuge from the storm, a covert from the tempest, the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

May we all so live that we may meet on the Evergreen Shore, there to live forever.

Yours in hope.

To the Brethren scattered abroad Greeting:

Dearly beloved, that have obtained like precious faith, grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath given us all things that pertaineth unto life and godliness, and hath called us unto glory and virtue. Whereby are given us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of his divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed with pure water, let us hold fast our profession unto the end, looking for that blessed hope, and the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, who will change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorified body, whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself. Therefore, let us give the more earnest heed to the things we have heard, for we are not following cunningly devised fables, knowing that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation, for the prophecy came not by the will of men, but holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Therefore, brethren, let us consider our high calling in Christ Jesus, who became perfect through suffering, and for the joy set before him endured all things, that he might bring us to God, having been put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit, whereby he lives not after the flesh but after an endless life whereby he is able to succor all that come unto him. Therefore, let us lay aside every sin that doth so easily beset us and run with patience the race that is set before us, counting all things as nothing, that we may win Christ, and be found of him not having our own righteousness, but the righteousness which is of God by faith in Christ, that we may attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, having your loins girded about with truth, having on the breastplate of righteousness, and take the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, that we may be able to stand in the day of temptation. And when the Lord whom ye seek shall come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in. But who shall abide the day of his coming and who shall stand when he appeareth, for he is like a refiner's fire, and he will sit as a purifier of silver. They that fear the Lord and think upon his name, they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in the day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his only son that serveth him. Then shall ye discern between the righteous and the wicked, between them that serveth God and him that serveth him not. Therefore, brethren, let us labor to enter into his rest lest any of us should come short, for if every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation, of which salvation the prophets have enquired and search diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto us, of which thing the angels desired to look into. Therefore, as brethren, let us lay aside all malice and guile and hypocrisies and envies and evil speakings, in honor preferring one another that we may prove what is that good and perfect will of God, that ye love one another, by this men know that ye are the disciples of Christ, so shall an abundant entrance be ministered unto you into the everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Seeing ye have purified yourselves in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently, for as much as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold; but with the precious blood of Christ, for we by him do believe in God who raised him from the dead, that our faith and hope might be in God. And to the elders which are among us, I exhort that ye feed the flock of God, taking the oversight over them not by constraint, but willingly, not for filthy lucre but of a ready mind, neither as lords over God's heritage, but as examples to the flock, and when the chief Shepherd shall appear, we may receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Dear Brethren:

In response to Bro. U's request, I take my pen to take part in our social meeting. As the social gathering of a congregation may be made the most profitable meeting we have, so the social or letter column of our paper, is often more eagerly read and profitable to a larger part of the brethren than any other department.

Strong meat is good, but an over supply will as surely destroy the life of a congregation or an individual Christian as will the literal article if taken as an exclusive diet destroy physical life. Paul at Ephesus did not shrink from declaring the whole counsel of God. His course pursued by each one of us at all times would prove an efficient cure for the disastrous effects of the hobby riding too often, not intentionally perhaps, practiced among us. The cause of truth is not at a stand still here in Oregon. Since our annual conference meeting in October the congregation at Scholl's Ferry has been augmented by nineteen of our neighbors, who after hearing of the Gospel of the kingdom for years, most of them, have decided to put on Christ in the appointed way and join us in the struggle for eternal life. We have been cheered too by the determination of another young brother, Edwin Groat, to enter the ministry and proclaim the gospel of life to a dying world. He will succeed.

Bro. Skeels has just closed a discussion with a U. B. bishop at Sherwood, this county; the questions discussed being, the nature of man and the endless misery question. The brethren who heard the discussion think it was profitable for the cause of the Master. What a field there is open for those who are willing and able to preach the grand truths of the gospel. Personally, I am convinced more and more upon a closer examination and acquaintance with the grand central truths upon which which we are all agreed, that we are indeed, building upon Jesus the Christ, and that in turn he is the Christ, the Son of God. Now if any man build upon this foundation—gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, and stubble, every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. We have every reason to be cheered, if we are indeed founded upon the sure Word of God. Do we hear of wars and rumors of wars? Such things are foretold as belonging to the last days. Are professed Christians growing more and more worldly and less spiritual? It is foretold that men in the last days shall be lovers of pleasure more than of God. As we are not the children of darkness but of light, we are forewarned and should be discouraged by nothing, but instead, rejoice that our redemption draweth nigh. With love for all the brethren of Christ.

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Household of Faith:

I have often thought of writing during the year, but most of the time have been sick or had sickness in my family, and for some time have dreaded to take a pen in my painful hands. Our daughter who was sick all the summer, is now well. We have many reasons to thank God and take courage. If I may be made better through suffering, may I be enabled to rejoice and say, even my affliction is a blessing. I esteem it a great blessing to be able to see and read. I have read with much interest the many stirring epistles in The Restitution, as well as the many able articles by the corresponding editor and others. Continue dear friends, to exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. There is much in the world at the present day to corrupt our minds from the simplicity and pureness that is in Christ. May we all stand; having our loins girt about with truth; our lamps trimmed and burning like the wise virgins who were ready at the coming of the bridegroom, or like men who wait for their Lord to return, that when he comes and knocks, they may open immediately, and welcome his arrival, and be permitted to hear him say: Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. The Lord be praised for his precious promises. Pray for me, that I may patiently bear my afflictions, and, if consistent with God's will, be raised up to further usefulness in this life. Yours in love.

Editor Restitution:

We received our paper of Dec. 6, this evening. In seeing the call for those of like precious faith to write, I deem it a duty, as well as a great privilege, to let the scattered ones hear from us.

My home is at Arcata, Humboldt, Co., Cal., which is 20 miles from Scribner. I am engaged in teaching here, thus we are compelled to be away from our home.

In Arcata of the same faith, are brother and sister Morris, brother and sister Ogilwy, brother and sister Canbarns, brother and sister Wright, brother Faxon, brother Ranor and my wife and I. Sister Wright was baptized into the one name by the writer. As believers of old, she came to my house, desiring baptism. There being no meeting in progress she had simply read the Word, and like those of apostolic times had faith to take God at his word and is now walking in the new life. We have had our Bible readings and I have talked to the believers as well as all others who would come to hear. We always had a good and attentive audience and my labors were well received. "The fields truly are ripe but the laborers are few." If I could devote my time to the cause of my Master, in calling sinners to repentance, I should be glad to do so. But I have a very large school and it requires all my time. We have ten months of school each year, so you see, dear ones, I have but little time to talk to the perishing ones; but I want to do all that I can for my Master, for I realize our time to work is so short. Oh, if there were brethren to work, churches could be organized and so much done to call out a people for his name. The people here, as well as in other places are in darkness concerning the great truths of God's Word. I think there is but one organization of our faith in this state, and that is at San Deigo. The few of us here are of limited means and our cry is: "Come over and help us."

We are always glad to receive The Restitution, for it reminds us of our dear friends in Marshall County.

I close by saying, "Blessed are they which do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Dear Brother and Sisters:

As brother Underwood has opened the way, that we can assemble ourselves together in praise to our blessed Master, although we are absent in body, we are present in mind. I rejoice that we are not bound together as so many are binding themselves together for protection; but instead, we are bound together in love, and trust in one that is able and willing to protect us in these times of trouble. As we can all see by the signs of the times, the gospel age is about to close, we can lift up our heads and rejoice that our repemption draweth nigh. I thank God for his blessed hope and the precious promises that are free to all, if they will only come to Christ, and obey the gospel. Often when reading the letters written by the brothers and sisters of the one faith, and see how much they are doing for the Master, I fear lest my work will be so little I will hardly be permitted an entrance into the kingdom. But my earnest prayer is to God, to have mercy on me, that I may hold out faithful to the end, and be counted with the worthy ones that have been tried and overcome the evils of this world. I want to say a word in praise of our dear paper, The Restitution. I have been a subscriber about fifteen years, and a great comfort and help it has been to me, and not only to me, but to all I could get to read it. Yours in hope.

Dear brothers and sisters of the one faith:

I think it was a very good suggestion, that we all write a little as a Christmas greeting to one another.

We do not live near any of the brethren and I take much comfort in reading the articles of the dear Restitution. It does seem as I see and hear of so much wickedness going on in the outside world, as though we ought to have on the whole armor of God. It does seem sometimes, as though people turn ears from the truth, but we must not get weary in well doing, for there are great and precious promises to them that overcome. Oh, what a grand hope when we think of it, that we will all meet in the kingdom, and that Christ will dwell with men and be their king. How thankful we ought to be that Jesus was born, and was sacrificed by God to be put to death so that we might have a chance to inherit that eternal blessing.

I wish you all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. Yours in the hope of eternal life.

Brethren and Sisters of like precious faith:

I thought I would write a few lines to you through the dear old Restitution. It is all the preaching we have here since Bro. W. H. Wilson left. There are only a few of us here, but we meet regularly every first day to break bread and search the Scriptures. There are lots of meetings here, such as they are, but we do not take much comfort in attending, as they so often contradict the plainest statements of God's Word. We would like so much, if we could have some meetings that were in accordance with the Word. We believe that the time for work is very short, and that ere long our King will come, and we desire to be found among those that are ready to meet him, even though the world may think us odd or peculiar. Your sister waiting for the kingdom.

Editor Restitution:

The year 1893, now drawing to its close, I am reminded among other things, that my subscription for The Restitution should be attended to, you will therefore find enclosed a postal order for $1.50. The Restitution with my Bible, the Word of God, has been my meat and drink for many years, and is the last thing I should think to cut off in practicing economy, which is so necessary these days. And now, may the God of heaven bless The Restitution and its editor and its readers and contributors, whose names I often scan with pleasure, is the prayer of your brother waiting for the redemption of Israel.

Dear Restitution:

Having recently obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, under the ministry of Bro. J. F. Wagoner, we feel it is our duty to write you a short letter expressive of the hope that is in us. How different and how much brighter the future seems to us, being without hope in the world, until we heard the truth from the lips of that dear brother. We have turned away from the majority and fallen in line with the little flock, knowing that if we continue faithful a little while longer, we shall receive the promised reward. Yours in hope of the soon coming King.

Emma & Lee Southerland.

Dear ones of like precious Faith, greeting:

There are many that I would like to see, but that is impossible in this life; there may be some that have not forgotten me (Ollie Skeels). We will have to be content with their names and a few words of cheer. Many I remember, but I never see their names any more, where are they? Are they dead? If not, let us have their names, if no more. I am one of the few who are still looking for the King of beauty to come and reign on earth, although I heard a man say a short time ago, that the kingdom had come. If it has come, I am very much disappointed. It is not the glorious time the prophets said it would be, and so we will conclude that this man was mistaken, for Christ taught us to pray, thy kingdom come, and we will pray that prayer till it does come. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

Mrs. Ollie Bradley.

Editor Restitution:

To the brothers and sisters scattered through this sin cursed earth, I would say, wife and I are still in the faith, and are looking for the soon coming King, Christ Jesus, to rule the earth in righteousness. I love to read the cheering letters from the brethren and sisters, and would say, I am a constant reader of our Restitution and other journals; but above all the papers, give me The Restitution.

This is a new field and much good might be done here, if we had a good preacher to preach for us. Why don't some of our preaching brethren come to Oklahoma and locate? Don't be afraid of the Indians.

Finally, brethren, be of good cheer, and if we are not permitted to see each other in this life, may we meet in the kingdom of Christ. I will gladly answer all letters from the brethren, desiring information as to our country. I remain yours in hope of eternal life.

M. L. Adams.

Dear Restitution:

You will find enclosed $3, one-half to apply on my subscription for The Restitution, and the rest for some of the Lord's poor, you can put it where you think it would be best read; as for us we could not do without it. The Restitution is all the preaching we have here in the far west. There are a few names here that claim to believe the faith of the gospel, but are drifting down with the tide. Husband and I are trying to live so as to be accepted when Jesus comes. We have been scattering papers and tracts to those who will read them, but no one is interested. There are a few searching for truth. My desire is, that Jesus may soon come, and put down all evil and restore all things. We are very lonely here, we read our Bibles and papers Sundays. We take great comfort in the letters in The Restitution, it seems like a social meeting, it cheers us on our lonely way. Perhaps I have written enough. Yours in the blessed hope.

Mrs. E. T. Morris.

California.

Editor Restitution:

As my subscription expires in a few days I enclose money order for $1.50 for which you will please send me the paper another year, as its weekly visits are very welcome to us. I am not doing much in the Master's vineyard just now, surrounded by blind sectarianism it seems but little can be done. The Methodists have just closed a long protracted meeting at their church in our neighborhood; they done but very little. After a rest for the people of a few weeks we expect to have a meeting at our school house to continue for several nights. This seems to be the only way anything can be accomplished, as it takes so much reasoning to get the people's minds settled on the important truths of the Bible. The popular belief to get one's name on a church book and pay the preacher well is all that is necessary, is very popular nowadays, but a faith that is based on Bible truths, that makes a man a better man in every sense of the word, is very unpopular, and people are slow to believe. But let us that have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, stand firm in the faith, as the reward will be sure.

Wishing The Restitution and all its readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year,

Your brother,
J. F. Pierson.

Report of Labor.

Since the 22nd of September, I have been in the field all the time.

I first went to Ingraham, Ill. I preached 12 discourses, and immersed one lady from Clay Co. Ill., we had good meetings.

From here I went to Mount Morish and held meeting seven days. Preached 8 discourse.

The next point was New Hope, Ill. Held meetings ten days and preached 11 discourses.

From here I went to the Claypool neighborhood and remained eight days, or over two Sundays. Preached 11 discourses. I then went home. Found wife and son both well.

After two nights and one day, I left for Argos, Ind., and held meetings from Thursday night until the next Tuesday. I found the brethren alive to the truth. I then came home and rested over one Sunday, and then went to Ripley, Ill. On account of bad weather the meetings were closed sooner than had been expected. Preached 8 discourses. Found the brothers and sisters alive to the truth. I will always remember their kindness to me. May the dear Lord reward them in his everlasting Kingdom. A few of the brethren here have been battling for the truth for many years. God bless them. Sister Jennie Cox, came from Cooperstown to attend our meeting and remained until the close. She is one of our faithful ones in the good cause. While others have gone to other churches for a home she has remained firm on the promises of God. May she reach the everlasting Kingdom of God's Son. We fear that when some are called to give an account of their stewardship in the day of reckoning, they will find they have been away from home. The command of God is, "Come out of her, O, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, for her sins have reached [illegible] heaven."

[illegible]tion:

Believing that each effort, however humble, that is put forth to send out the Word of life, will be of interest to the Household of Faith, I herewith send brief report of my visit to Kentucky. Many years ago Bro. Bro. L. Skeels with his family was journeying to Tennessee, but stopping awhile in central Kentucky gave a number of illustrated lectures on prophecy and the leading truths of the Bible. A goodly number became interested, and after a number had obeyed from the heart the significant form of doctrine, the original intention of going to Tennessee was abandoned. Brother Skeels and family located on a little home where both father and mother fell under the power of the enemy death, leaving four daughters and one son, one of the daughters is married, the others with the brother reside in the humble little home where by industry and the possession of rare gifts as musicians they live comfortably, enjoying the sweet social pleasures that the Christian religion so largely increases. The eldest daughter possesses in addition to fine musical attainments a high order of artistic talent, some of her paintings being highly appreciated by admirers of the beautiful art. Only social recognition is needed to bring the products of her brush into successful competition with the most popular artists. But how often the words of the poet find living illustrations in the struggles for existence:

> "Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
> The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear,
> Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
> And waste its fragrance on the desert air."

It was from this family that the pressing invitation came, the earnest Macedonian cry, "come over and help us," to which call we responded, leaving the dear ones at home, invoking the Father's care for them. November 30th found us speeding southward over the L. E. & W. to Indianapolis where after a short halt took the fast train over the J. M. & I. to Louisville, and as the night train did not stop at our destination on L. & N. road we staid over night in the busy city. The morning train pulled out of the city as a bright December sun was shining down upon the Kentucky hills. The road runs near a chain of hills that extend across the state. The eye is constantly feasted upon the grand scenery that varies just enough to break the monotony. The hills seem as if dropped from above, hill upon hill, as if the mythological giants of creation had "piled Pelion upon Ossa." Sometimes the train swept through a beautiful gem of nature's choicest green.

> "There's a low green valley on the old Kentucky shore, > Where I've whiled many happy hours away."

Then from the slope of some bold hill and nestled amid the green cedars could be seen a lonely cabin, where no visible means of substance could be seen, and the wild, weird spot was suggestive of the secret operations of the "moonshiner." At the station we met Bro. Frank Skeels and in a few minutes were speeding over a good road over hill and dale to the little home on the hill that has obtained the appropriate name of "Happy Hill," christened by the songs of the happy inmates of the home. "Happy Woods" in Louisiana gave birth to the finest products of Bro. Wilson's pen, and there seems to be a kind of inspiration in the scenery here, and I have been firm in the belief since I came here that some where earnest prayers were being offered for the success of the precious Word. Do you ask why? The answer is simple, before coming here I could only endure the labor of three or four discourses, while here for fifteen nights and two days I was enabled to speak not less than one and one-half hours and sometimes longer, and to reach these seventeen meetings walked a distance of over fifty miles, besides the trips of social visits and sight-seeing in this land of wonders. The interest increased from the beginning until the [illegible] "crowded houses" was the order. The direct results of this meeting as previously reported were three, one a Baptist, one a Disciple and the other his wife a Methodist; but the law of adoption required a new name, ignoring Jew, Greek, Baptist, or Methodist. So they were adopted into the Household of Faith, taking the family name which we earnestly pray they may keep sacred. At least a dozen others were almost persuaded, and hopes are entertained that they will yet obey.

The course of teaching these people was slightly different from my usual practice, instead of a lesson read there was given an exposition of some misapplied passage, this being followed after a brief interval of singing and prayer by the regular discourse. Invitations were given from time to time to the audience to present doubtful texts or such as were supposed to teach the Platonic theory. The usual texts of course were given, and the harmony shown which in most cases was satisfactory. The interest we think was increased by the distribution of tracts, and the interests of THE RESTITUTION were we hope forwarded by the distribution of about twenty sample copies at this place. All missionary efforts ought to be supplemented by a free distribution of tracts. And it would relieve the missionary if some generous souls who say they cannot preach orally would aid in this commendable work. Let every legitimate effort now be put forth, and let us "compel" them to come to the rich feast that will soon be partaken of. The arrangement was made before I came to hold meetings some ten miles from where we began, and while this was for the purpose of accommodating some of the brethren at the other place I cannot help thinking we should have remained when the interest seemed so good, but we are here and shall try with the blessing of God to awaken an interest. Bro. Terhune just before his death built a comfortable house for worship, but met a sudden death by accident. The seed sown here by Bros. Terhune, Skeels and Hatch is yet bearing fruit. And it is yet to be hoped that the humble effort now being made will result in the salvation of others. Are we not too anxious sometimes, brethren, to see immediate results of our labors? Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God only can give the desired increase. Is the truth compared to seed? Should we then not wait patiently for results? Seeds must have time to germinate. So must truth. Let us be faithful and patiently wait. The meetings will be continued here a few nights and then if the Lord wills I shall return to the field in Indiana, or wherever calls for labor may demand. The first meeting was held upon land that thirty-one years ago was the scene of deadly strife. I have been shown the places where brother met brother in a hand to hand struggle for life. In walking over the field, I picked up a minnie ball that on that bloody October day was sent on its deadly mission. I saw trees that yet show the marks of that terrible leaden hail that covered the ground with dead soldiers so thick that one could walk on the dead across that bloody field. The Confe[illegible] had formed their line of battle [illegible] the steep bluffs of Chaplin R[illegible] which with its tributary [illegible]" formed a triangle, w[illegible] Federal troops held a hig[illegible] of land a half mile to the south-east. The intervening ground was the arena of one of the fiercest conflicts fought during the war. Standing on this blood-drenched soil the scene came most vividly before me and I thought how grand the hope that when our blessed Lord comes,

> "He will make all wars to cease,
> Man no more shall hate his brother;
> But shall dwell in quiet peace."

God hasten the day when the curse shall roll from the earth as the vapors vanish from the sunlight. As ever in hope.

PRESENTS FOR FRIENDS.

I hereby offer until further notice one copy of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," leather gilt binding; one copy of same in cloth binding; one copy of "Twelve Words;" one of 8-page tract; and one of "Seeking and Finding," all for the low price of one dollar. This offer is made for the good of the cause of truth. Send to Wiley Jones, Manchester, Va.

Try and get a new name for our paper for 1894.

Please Read and Heed.

The readers of THE RESTITUTION know full well that no appeals have been made of late in its columns. Its managers have known that the finances of our patrons have in most cases been low, and we considered them. However, at this time when the old year is almost done and a new year about to open upon us, it is necessary to present our case for consideration.

THE RESTITUTION has been issued each time during the year promptly. The articles selected for filling its pages have been generally satisfactory to all. To be sure, some differences of opinion have been found, and discussed, but all in a spirit of Christian love.

Our expectation is to continue through the year 1894 as in the past year. We therefore, ask all our old patrons to not only renew promptly their subscriptions, but to make an effort to increase our circulation. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894. New subscribers sent now will be given the remainder of the issues of 1893 free. Get your new subscribers now.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men. Some will plead that they can pay better some months in the future than now. We do not wish to doubt your word, and do not, but you must remember we are totally unacquainted with you, and while we might if we personally knew you be willing to trust you, we are not ABLE FINANCIALLY to carry your account. We therefore suggest that you borrow the $1.50 from some friend at home, and that will shift the burden of your account to some one else. Thus the load will be distributed to many instead of being put on one, and will be much easier borne.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Midwinter Fair Excursions.

On account of the Midwinter Fair at San Francisco, special low rate tourist tickets to that city as well as to San Diego, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, and other winter resorts in California, will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines. Tourists can have the choice of routes from Chicago and St. Louis. Tickets will be limited for return passage until April 30th, 1894. CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA. JANUARY 10, 1894. NO. 2.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Original.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 16.

1. And he said also unto the disciples. There was a certain rich man who had a steward: and this one was accused unto him of scattering his property.

2. And summoning him he said, what is this I hear about thee? Render the account of thy stewardship. for thou canst no longer serve as steward.

3. And the steward said to himself, what shall I do, because my lord is taking away my stewardship from me? To dig, I am not strong enough, to solicit, I am ashamed.

4. I know what I will do, that when I shall have been transferred from my stewardship, they may receive me into their own houses.

5. And summoning each one of his lords debtors, he said unto the first, how much dost thou owe my lord?

6. And he said, one hundred baths (a bath was one-tenth of an omer Hebrew measure) of olive oil. And he said unto him, accept thy writings (bills I suppose) and sit down quickly and write fifty.

7. After that he said to another, and thou, how much dost thou owe? And he said one hundred koroi of wheat (a Hebrew measure equal to 10 Greek medmini attic measure. A medminos was about forty-eight quarts our measure. So he owed about one hundred and fifty bushels). He saith unto him, accept thy writings (bills) and write eighty.

8. And the Lord praised the steward for the wrong-doing, because he had acted (authorized) in a thoughtful (or prudent) way. Because the sons of this age are more thoughtful (prudent) than the sons of the light are toward their own generation (or race).

9. And I say unto you, do ye make friends for yourselves with the mamon of injustice, that when it shall have failed, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles.

10. The one who is faithful in a least thing is faithful also in much; and the one who is unjust in a least thing is unjust also in much.

11. If then ye have not become faithful in the use of the unjust mamon, who will entrust you with the true?

12. And if ye have not become faithful in the use of another's, who will give you your own?

13. No house-servant can serve two lords as a bond-servant, for either he will hate the one and love the other; or he will cleave to one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mamon as bond-servants.

14. And the Pharisees who were lovers of money heard these (statements) and mocked at him.

15. Ye are they who are justifying yourselves in the sight of men; but God knoweth your hearts; because the thing that is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God.

16. The law and the prophets were until Joannes, from that time on the kingdom of God is announced as good tidings, and every one is forcing himself into it.

17. But it is easier for the heavens and the earth to pass away than for one letter point of the law to fail.

18. Any one who divorceth his wife and marrieth another, committeth adultery; and any one who marrieth one who hath been divorced from a husband committeth adultery.

19. Now there was a certain rich man and he was clothing himself in purple and fine linen, and giving himself good cheer day after day in splendor.

20. And there was a certain beggar Lazaros by name, accustomed to be cast at his gateway, who was afflicted with ulcers and who longed to be full-fed from what fell from the rich man's table. Moreover the dogs came and licked his ulcers.

22. And it came to pass that the beggar died and was carried away by the angels into Habraam's bosom. And the rich man also died and was buried.

23. And in Hades (the grave) he lifted up his eyes, being in extreme trial-tests (touch-stone tests) and he seeth Habraam afar off and Lazaros in his bosom.

24. And he called and said father Habraam, have mercy on me, and send Lazaros, to dip the tip of his forefinger in water and cool my tongue, because I am suffering woe in this flame.

25. And Habraam said, child, remember that thou didst receive thy good things in thy life time and Lazaros likewise the bad things. And now here he is being comforted and thou art suffering woe.

26. And with all these (objections) a great gulf hath been fixed between us and you, so that those who desire to cross over from here to you cannot, nor may they cross over from there to us.

27. And he said, I request thee then Father to send him to the house of my father;

28. For I have five brothers, that he may go through the testimony to them that they may not also have come into this place of extreme trial-test.

29. And Habraam saith; they have Mouses and the prophets. May they have hearkened to them.

30. And he said no, no, Father Habraam, but if some one shall have gone unto them from the dead, they will repent.

31. And he said unto him; if they do not hearken unto Mouses and the prophets, neither will they have been persuaded, should some one have arisen from among the dead.

COMMENT.

"Toward their own generation" instead of "for their own generation," R. V.

The words translated "wiser" and "wisely" C. V. and R. V. mean "thoughtful" or "prudent" which gives an entirely different trend to the argument.

"Lords" instead of "masters" R. V. Why switch and take a side-track instead of the straight route in an argument like this. We start with a "lord" and a "steward." The word translated "master" here by the R. V. is the same word translated "lord" at the outset. There is an object in this. What is the object? Not a mere question of literary style and repetition I think. There is a difference between "lord" and "master" both in Greek and English, and if a train is started with a conductor I don't think it is the thing to call him an "engineer" before you get to the end of the route.

"House-servant" instead of "servant" merely here R. V. "The household of faith" is the constellation in the firmament here.

The idea of "bond-service" contained in the verb also left out by the R. V. and a knowledge of this thought necessary to any proper understanding of the argument. "Bond-service" remember was voluntary and for life and very different from any other kind of service. Though God owns us body and soul, he gives us Christians the "choice once for all" to serve him as "bond-servants" or be "the slaves" of sin and Satan. This is our Christian liberty so-called. To stand fast in an infinity of rectitude with its possibilities or be ensnared in the narrowness of wrong inefficiency and inability—to live in the truth or die in the wrong.

"Is forcing himself into it" instead of "entereth violently into it" R. V. There is a vast difference between my making a forcible attempt and succeeding in what I attempt. Now, you do not suppose that Christ said or meant to say that people after Joannes' time were actually storming or going to get into the kingdom of heaven by violence do you? No, he meant to say that they would think they could, and this is well illustrated in our day even.

"A letter-point" instead of a "tittle" R. V. Until the Hebrew scholars get some accurate knowledge of the "letter-points" according to this they'd better drop the Hebrew argument and give their attention to the Greek it seems to me. For they can't get a text to translate accurately until they get this first question settled. The Greek was good enough for the early Church of the apostolic day, and ought to be good enough for us it seems to me. When the theological seminaries take the time they waste on Hebrew and give it to the Greek Scriptures they'll turn out ministers and scholars who won't be fooling away their own and other peoples' time wrestling over the new theology. There is no new theology. It is all as old as Mouses and the prophets.

"Was clothing himself" instead of "was clothed" R. V. The contrast is between the way God clothes and the way man clothes, between the selfishness that clothes itself while it neglects to clothe others in need and the way God does in his good time.

"Accustomed to be cast" instead of "was laid" as though this occurred only once R. V.

"Extreme-tests" instead of "torments" R. V. God applies "extreme tests," but he does not "torment." Read Ezekiel on this subject.

He uses this same term to interpret God's "sword," "famine" and "pestilence," which he brings upon Hierousalem and Israel. The term is "Basanos."

When was Lazaros carried away by the angels? Unless the Scriptures contradict themselves it cannot occur before the "resurrection of the just" (justified) at the beginning of "the thousand years." When does the rich man lift up his eyes in the grave (Hades)? Not until the final resurrection of the small and great a thousand years afterwards.

It being an unconscious state of death that he has been in he naturally infers that he has not been dead very long. "As the tree falleth it will lie."

"Go through the testimony" instead of "testify" R. V. It does not take as long to go through the necessary "testimony" as it does the shorter catechism to say nothing about the thirty-nine articles or the "new theology."

"Should some one" etc. This some one is Christ of course and this very thing referred to here has occurred. How much easier is it now to reach an obdurate sinner than it was with "Mouses and the prophets?" How is it with "Bob Ingersoll?"

Chas. Gardner.

The Immortal Book. No. 6.

"I rejoice at thy Word, as one that findeth great spoil." Psa. cxix. 162.

The historical fulfilment of the marvellous prophecies found in Dan. ii. and vii., matches all the cunning of infidels. It is a fact well authenticated, that many prophecies related in that book were made hundreds of years prior to their fulfilment and at a period of time when there was little or no probability that they ever would come to pass. And yet many of them have been fulfilled, even to small details. There is nothing surer in this world than that every word spoken by the Most High will surely come to pass. To illustrate this, I will quote a remarkable paragraph from Rollin's ancient history, relating to the division of the dominion of Alexander. This citation is as remarkable as the one submitted in No. 5. relating to Christ from Josephus. Says Rollin: "But it had already been written, that the kingdom of Alexander should be divided and rent asunder after his death, and that it should not be transmitted in the usual manner to his posterity. Dan. xi. 4. No efforts of human wisdom could establish a sole successor to that prince. In vain did they deliberate and consult and decide; nothing could be executed contrary to the pre-ordained event, and nothing short of it could possibly subsist. A superior and invincible power had already disposed of the kingdom and divided it by an inevitable decree, as will be evident in the sequel. The circumstances of this partition had already been denounced nearly three centuries before this time; the portions of it had already been assigned to different possessors, and nothing could frustrate that division which was only to be deferred for a few years. Till the arrival of that period, men might indeed raise commotions, and concert a variety of movements; but all their efforts would only tend to the accomplishment of what had been ordained by the sovereign Master of kingdoms, and of what had been foretold by his prophet. * * *

After the battle of Ipsus, the four confederate princes divided the dominions of Antigonus among themselves, and added them to those they already possessed. The empire of Alexander was thus divided into four kingdoms, of which Ptolemy had Egypt, Libya, Arabia, Coelosyria and Palestine; Cassander had Macedonia and Greece; Lysimachus, Thrace, Bithynia, and some other provinces beyond the Hellespont, with the Bosphorus; and Seleucus, all the rest of Asia to the other side of the Euphrates, and as far as the river Indus. * *

* These four kings are the four horns of the he-goat in the prophecy of Daniel, who succeeded in the place of the first horn that was broken. The first horn was Alexander, king of Greece, who destroyed the empire of the Medes and Persians, designated the ram with two horns; and the four horns, are those four kings who rose up after him, and divided his empire among them, but they were not of his posterity.

They were likewise represented by the four heads of the leopard, which are introduced in another part of the same prophecy. These prophecies of Daniel were fully accomplished by the last partition of Alexander's empire; other divisions had, indeed been made before this, but they were only of provinces, which were consigned to governors, under the brother and son of Alexander, and none but the last was the legal partition. These prophecies, therefore, are to be understood of this alone, for they evidently represent these four successors of Alexander, in the quality of 'four kings,' 'four stood up for it.' But not one of Alexander's successors obtained the regal dignity until about three years before the last division of the empire. And even this dignity was at first precarious, being assumed by each of the several parties, merely by his own authority, and not acknowledged by any of the rest. Whereas after the battle of Ipsus, the treaty made between the four confederates when they had defeated their adversary, and divested him of his dominions, assigned each of them their dominions under the appellation of so many kingdoms, and authorized and acknowledged them as kings and sovereigns independent of any superior power. These four kings are Ptolemy, Seleucus, Cassander, and Lysimachus.

We can never sufficiently admire, in this and the other places, wherein the completion of the prophecies of Daniel will be observed, the strong light with which the prophet penetrates the thick gloom of futurity, at a time when there was not the least appearance of any thing he foretells. With how much certainty and exactness, even amidst the variety of these revolutions, and a chaos of singular events, does he determine each particular circumstance, and fix the number of the several successors! How expressly has he pointed out the nation that was to be the Grecian; described the countries they were to possess; measured the duration of their empires and the extent of their power, inferior to that of Alexander; in a word, with what lively colors has he drawn the characters of those princes, and specified their alliances, treaties, treachery, marriages and success! Can any one possibly ascribe to chance, or human foresight so many circumstantial predictions, which at the time of their being denounced, were so remote from probability; and may we not evidently discover in them the character and traces of divinity, to whom all ages are present in one view, and who alone determines, at his will, the fate of all the kingdoms and empires of the world?"—Rollin's Ancient History. Vol. iii. pp. 228, 206, 207.

Again, there is nothing more touching, pathetic, and remarkable than the prophetic lament of Jeremiah over the destruction of the Holy City, the holy and beautiful house, the destruction and devastation of Israel, by sword and famine. Jeremiah in this truly pitiful and heart-rending lament, relates the particulars of that memorable seige by Titus, in the year A. D. 70. This lament was written 658 years before the things related in the lament, became facts. Josephus was an eye-witness of this siege. Read the following selection from Jeremiah's lament and compare it with Josephus' account of Titus' siege, and you will be able to place beside each prophetic lament, an exact fulfilment.

"The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament: they languished together.

Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more: her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads: they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people: because the children and the sucklings swoon in the streets of the city.

They say to their mothers, where is corn and wine? When they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom.

What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? What shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?

Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity: but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment.

All that pass by, clap their hands at thee: they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?

All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash their teeth: they say: We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for: we have found, we have seen it.

The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied; and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

Their heart cried unto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest: let not the apple of thine eye cease.

Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord: lift up thine hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children of a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord?

The young and the old lie on the ground in the streets: my virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword: thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger: thou hast killed and not pitied.

How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed? the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street.

The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!

Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst: the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them.

They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills.

The Lord Jesus, forty years prior to its fulfillment, predicted the same thing. He says: "There shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations," Luke xxi. 23, 24.

In fulfillment of this, I quote from history as follows:

"Sixty thousand Roman soldiers unremittingly besieged them; they encompassed Jerusalem like a wall, and hemmed them in on every side; they brought down their high and fenced walls to the ground; they spared not the people; they burned the temple. With it the last hope of the Jews was extinguished. They raised, at the sight, an expiring cry of sorrow and despair. Ten thousand were there slain, and six thousand victims were enveloped in its blaze. The whole city, full of the famished dying, and of the murdered dead, presented no picture but that of despair, no scene but of horror. The aqueducts and the city sewers were crowded as the last refuge of the hopeless. Two thousand were found dead there, and many were dragged from thence and slain. The Roman soldiers put all indiscriminately to death, and ceased not till they became faint and weary and overpowered with the work of destruction. But they only sheathed the sword to light the torch. They set fire to the city in various places. The flames spread everywhere, and were checked but for a moment by the red streamlets in every street. Jerusalem became heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest. Within about five months eleven hundred thousand human beings perished. In the siege, and in the previous and subsequent destruction of the cities and villages of Judea, according to the specified enumeration of Josephus, about one million three hundred thousand suffered death. Ninety-seven thousand were led into captivity. There was a curse on the land, that hath scathed it, and a judgment on the people that scattered them throughout the world. The prophecies are as clear as the facts are visible."

"There is not a country on the face of the earth where the Jews are unknown. They are found alike in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. They are citizens of the world, without a country. They have trod the snows of Siberia, and the sands of the burning desert: the European traveler hears of their existence in regions which he cannot reach." God said they should be "sifted among the nations as corn is sifted in a sieve."

"Among these nations thou shalt find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest; but the Lord shall give thee a trembling heart."

"In the reign of the tyrant Phocas, a general sedition broke out among the Jews in Syria. They and their enemies fought with equal desperation. They obtained the mastery in Antioch; but a momentary victory only led to a deeper humiliation, and to the infliction of more aggravated cruelties than before. They were soon subdued and taken captive, many of them were maimed, others executed, and all the survivors were banished from the city. Gregory the Great afforded them a temporary respite from oppression, which only rendered their spoilition more complete, and their suffering more acute, under the cruel oppression of Heraclius. That emperor, unable to satiate his hatred against them by inflicting a variety of punishments on those who resided within his own dominions, and by finally expelling them from the empire, exerted his influence so effectually against them in other countries, that they suffered under a general and simultaneous persecution from Asia to the farthest extremities of Europe. In Spain, conversion, imprisonment, or banishment, were their only alternatives. In France a similar fate awaited them. They fled from country to country, seeking in vain any rest for the sole of their foot. Even the wide-extended plains of Asia afforded them no resting-place, but have been often spotted with their blood. They were everywhere the objects of popular insult and oppression, frequently of a general massacre. A time of festivity to others was often the season of mockery and persecution to them. It was the custom at Thoulouse to smite them on the face every Easter. At Beziers they were attacked with stones from Palm-Sunday to Easter, an anniversary of insult and cruelty productive of bloodshed, to which the populace were regularly instigated by a sermon from the bishop. It was the policy of the kings of France to employ them as a sponge to suck their subjects' money, which they might afterwards express with less odium than direct taxation would incur. According to Mezeray, they were seven times banished from France. They were expelled from Spain; and by the lowest computation, one hundred and seventy thousand families departed from that kingdom. At Verdun, Treves, Mentz, Spires, Worms, many thousands of them were pillaged and massacred. A remnant was saved by a feigned and transient conversion; but the greater part of them barricaded their houses, and precipitated themselves, their families, and their wealth, into the rivers or the flames. These massacres and depredations on the Jews were renewed at each crusade."

"We'll not give up the Bible,
But spread abroad its light,
Until our absent Lord shall come,
To end this weary night;
We'll bow before its gracious power,
And with one voice and heart,
Resolve that from God's sacred Word,
We'll never, never part."

A THOUGHT for the times:—Daniel Webster said, "If you divorce capital from labor, capital is hoarded and labor starves." •

BROTHER JOBLIN writes from Cleveland that "two more children of Adam have recently become Abraham's seed by induction into Christ, and we thank God and take courage."

SOME one has said that "mind without heart, intelligence without conduct, cleverness without goodness, are powers in their way, but they may be powers for mischief. We may be instructed or amused by them, but it is sometimes as difficult to admire them as it would be to admire the dexterity of a pickpocket or the horsemanship of a highwayman." •

THE great historian, Sismondi speaking of his attendance at a church of England while visiting that country, said, "I left the church in haste, that I might not have to speak with any one of the indignation that the minister had excited in me by his preaching about eternal torments. . . I am determined never again to enter an English church again that I may be forced to listen to such blasphemies." •

WE recently met with a paragraph which we commend to every reader of THE RESTITUTION, it read in this way: "The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has ever been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments in order to enjoy themselves." •

DISPATCHES from Vienna show that Austria is waking up to the fact that her neighbors have quite outstripped her in war preparations, and she must make haste to remedy that state of things by increasing her cavalry fifty per cent., and the creation of reserves of infantry, and increasing the number and efficiency of the landwehr. The minister who announced that the government was about to augment its forces being loudly cheered, it would seem to be a popular move. •

AN astonishing piece of information is found on page 47 of Prof. McWhorter's "Yahveh Christ." It is to the effect that two mysterious, supernatual, winged figures, and between them a sword-like revolving flame, were stationed eastward from Eden, not so much to keep Adam out of the garden, as to preserve the knowledge of the "way of the tree of life, in the world. . . . To man in his altered relations 'the cherubim' with the flaming fire between them, took the place of the tree of life in the world, by a direct appeal to the eye, telling of judgment, and yet, under the relations of the promise, speaking of Mercy." •

AN English writer recently said, "It seems most systematic that as the papal power has been extinguished after a period of 1260 years, with three terminal periods, the Mohammedan power should also be broken after a similar period, especially seeing that the two earlier dates have been marked by significant events. What shall be the exact nature of the events of 1897, or thereabouts, cannot be definitely stated, but there is good ground for anticipation that the year will see, at least, the termination of Mohammedan power, and a great step towards Israel's restitution. We also hold most decidedly to this opinion, and look for great changes in the immediate future. The present signs are very interesting to the prophetic student. Apparently they are insignificant and the forces quiescent; but the undercurrents are strong, working all things in the direction of the appointed consummation." •

[illegible] among the high. officers of state in Germany is causing the Kaiser trouble. He wishes to keep both sides with himself and finds this a difficult task.

THE killing of some English troops, who were sent on a little expedition against natives, by a body of French soldiers, though claimed by them to have been caused by mistake, is making some very plain talk. "It would not be surprising if an attempt were made before long in France to raise the cry that war would be cheaper than peace. It must be insisted, however, that the general tendancy of the holiday season throughout Europe has been to calm the war fever in the popular breast, and unless the West African or some other incident revives it midwinter will pass under more peaceable auspices.

Sicily is fairly in revolution and the peril of the constitutional government in Italy is grave. Such information as the telegraph has been permitted to give of events in the islands and of the situation in Italy itself presents an inadequate picture of the nature of the crisis."

"BEHOLD," says the Spirit, "I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded." This is the rock, the Anointed Jesus, and hence the foundation of the Father's spiritual house—the basis of our faith and hope the living stone indicates the nature of the building, and suggests—are we living stones? •

WHAT next? Pope Leo XIII. is strongly exhorting the priesthood of the Catholic church, and in particular its patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops to study the Bible, in order that this glorious source of revelation may be more safely and abundantly opened for the use of the Lord's flock. After quoting 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," etc., the encyclical says it is God's intention to prove by the examples of Christ and the apostles that Jesus was in the habit of appealing to the Bible for his own limitations and divine origin; and warns the clergy not to use their own language in preference to God's words. •

REGULARITY of effort is as conservative of moral health, as it is of physical strength. Practiced on any line of labor, it is sure to give one a creditable place sooner or later. "Seest thou a man that is diligent about his business, he shall stand before kings." This would seem to apply to any calling one could honestly engage in. And we think the principle holds good in spiritual things as well. And the young Christian does well who sets his mental house in order by establishing the habit of regularly studying the divine record, and laying a good foundation for a successful career in the Master's business. It is no easy matter to eradicate tendencies to irregularity and impropriety of thought and action, to weed out old habits born of convention and indulgence. •

Rejoicing in Hope.

"Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice" is what Paul said to the saints at Philippi and all other saints. Only saints are in the Lord, and of course no others could rejoice in him. We learn from the fifth chapter and second verse of the letter to the saints at Rome that they and the apostle were rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. And in 1 Thess. i. 12 we learn that the glory hoped for is in connection with the kingdom of God. The saints at Thessalonica had been invited to God's kingdom and glory; and from the 21st verse of the 3rd chapter of Revelations we learn that all the overcomers share the throne of the world with Jesus the first-born among many brethren. And it would seem impossible for one who fully realized the highness of this calling of God in the anointed Jesus not to rejoice in hope of it. We know of a surety that flesh and blood are not eligible to the kingdom of God—we must be born again, born of the spirit,—born from above, before we can see the kingdom;—be lifted clear out of the human into the divine. Oh, transporting thought! The thousand and one ills of life that now afflict us will then have passed away. We shall see Jesus and be made like him; our weakness changed into his might,—our frailty into his strength, our corruptibility into his undecaying nature, our deformity into his effulgent glory; these tottering limbs will be endowed with endless vigor; these eyes that fail with weakness or blink with age, or are sightless with disease will behold him and glory in the sight and feel weak no more. We shall be like him. Our whole nature will be changed and aglow with unutterable glory, shining as the brightness of the firmament, and glisten as the stars forever and ever. Oh what a hope! What can hinder its possessor from rejoicing in the Lord always? •

Experience.

"Shall see him as he is. Shall be like him. Purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

In my early youth, while a student of the Ohio university, being then without hope, having no love for God, nor for his only begotten and well beloved Son, being in my first tuition days, I often visited my parental home, distant ten miles. One of those visits looms up in my memory, as if it had been but a day since, a walk and a vision of yesterday, so bright and so enchanting. My pathway was through a lonely primeval forest, densely clothing a two mile ridge, with no human voice nor feathered songster to break the silence or cheer me in my loneliness. The morning was one of alternate lights and shadows, while the heavens showed partly its pure etherial and one-half of light cumuli. Suddenly, by an impulse foreign to myself, my eye was turned upward, when a vision of enchantment covered the opening heavens. There were fields of deep blue sky, and others of flying clouds, but between them, what a ravishing sight! If God is light, then his glory (brightness) filled my celestial vision and I was standing within the vestibule of Jehovah's uncreated glory, surrounding and filling me with ecstacy and bliss. I saw no shape, neither was I made blind for a season, nor did I hear a voice as one of old; but since the morning of that vision of light, whose extent upward was without limit, I have required no interpretation of Saul's day vision near Damascus; nor has the impression been less effective. It shaped my life from that day, and onward.

The vision found me a careless, thoughtless unbeliever—the son of a professed infidel, who scoffed at the Bible, at Jesus and his mission—it left me a penitent believer with a firm resolution so to live that I might have my home in that ineffable glory, when the earth shall be full of it. More than three score annual revolutions of our bright luminary have passed into the ocean of eternity since the morning of that bright vision, yet its foot prints on my memory and on my affections are as distinct as if made but a month or a day since—his magnetic pole of my faith and hope. As the magnetic needle, vibrating and trembling under the attraction of various disturbing objects, finally settles down pointing to the magnetic pole, so my faith and hope, agitated at times by worldly influences, always found their rest and happiness in pointing to the drapery enveloping that heavenly vision. For more than three score years, I have been looking for the coming Messiah to fill the earth with his royal glory. It is that blessed hope—Messiah's reign on the earth made new. It cannot be too literally understood and interpreted. Jesus said to John in Patmos: "Behold I come quickly," my whole being answers with the bride. "Even so come Lord Jesus." Why not love and earnestly desire his blessed appearing? Why seek shadows when the substance is so near? We shall be sons of God, joint-heirs with his beloved Son—members of his family, clothed with his likeness and his life—for we shall see him as he is, not as he was, the humbled babe of Bethlehem; but the lion of the tribe of Judah, King of kings, and Lord of lords, who shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem. We shall see him as he is—in his true character, when all questions as to his nature and sonship will be at once and forever solved. Amen, come Lord Jesus—quickly.

Feed My Lambs.

A subject to which I have given much thought and to which I would like to call the attention of my fellow laborers, as I conceive our experience has been very nearly the same. Very much of my labor has been lost for lack of a good following up. The evangelist works hard, presents the saving truth, a number embrace it, and then he has to leave the little flock to starve and freeze, or to be devoured by wolves,—almost as well never to have done the first work.

I was once asked a question by Bro. Weaver while working in Southern Michigan. He said, "Bro. Woodward, what would you think of a hen that would hatch out sixteen chickens and then go off, thinking her work all done, and let them starve?"

"Well," I replied, "I would consider her a better setter than mother."

"Well," he said, "that is just what you are going to do."

Sure enough, the little flock had to be left to go on a six months or a year or more fast. Our Lord was very thoughtful of the little tender lambs; yes, he would carry them in his bosom. "Feed my lambs," don't get their rations so high in the manger, the little creatures can't reach it, or even smell it, their little stomachs can't digest straw any more than the babes can Greek, and it is quite common to give an over-dose in English. I have found that out more than once. Milk for babes. I sometimes think too much of the spiritual food is prepared expressly for the old sheep that have very strong stomachs and very sharp teeth.

O I just want to praise the Lord for putting that "love feast" thought into Bro. Dwiggins' mind. Now the lambs will get a genuine sumptuous meal. May God help them to enjoy this rich repast.

Now, dear brethren, is it not possible to devise some means by which the distant churches, and especially the new ones, can have the necessary help which they so much require? Is it not quite as necessary to save those we have got as to reach after more and leave them to bear the same fate? Can it not be so arranged that each church can have preaching at stated times, though perhaps of necessity not very often? Perhaps the older churches which are thoroughly established can do with a little less preaching, in order that their hungry brethren can have a few crumbs. Then I would suggest that each brother, and especially each sister, for the sisters make much better missionaries than men, consider themselves a self-constituted committee to visit every member in each church and persuade just as many as possible to take THE RESTITUTION, for this is next to the living preacher, and may God bless our effort this coming year as never before.

The Dermatologist.

Dear Children:

You see I have placed a long, hard word at the top of this page. Why did I do it? To make you think. A dermatologist is one who treats diseases of the skin. He takes off ugly spots and wrinkles from the face and hands, but there are some wrinkles that he cannot make go away, only God can do that. Can you guess how? Does it not seem strange to think that God can make your faces smooth and sweet-looking and beautiful, when he is so far away? But He can. The dermatologist will tell you that there are some disfiguring lines that you can only make go away by living right. And that is how God smooths out the face. He gives us the Bible to live by. People who are like Jesus do not seem homely, but those who are fretful and angry, and fearfully wicked, are sure to mark their faces.

It is clearness, purity and nobleness of character that makes us beautiful; your noses, your chins, your ears and your foreheads are all affected by your characters. If you set yourselves to serving the dear Lord, a look of patience, submission, and holy love, will come creeping into your eyes, and will irradiate all your features.

Think it all over, and take your Bible for your dermatologist.

OUR "LOVE FEAST."

Being letters of greeting from scattered members of the Household of Faith, as suggested by our Brother R. S. Dwiggins. Continued from our issue of Dec. 27, '93.

Dear brothers and sisters, Greeting:

We have been reading the Love Feast letters in our paper (THE RESTITUTION) from the scattered ones of like precious faith, which makes our hearts rejoice to hear, or are so many testimonies, and such a pleasant and lovely spirit manifested. If it is so pleasant here now, how will it be when our blessed Savior comes to reward all of his faithful ones. Oh, if we are only ready to meet him and receive the welcome applaudit, well done thou good and faithful servant. Then, there will be more joys unspeakable, and a Love Feast that will always last. Oh, let us all try to be ready to meet our dear Savior when he comes to set up his glorious and everlasting kingdom. When the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Let us stand, therefore, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith we may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. We must work while he calls today for the night cometh when no man can work. So let us do all in our power to spread the blessed truth of the gospel. Each one try to get a subscriber for THE RESTITUTION, and scatter tracts, and every way we can to spread the truth, for we have but a short time to work and a great reward for it. Pray for us that we may be faithful and true to our blessed Lord. Yours in the blessed hope.

Dear Restitution.

God has placed his people on the watch tower, he has also placed them in his vineyard. It is the duty of those on the tower of observation, not only to give warning of approaching danger, but also to sound forth the glorious news which indicates the fulfilment of prophecy and the near approach of the time of the coming of the Bridegroom. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Behold the Bridegroom cometh, be ye ready to go forth to meet him, should be the bugle note which every watchman should sound forth from the God-given trumpet placed in his hands. Lift up your heads and rejoice, oh ye beloved ones, who are fully prepared for the Master's coming, for your redemption draweth nigh. "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be." What a prospect for the tired saint who has long worked, toiled and struggled, sometimes so faint and weary that he is almost ready to complain of his hard lot, but remembering the promised reward that lays at the end of the race, he has taken new courage and now he can almost see through to the end of his journey, and hear the words "the Master hath come and calleth for thee." Blessed hope, blessed prospect, soon to be realized by the faithful ones.

Dearly beloved, what a good Father we have. How long he has borne with our short comings. How many times we have to ask him to forgive us our trespasses. How patient he has been with us. How much he loves us without any merit in ourselves. How he takes care of us and preserves us from all manner of danger, without being under any obligation whatever to do so. In consideration of all these things, let us in the future be just as good children as we can, and do all we can to push forward the Master's cause.

Look upon yonder canvas while I paint a picture of the events which now cast their shadows before us. See the blue sky away to the east. On the right and the left is the waiting church, looking, longing and waiting for the expected Lord. Behind them is the world in midnight darkness. See that little cloud away to the east, as far as the eye can go. It is growing larger and coming nearer. Look very close and you will see, near the lower edge of the cloud, in letters of living fire, the word "Bridegroom." Listen, the angels are singing. Nearer and nearer comes the cloud. Now, it stops. There is a rift in it, and we behold the Savior in all his beauty. Again the cloud thickens and we no longer see the face we love so much. While we are gazing up into heaven, we see the dim outline of an angel just emerging from the clouds. Look, the angel is coming towards us, he is dressed in white apparel. He approaches us and says, ye children of God, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this Jesus which ye are looking for and whom ye have just seen, has come for his saints.

Looking again we see a great company of angels coming with the great sound of trumpets. Watch them while they go from cemetery to cemetery waking the sleeping saints. See the saints coming from the fours corners of the earth. Multitudes upon multitudes which no man can number. The angels are going among the living saints, changing them from mortality to immortality. The living saints now go to meet the risen ones. There is a great rejoicing. Families are being reunited, loved ones long separated, meet and rejoice together. The trumpets of the angels are sounding, the risen saints are shouting glory to God in the highest and the living saints are singing songs of praise and thanksgiving. In the midst of all this rejoicing a voice is heard from the cloud, saying, my well beloved, come up hither, and at once this great company are caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. Reader are you ready for the coming of the Master?

Dear Restitution:

A Christmas Greeting to Editorial Staff, Corresponding Editor and readers of THE RESTITUTION, from an aged and feeble pilgrim. We, my aged companion and myself feel that we are strangers in a strange land, journeying towards a better country, that is, a land soon to be made better by the removal of the curse. Very much alone in this world, shut in, and shut out.

Some of my readers will doubtless understand what it means. Having passed the allotted age of man, we can say with one of old, beyond that age we are beset with "labor and sorrow." We have many things to make us sad, but, dear brothers and friends, unite with me this Christmas in praising God for having shown us the way of life and salvation from sin and death, through the life and death of his only begotten Son. Although we have for a long time been chastened yet we are made to rejoice every day for the hope of something better in the near future. Although my eyesight will permit me to read but little, yet, I am able to get a square meal every morning before breakfast of that Bread that came down from heaven. Yes, as I have understood it for many years, it came in the promises of the One Only True God: through Moses, and the other prophets, including the One like unto him. I feast every day on that bread that alone can give eternal life. I have much I would like to say, but cannot.

Yours in the one hope,

J. D. SHERIDAN.

Dear Restitution:

I will give a report of a meeting held by Brother D. M. Hudler, in what is called the Eaton Schoolhouse. He preached 11 discourses to attentive congregations. It is four years since we have had any preaching here and that was by Bro. Hatch.

Bro. Hudler gave the privilege of asking questions, and the Presbyterian minister sent by his son, the following: "Who was Cain's wife, and who were the sons of God that married the daughters of men?" They were meant to hurt the meeting, but Bro. Hudler answered them in a brotherly spirit, and with the knowledge of the Scriptures.

There are but a few here in the faith of the things concerning the Kingdom of God, but I pray that we may be lively stones that we may make up part of that building of Christ.

I bid you a Merry Christmas.

Your brother in hope of eternal life in the Kingdom of God.

Dear Restitution:

It is with prayer and much meditation that I undertake to write as it is such a task for me, but hoping to encourage some one, I write. Let us do all that we do with faith, nothing doubting, and then may we anticipate a blessing from the Lord. If we doubt we sin. Let us see that we doubt not his Word for it will make us wise unto salvation.

Brothers Moncrief, Reed and Humphrey preach for us every fourth Sunday at Shady Grove, and we have some good meetings if there are but few of us. We had preaching yesterday, and in the evening we partook of the emblems of the sufferings and death of our dear Lord and Master, which was strengthening to me, and I hope to the rest. Though some seem careless, my faith is sure and steadfast in the Lord. Pray for me brethren and sisters, that I may continue to grow in the favor and knowledge of the Master.

Bro. Humphrey read from the Bible this morning concerning the keeping of the commandments, and it did us good. Let us practice keeping them, that we may receive the blessing.

I delight in reading letters from those scattered abroad, and would like to hear from Sister Abbie Howard again.

Your sister in hope of life through Christ only.

Dear Restitution:

As my subscription for the year 1893, has expired I enclose $1.50 for renewal. It is with great pleasure that I peruse its pages, especially those articles of Bro. Joblin, Wilson and many others; also Bro. Eychaner's "Sermons at Hickory Grove. It was almost like sitting under the sound of his voice.

I would say to the brothers and sisters abroad, I am trying by God's grace, to so live as to be worthy of a crown at the appearing of our Lord and Master. I oft times feel sad and discouraged when I see our friends and neighbors turning away from the truth, and saying by their actions they will not have it. Then I hear the sweet words of Jesus saying, fear not little flock, it is your Father's good will to give you the kingdom. So dear brothers and sisters, let us be firm and steadfast, for who shall separate us from the love of Christ. Yours looking for the King in his beauty.

MRS. F. W. CHAPIN.

Dear Restitution:

It being some time since I have written a few lines for your letter drawer, I thought that I would write, thinking perhaps there might be some this would interest. I would say that from last March until October the 11th, myself and husband have been making our home with the dear ones of like precious faith, at Scholls Ferry, Oregon. We were with them to their June meeting, which we enjoyed very much. Heard some splendid sermons from Bro. Skeels, Bro. Jaquith and one by Bro. Eshleman, from Seattle, Oregon. It was a feast to us, as we had been deprived so long of hearing any gospel sermons. We also enjoyed their Sunday schools every Sunday. Sister Almira Brooks being the superintendent, and often after Sunday school, when we would listen to Bro. Skeels or Bro. Jaquith preach, the words of the poet would come in our minds:

> "Oh, could I stay with friends so kind,
> How it would cheer my fainting mind;
> But pilgrims in a foreign land
> We oft must take the parting hand."

We would love to have stayed until after the conference, but we had been gone so long from home we thought not best to stay, but it was hard to tell all those dear ones, good bye, and we shall never forget their kindness and hospitality, nor how much we enjoyed going from one home to another, and our desire and prayer to God is, that if we meet no more in this life, we may all meet in the kingdom where there will be no more parting. On the 11th of October, bro. and sister Charles Brooks conveyed us to Portland, where we got on the cars for Fresno, Cal. We arrived at home the 14th, found all well, but our aged mother, who was sick. She lingered until the 24th of October, when she fell asleep to wake no more, until the trump of God shall sound. She was 78 years, 2 months and 25 days old. Her race is run, she has kept the faith, and we hope there is a crown of righteousness laid up for her, and not for her only, but for all those that love the appearing of Jesus. Oh, how we long for that blest time to come, when sickness, sorrow, pain, fear and death will be felt no more, for the last enemy which is to be destroyed is death, then we can sing: oh, death where is thy sting, oh, grave where is thy victory. It is hard to part with our loved ones here, to see them laid away in the cold and silent tomb, to see the empty chair, the vacant place at the table, but we sorrow not as those without hope, for we expect, if we live faithful, to see our loved ones, who fall asleep in Jesus, come again from the land of the enemy, clothed with immortality and eternal life. I would say to all of like precious faith, let us strive to live faithful, have our lamps trimmed and burning, being prepared to go out to meet the Bridegroom when he comes, then we can strike glad hand in the kingdom, no more to part. We here enclose express order for $1.50, for THE RESTITUTION, as we see our time is up and we do not feel as though we could do without it. It has been a welcome visitor to our house ever since it first started, and we enjoy the splendid gospel pieces, also the letters of exhortation written by dear brethren and sisters. We would be glad if we were able to aid in the circulation of it, but as our health is poor and times are hard, we do not feel able at present, but may God bless and prosper it, and also the editor, is our prayer. Yours in hope of the soon coming King.

The Restitution, Dear Brethren and Sisters:

If it were possible for me to do so I would send you words of cheer and comfort, but as you have words of cheer and comfort, the word of Father, and Son, as recorded in Holy Writ, same as myself, I shall content myself with writing down a few thoughts as they occur to me. I would say that the Lord is indeed my shepherd, my shield and hiding place, a present help in every time of need, I have tested and know that His grace is sufficient for me. When in trouble or distress I go to Him, He is ever ready to illuminate my path and speak peace to my troubled spirit. If it is not so with you, my brother, my sister, it is because you do not confide trust in God, you do not heed the injunction of Holy Writ. Says Inspiration, "Cast your care on Him, for He careth for thee." He does indeed, His words are powerful, life-giving and life-preserving words. His words as recorded in the Scriptures of truth are able words, able to make one wise unto salvation, able to save our souls and to give us an inheritance among the sanctified.

The Lord has been indeed very gracious to me. When darkness and trouble seems to overwhelm me, and I go to Him in prayer, I never fail to get relief. I am always enabled to see my way then clear, praise God. A way in this desert of sin He has provided, that his saints may escape the snares and pitfalls of the evil one.

Although afflicted and tempest-tost, and almost isolated from brethren of like precious faith, my faith is strong and reaches to that within the vail where our forerunner even Jesus has entered for you, for me, for us, while we wait without for His return, our High Priest, our Advocate, our Deliverer. O he will soon cease pleading for us at the bar of eternal justice. His office of an advocate will soon be succeeded by his other office, Judge of living and dead, whom He will judge at His appearing and kingdom. Now is the time to engage an advocate at the Supreme Court of the Universe. If we sin we now have an advocate with the Father, the Creator of heaven and earth, even Jesus Christ the Righteous, who is acquainted with our frail, mortal nature. He knows all about our infirmity, our ignorance, the cause and the wherefores of our actions and thought. Then let us learn the words of wisdom today, improve the time for the days are evil, make our peace, calling and election sure, by adding the Christian graces. By so doing an abundant entrance will be administered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I ask an interest in your prayers. Pray for me when at the mercy's seat, that God may bless, and comfort us all, and that He may order the affairs of this age so that we may be enabled to spend our sojourn in peace here, and that all of us may be kept by the power of God unto salvation.

Yours in Christian love,

H. MURPHY.

Missouri.

Editor Restitution:

Let us each and every one of the brethren, try and testify for Christ. I think, like Bro. Dwiggins, it would be a Christmas well spent, to testify for our Savior. What a glorious thought it must be, my dear brethren, to think of meeting our loved brethren, when sorrow and tribulation will be over, when we shall put on our crown of righteousness, and rule in the kingdom with our Master, so let us put on the whole armor of God and be accepted when the Master does appear. He says, in 1 Timothy iv. 12, 13: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in words, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith and in purity." We must do what our Master requires us to do. These are some of the Christian graces, which are very important to our eternal salvation. Let us not neglect our duty in things which lead us on to a higher, better life. Our Savior was not slack concerning the graces, when he set us the example. He is the first fruits of them that slept; then we that have put on Christ, must give attendance to reading, to exhortations, and to doctrines. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised. Exhort one another with the spirit of love for if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, for we have need of patience, that after we have done the will of God, we will receive the promises. Let us ever be ready, so when the chief Shepherd shall appear, we may be clad with immortality, and reign on the earth with our Redeemer on his throne. What a great blessing it is to have a friend ever guiding our footsteps. Pray for those that are out of Christ, that they may become willing to accept the Savior as their guide and protector, and be obedient to his commands. Pray for me brethren, that I may be an overcomer, and be crowned with a crown that fadeth not away. A sister, waiting in hope.

Dear Restitution:

I want to participate in this Love Feast, the dear brother proposed, to write a few lines to the dear ones of like precious faith, to let them know there are a few here striving to walk in the straight and narrow way. I am so thankful to our Father in heaven for our good paper, as a medium of speaking words of cheer to each other, and for our own talented brethren and sisters, who manifest so much love and zeal for the Truth. We live quite a distance from our church, so we don't get to meet with those of like faith very often. I see we are not all that are debarred of this glorious privilege. I trust it is for discipline. Bro. Hatch came to Ripley the seventh of December, and preached until the fourteenth. I had the privilege of making a visit among the good brethren and sisters, and hearing the truth preached in its purity. I did enjoy it for it had been some over a year since I had heard a gospel sermon. Oh, that we all may live so that we will win the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, is my prayer. Much Christian love to all.

JENNIE COX.

Dear Brethren:

My time expires on the fourth of next month, and I will renew in time so that I will not miss any number of the paper, for it is valuable to me. I have received and read number 48 and will say, that the short letters therein contained did me good. While I was reading, I thought what a Love Feast we could have if we of the Abrahamic faith could meet each other face to face. It certainly would be a feast of love long to be remembered. Then I thought of the glorious and grand meeting in prospect, when at last we meet in the kingdom of God. There with the redeemed. Then, I thought of the joy of this heavenly host, and of the grand singing that will be there, of the hundred and forty and four thousand immortal voices tuned by God himself. And how long will this glorious state of things last? We read of this kingdom, there shall be no end. We also read that there will be no more death, neither sorrow nor sighing, for the former things have passed away. Glorious thought, my brethren, let us praise God and take fresh courage, let us weary not in well doing, nor faint by the wayside, for behold our King cometh to take unto himself his great power and reign, and to gather to himself this glorious company of which John saw. Will you and I be there? If so, we must give all diligence to make our calling and election such. Your brother in hope.

Editor Restitution:

I see that the time for which I have paid for our paper, THE RESTITUTION, that we prize so highly has expired. I had one dollar saved to send to you but sickness has compelled me to use it for medicine, therefore I cannot pay for it at present, but it seems to me that I can hardly do without it. If some brother or sister who has plenty can send it to me for six months, I hope by that time to pay for it.

My husband's eyesight has failed him so he cannot read any more except our coarse print Bible. I read the paper to him. We are of the isolated ones and it is all the preaching we have. I will close by wishing you a "Happy New Year," and praying that the Lord will bless you in your good work.

Yours in the one faith.

MRS. M——

[Here is another case, brethren and sisters. It is one of the many. Can you let these "little ones" of the Master's flock, go without the paper they want? We will do all we can, but it must be evident to you that we must have aid to carry this work on. Who is willing to lend a little to the Lord? —ED.]

Why not renew your subscription to this paper today? Also get a neighbor to try it.

Conference Report.

According to previous notice the first quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, convened at the New Church in Fountain Co., Dec. 15 to 17, 1893.

The meeting was opened on Friday evening, by a discourse on the "Second Coming of Christ," by Eld. J. T. Prime.

Brother Adams spoke on Saturday evening on "The Christian Race," and Brother Prime discoursed on Sunday from Ps. xxx. 5, and the closing sermon was delivered by Elder Adams, text 1 Tim. iv. 16.

These sermons were especially good. The attendance and attention were all that could be desired. Beside the brethren in the immediate neighborhood, twelve earnest brethren were there from Fairview. Bro. and Sister Morgan, Brothers Newell and Schultz from Moorfield, Brother Harlan from Arapahoe, and Brother Jas. W. Hammond of Fairbury, Neb. Considering everything this was as good a meeting as the writer ever attended.

The treasurer's report for the last quarter was as follows: Received, $145.90. Paid to evangelist, $125.00. In treasury, $20.00.

The evangelist reported: Received, $125.00. Expenses, $10.40. Less expenses, $108.41. Miles traveled, 1075. Discourses, 75. Baptized, 44. Churches organized, 2. At St. Paul with 32 members, and at Wannetta, with 18.

The assistant evangelist reported, Received, $21.00. Expenses, $6.50. Days employed, 23. Discourses, 15. Baptized, 1.

At this meeting an organization was effected to be known as "The Church of God Tract Association of Neb.," which received a hearty endorsement by all present. The following officers were elected for one year. J. W. Hammond, Fairbury, President. Dora Harlan, Arapahoe, Secretary, and James Prime, Beaver City, Treasurer. On motion Elder Adams was appointed to select vice-presidents from the different churches whose duty it is receive tracts from the association, and distribute the same, and solicit membership. The following is the list.

Etta Johns, Blair. Nancy J. Watkins, Gordon. Emma Elton, Irvington. Mary Cole, Ainsworth. Ada Honeywell, St. Paul. Alice Meadow, Wannetta. Sarah Sellick, Hartley. Mildred Wilkins, Beatrice. Mrs. E. A. Morgan, Moorfield. Mrs. H. B. Cramer, Cambridge. Mrs. Ella Adams, Truer, Kansas.

It was moved that the Conference Board be empowered to draw up a "Constitution and By-laws" governing said Association, the object of which is to form a Tract Depository, by which books, tracts, and other religious literature can be kept on hand to distribute through the vice-presidents in all parts of the State. Any one can become a member by paying 25 cts. Here is an opportunity for every brother and sister in the state by a little effort and means to help advance the cause of truth.

Send your name and 25 cents to the Secretary, Dora Harlan, Arapahoe, Neb. Donations of larger amounts will also be thankfully received. Great care will be taken in the selection of these tracts, and if the work is taken hold of with the proper zeal and energy that it should be, great good will inevitably be the result. Scattering tracts is a matter that has been sadly neglected by us as a people.

It is a good thing for other denominations, why not for us? Who will help in this grand work?

It was decided to hold the next quarterly conference at Fairview, March 16, 1894.

J. J. CADY, Sec'y.

MARRIED

At the residence of the bride's father near Laurel, Ia., at Christmas tide, Miss Cora Williams and Albert E. Benny. We trust that our brother and sister may so live that at last they may be called to the marriage of the King's Son at the New Year Jubilee of the world.

A. J. EYCHANER.

Sow seed. Send THE RESTITUTION to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Still at Work.

Dear Restitution:

During the last two weeks before Christmas we have been holding meetings at Van Allen school house, in Marshall county. The attendance was not large yet there was good interest, and we believe the Word preached will not be without profit in those who heard it. We are now preaching at Irving.

At Gladbrook we hold regular meetings and Sunday school each Sunday. The members are faithful. We are going to build a house to meet in this summer if we can raise the means. We need a house, as we now go out over a mile into the country to hold our meetings at the school house. Brethren, pray for us. Even prayer will help us build it.

A. J. EYCHANER.

Killed by Accident.

Clarence, youngest son of Bro. and Sister J. E. Robbins, of Sac City, Iowa, on Dec. 28, aged about 8 years.

It seems from curiosity or some other reason Clarence crawled under the place where the grain was dumped from the wagons in the elevator, and being under that place when a load was dumped, the heavy load pressed upon him in such a way as to break his neck, thus killing him instantly. The sudden death was a shock to the parents, and especially to the mother, yet it was borne with Christian fortitude and submission. Sermon and words of consolation from the Scriptures on the great doctrine of the resurrection, by the writer, in which Bro. Emery took part in the service. We sorrow not without hope, for we believe that one who notices even the sparrow in its fall will not be unmindful of the darling we tenderly laid to rest.

> "We shall sleep, but not forever,
> There will be a glorious dawn."

A. J. EYCHANER.

DIED

Died on October 21, 1893, at his his home in Jefferson Co., Kansas, after a lingering and painful illness, Father A. Arnold. Age 67 years, 7 months and 12 days.

The writer talked to the friends and neighbors about the cause and condition and hope of the dead. That Christ who is the way, the truth, and the life, has passed through the portals of death and obtained the victory, and that it is in and through and by him that we poor frail, dying mortals can live again, and meet to part no more in the resurrection morning.

Aunt Fanny Aiken fell asleep at her home in Ozawkie, Jefferson, Co., Kansas, Dec. 6, 1893. Age 73, years, 1 month and 11 days. We were permitted to call the attention of the friends to the first great, primal cause of pain, sickness, sorrow and death being abroad in the land, and that it was the enemy of God and man that deceived our fore parents in the garden of Eden, and caused them to sin, and death came by sin, and so death has passed upon all men, and that the sting of death is sin, and that the victory over death and the way out of death's domain, the enemy's land, is through and by Jesus Christ our Lord, at the resurrection morning, when this mortal puts on immortality.

T. E. ADAMS.

PRESENTS FOR FRIENDS.

I hereby offer until further notice one copy of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," leather gilt binding; one copy of same in cloth binding; one copy of "Twelve Words;" one of 8-page tract; and one of "Seeking and Finding," all for the low price of one dollar. This offer is made for the good of the cause of truth. Send to Wiley Jones, Manchester, Va.

See Here.

An Exposition of John xvii. 5, being the article in RESTITUTION of Nov. 1, 1893, by M. Joblin, put in tract form. Eight large pages. Price 10 cents per dozen. 30 cents for 50 copies, 55 cents for 100. Only a limited number were printed, so if you want them send soon to this office for them.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot, I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

A THOUGHT for the times:—Daniel Webster said, "If you divorce capital from labor, capital is hoarded and labor starves." •

BROTHER JOBLIN writes from Cleveland that "two more children of Adam have recently become Abraham's seed by induction into Christ, and we thank God and take courage."

SOME one has said that "mind without heart, intelligence without conduct, cleverness without goodness, are powers in their way, but they may be powers for mischief. We may be instructed or amused by them, but it is sometimes as difficult to admire them as it would be to admire the dexterity of a pickpocket or the horsemanship of a highwayman." •

THE great historian, Sismondi speaking of his attendance at a church of England while visiting that country, said, "I left the church in haste, that I might not have to speak with any one of the indignation that the minister had excited in me by his preaching about eternal torments. . . I am determined never again to enter an English church again that I may be forced to listen to such blasphemies." •

WE recently met with a paragraph which we commend to every reader of THE RESTITUTION, it read in this way: "The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has ever been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments in order to enjoy themselves." •

DISPATCHES from Vienna show that Austria is waking up to the fact that her neighbors have quite outstripped her in war preparations, and she must make haste to remedy that state of things by increasing her cavalry fifty per cent., and the creation of reserves of infantry, and increasing the number and efficiency of the landwehr. The minister who announced that the government was about to augment its forces being loudly cheered, it would seem to be a popular move. •

AN astonishing piece of information is found on page 47 of Prof. McWhorter's "Yahveh Christ." It is to the effect that two mysterious, supernatual, winged figures, and between them a sword-like revolving flame, were stationed eastward from Eden, not so much to keep Adam out of the garden, as to preserve the knowledge of the "way of the tree of life, in the world. . . . To man in his altered relations 'the cherubim' with the flaming fire between them, took the place of the tree of life in the world, by a direct appeal to the eye, telling of judgment, and yet, under the relations of the promise, speaking of Mercy." •

AN English writer recently said, "It seems most systematic that as the papal power has been extinguished after a period of 1260 years, with three terminal periods, the Mohammedan power should also be broken after a similar period, especially seeing that the two earlier dates have been marked by significant events. What shall be the exact nature of the events of 1897, or thereabouts, cannot be definitely stated, but there is good ground for anticipation that the year will see, at least, the termination of Mohammedan power, and a great step towards Israel's restitution. We also hold most decidedly to this opinion, and look for great changes in the immediate future. The present signs are very interesting to the prophetic student. Apparently they are insignificant and the forces quiescent; but the undercurrents are strong, working all things in the direction of the appointed consummation." •

JEALOUSY among the high officers of state in Germany is causing the Kaiser trouble. He wishes to keep both sides with himself and finds this a difficult task.

THE killing of some English troops, who were sent on a little expedition against natives, by a body of French soldiers, though claimed by them to have been caused by mistake, is making some very plain talk. "It would not be surprising if an attempt were made before long in France to raise the cry that war would be cheaper than peace. It must be insisted, however, that the general tendancy of the holiday season throughout Europe has been to calm the war fever in the popular breast, and unless the West African or some other incident revives it midwinter will pass under more peaceable auspices.

Sicily is fairly in revolution and the peril of the constitutional government in Italy is grave. Such information as the telegraph has been permitted to give of events in the islands and of the situation in Italy itself presents an inadequate picture of the nature of the crisis."

"BEHOLD," says the Spirit, "I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded." This is the rock, the Anointed Jesus, and hence the foundation of the Father's spiritual house—the basis of our faith and hope—the living stone indicates the nature of the building, and suggests—are we living stones? •

WHAT next? Pope Leo XIII. is strongly exhorting the priesthood of the Catholic church, and in particular its patriarchs, primates, archbishops and bishops to study the Bible, in order that this glorious source of revelation may be more safely and abundantly opened for the use of the Lord's flock. After quoting 2 Tim. iii. 10, 17, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," etc., the encyclical says it is God's intention to prove by the examples of Christ and the apostles that Jesus was in the habit of appealing to the Bible for his own limitations and divine origin; and warns the clergy not to use their own language in preference to God's words. •

REGULARITY of effort is as conservative of moral health, as it is of physical strength. Practiced on any line of labor, it is sure to give one a creditable place sooner or later. "Seest thou a man that is diligent about his business, he shall stand before kings." This would seem to apply to any calling one could honestly engage in. And we think the principle holds good in spiritual things as well. And the young Christian does well who sets his mental house in order by establishing the habit of regularly studying the divine record, and laying a good foundation for a successful career in the Master's business. It is no easy matter to eradicate tendencies to irregularity and impropriety of thought and action, to weed out old habits born of convention and indulgence. •

Rejoicing in Hope.

"Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice" is what Paul said to the saints at Philippi and all other saints. Only saints are in the Lord, and of course no others could rejoice in him. We learn from the fifth chapter and second verse of the letter to the saints at Rome that they and the apostle were rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. And in 1 Thess. i. 12 we learn that the glory hoped for is in connection with the kingdom of God. The saints at Thessalonica had been invited to God's kingdom and glory; and from the 21st verse of the 3rd chapter of Revelations we learn that all the overcomers share the throne of the world with Jesus the first-born among many brethren. And it would seem impossible for one who fully realized the highness of this calling of God in the anointed Jesus not to rejoice in hope of it. We know of a surety that flesh and blood are not eligible to the kingdom of God—we must be born again, born of the spirit,—born from above, before we can see the kingdom;—be lifted clear out of the human into the divine. Oh, transporting thought! The thousand and one ills of life that now afflict us will then have passed away. We shall see Jesus and be made like him; our weakness changed into his might,—our frailty into his strength, our corruptibility into his undecaying nature, our deformity into his effulgent glory; these tottering limbs will be endowed with endless vigor; these eyes that fail with weakness or blink with age, or are sightless with disease will behold him and glory in the sight and feel weak no more. We shall be like him. Our whole nature will be changed and aglow with unutterable glory, shining as the brightness of the firmament, and glisten as the stars forever and ever. Oh what a hope! What can hinder its possessor from rejoicing in the Lord always? •

Experience.

"Shall see him as he is. Shall be like him. Purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

In my early youth, while a student of the Ohio university, being then without hope, having no love for God, nor for his only begotten and well beloved Son, being in my first tuition days, I often visited my parental home, distant ten miles. One of those visits looms up in my memory, as if it had been but a day since, a walk and a vision of yesterday, so bright and so enchanting. My pathway was through a lonely primeval forest, densely clothing a two mile ridge, with no human voice nor feathered songster to break the silence or cheer me in my loneliness. The morning was one of alternate lights and shadows, while the heavens showed partly its pure ethereal and one-half of light cumuli. Suddenly, by an impulse foreign to myself, my eye was turned upward, when a vision of enchantment covered the opening heavens. There were fields of deep blue sky, and others of flying clouds, but between them, what a ravishing sight! If God is light, then his glory (brightness) filled my celestial vision and I was standing within the vestibule of Jehovah's uncreated glory, surrounding and filling me with ecstacy and bliss. I saw no shape, neither was I made blind for a season, nor did I hear a voice as one of old; but since the morning of that vision of light, whose extent upward was without limit, I have required no interpretation of Saul's day vision near Damascus; nor has the impression been less effective. It shaped my life from that day, and onward.

The vision found me a careless, thoughtless unbeliever—the son of a professed infidel, who scoffed at the Bible, at Jesus and his mission—it left me a penitent believer with a firm resolution so to live that I might have my home in that ineffable glory, when the earth shall be full of it. More than three score annual revolutions of our bright luminary have passed into the ocean of eternity since the morning of that bright vision, yet its foot prints on my memory and on my affections are as distinct as if made but a month or a day since—his magnetic pole of my faith and hope. As the magnetic needle, vibrating and trembling under the attraction of various disturbing objects, finally settles down pointing to the magnetic pole, so my faith and hope, agitated at times by worldly influences, always found their rest and happiness in pointing to the drapery enveloping that heavenly vision. For more than three score years, I have been looking for the coming Messiah to fill the earth with his royal glory. It is that blessed hope—Messiah's reign on the earth made new. It cannot be too literally understood and interpreted. Jesus said to John in Patmos: "Behold I come quickly," my whole being answers with the bride. "Even so come Lord Jesus." Why not love and earnestly desire his blessed appearing? Why seek shadows when the substance is so near? We shall be sons of God, joint-heirs with his beloved Son—members of his family, clothed with his likeness and his life—for we shall see him as he is, not as he was, the humbled babe of Bethlehem; but the lion of the tribe of Judah, King of kings, and Lord of lords, who shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem. We shall see him as he is—in his true character, when all questions as to his nature and sonship will be at once and forever solved. Amen, come Lord Jesus—quickly.

Feed My Lambs.

A subject to which I have given much thought and to which I would like to call the attention of my fellow laborers, as I conceive our experience has been very nearly the same. Very much of my labor has been lost for lack of a good following up. The evangelist works hard, presents the saving truth, a number embrace it, and then he has to leave the little flock to starve and freeze, or to be devoured by wolves,—almost as well never to have done the first work.

I was once asked a question by Bro. Weaver while working in Southern Michigan. He said, "Bro. Woodward, what would you think of a hen that would hatch out sixteen chickens and then go off, thinking her work all done, and let them starve?"

"Well," I replied, "I would consider her a better setter than mother."

"Well," he said, "that is just what you are going to do."

Sure enough, the little flock had to be left to go on a six months or a year or more fast. Our Lord was very thoughtful of the little tender lambs; yes, he would carry them in his bosom. "Feed my lambs," don't get their rations so high in the manger, the little creatures can't reach it, or even smell it, their little stomachs can't digest straw any more than the babes can Greek, and it is quite common to give an over-dose of English. I have found that out more than once. Milk for babes. I sometimes think too much of the spiritual food is prepared especially for the old sheep that have very strong stomachs and very sharp teeth.

O I just want to praise the Lord for putting that "love feast" thought into Bro. Dwiggins' mind. Now the lambs will get a genuine sumptuous meal. May God help them to enjoy this rich repast.

Now, dear brethren, is it not possible to devise some means by which the distant churches, and especially the new ones, can have the necessary help which they so much require? Is it not quite as necessary to save those we have got as to reach after more and leave them to bear the same fate? Can it not be so arranged that each church can have preaching at stated times, though perhaps of necessity not very often? Perhaps the older churches which are thoroughly established can do with a little less preaching, in order that their hungry brethren can have a few crumbs. Then I would suggest that each brother, and especially each sister, for the sisters make much better missionaries than men, consider themselves a self-constituted committee to visit every member in each church and persuade just as many as possible to take THE RESTITUTION, for this is next to the living preacher, and may God bless our effort this coming year as never before.

B. W. WOODWARD.

The Dermatologist.

Dear Children:

You see I have placed a long, hard word at the top of this page. Why did I do it? To make you think. A dermatologist is one who treats diseases of the skin. He takes off ugly spots and wrinkles from the face and hands, but there are some wrinkles that he cannot make go away, only God can do that. Can you guess how? Does it not seem strange to think that God can make your faces smooth and sweet-looking and beautiful, when he is so far away? But He can. The dermatologist will tell you that there are some disfiguring lines that you can only make go away by living right. And that is how God smooths out the faces. He gives us the Bible to live by. People who are like Jesus do not seem homely, but those who are fretful and angry, and fearfully wicked, are sure to mark their faces.

It is clearness, purity and nobleness of character that makes us beautiful; your noses, your chins, your ears and your foreheads are all affected by your characters. If you set yourselves to serving the dear Lord, a look of patience, submission, and holy love, will come creeping into your eyes, and will irradiate all your features.

Think it all over, and take your Bible for your dermatologist.

Letter Drawer.

"OUR LOVE FEAST."

Being letters of greeting from scattered members of the "Household of Faith," as suggested by our Brother [illegible] Dwiggins. Continued from our issue of Dec. 27, '93.

Dear brothers and sisters, Greeting:

We have been reading the Love Feast letter in our paper (THE RESTITUTION) from the scattered ones of like precious faith, which makes our hearts rejoice to hear, or see so many testimonies, and such a pleasant and lovely spirit manifested. If it is so pleasant here now, how will it be when our blessed Savior comes to reward all of his faithful ones. Oh, if we are only ready to meet him and receive the welcome applaudit, well done thou good and faithful servant. Then, there will be more joys unspeakable, and a Love Feast that will always last. Oh, let us all try to be ready to meet our dear Savior when he comes to set up his glorious and everlasting kingdom. When the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Let us stand, therefore, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith we may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints. We must work while he calls today for the night cometh when no man can work. So let us do all in our power to spread the blessed truth of the gospel. Each one try to get a subscriber for THE RESTITUTION, and scatter tracts and every way we can to spread the truth, for we have but a short time to work and a great reward for it. Pray for us, that we may be faithful and true to our blessed Lord. Yours in the blessed hope.

Dear Restitution:

God has placed his people on the watch tower, he has also placed them in his vineyard. It is the duty of those on the tower of observation, not only to give warning of approaching danger, but also to sound forth the glorious news which indicates the fulfilment of prophecy and the near approach of the time of the coming of the Bridegroom. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Behold the Bridegroom cometh, be ye ready to go forth to meet him, should be the bugle note which every watchman should sound forth from the God-given trumpet placed in his hands. Lift up your heads and rejoice, oh ye beloved ones, who are fully prepared for the Master's coming, for your redemption draweth nigh. "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be." What a prospect for the tired saint who has long worked, toiled and struggled, sometimes so faint and weary that he is almost ready to complain of his hard lot, but remembering the promised reward that lays at the end of the race, he has taken new courage and now he can almost see through to the end of his journey, and hear the words "the Master hath come and calleth for thee." Blessed hope, blessed prospect, soon to be realized by the faithful ones.

Dearly beloved, what a good Father we have. How long he has borne with our short comings. How many times we have to ask him to forgive us our trespasses. How patient he has been with us. How much he loves us without any merit in ourselves. How he takes care of us and preserves us from all manner of danger, without being under any obligation whatever to do so. In consideration of all these things, let us in the future be just as good children as we can, and do all we can to push forward the Master's cause.

Look upon yonder canvas while I paint a picture of the events which now cast their shadows before us. See the blue sky away to the east. On the right and the left is the waiting church, looking, longing and waiting for the expected Lord. Behind them is the world in midnight darkness. See that little cloud away to the east, as far as the eye can go. It is growing larger and coming nearer. Look very close and you will see, on the lower edge of the cloud, in letters of living fire, the word "Behold [illegible]." Listen, the angels are singing. Nearer and nearer comes the cloud. Now, it stops. There is a rift in it and we behold the Savior in all his beauty. Again the cloud thickens and we no longer see the face we love so much. While we are gazing up into heaven, we see the dim outline of an angel just emerging from the clouds. Look, the angel is coming towards us. He is dressed in white apparel. He approaches us and says, ye children of God, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this Jesus which ye are looking for and whom ye have just seen, has come for his saints.

Looking again we see a great company of angels coming with the great sound of trumpets. Watch them while they go from cemetery to cemetery waking the sleeping saints. See the saints coming from the fours corners of the earth. Multitudes upon multitudes which no man can number. The angels are going among the living saints, changing them from mortality to immortality. The living saints now go to meet the risen ones. There is a great rejoicing. Families are being reunited, loved ones long separated, meet and rejoice together. The trumpets of the angels are sounding, the risen saints are shouting glory to God in the highest and the living saints are singing songs of praise and thanksgiving. In the midst of all this rejoicing a voice is heard from the cloud, saying, my well beloved, come up hither, and at once this good company are caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. Reader are you ready for the coming of the Master?

Dear Restitution:

A Christmas Greeting to Editorial Staff, Corresponding Editor and readers of THE RESTITUTION, from an aged and feeble pilgrim. We, my aged companion and myself feel that we are strangers in a strange land, journeying towards a better country, that is, a land soon to be made better by the removal of the curse. Very much alone in this world, shut in, and shut out.

Some of my readers will doubtless understand what it means. Having passed the allotted age of man, we can say with one of old, beyond that age we are beset with "labor and sorrow." We have many things to make us sad, but, dear brothers and friends, unite with me this Christmas in praising God for having shown us the way of life and salvation from sin and death, through the life and death of his only begotten Son. Although we have for a long time been chastened yet we are made to rejoice every day for the hope of something better in the near future. Although my eyesight will permit me to read but little, yet, I am able to get a square meal every morning before breakfast of that Bread that came down from heaven. Yes, as I have understood it for many years, it came in the promises of the One Only True God; through Moses, and the other prophets, including the One like unto him. I feast every day on that bread that alone can give eternal life. I have much I would like to say, but cannot.

Yours in the one hope,

J. D. SHERIDAN.

Dear Restitution:

I will give a report of a meeting held by Brother D. M. Hudler, in what is called the Eaton Schoolhouse. He preached 11 discourses to attentive congregations. It is four years since we have had any preaching here and that was by Bro. Hatch.

Bro. Hudler gave the privilege of asking questions, and the Presbyterian minister sent by his son, the following: "Who was Cain's wife, and who were the sons of God that married the daughters of men?" They were meant to hurt the meeting, but Bro. Hudler answered them in a brotherly spirit, and with the knowledge of the Scriptures.

There are but a few here in the faith of the things concerning the Kingdom of God, but I pray that we may be lively stones that we may make up part of that building of Christ.

I bid you a Merry Christmas.

Your brother in hope of eternal life in the Kingdom of God.

Dear Restitution:

It is with prayer and much meditation that I undertake to write as it is such a task for me, but hoping to encourage some one, I write. Let us do all that we do with faith, nothing doubting, and then may we anticipate a blessing from the Lord. If we doubt we sin. Let us see that we doubt not his Word for it will make us wise unto salvation.

Brothers Moncrief, Reed and Humphrey preach for us every fourth Sunday at Shady Grove, and we have some good meetings if there are but few of us. We had preaching yesterday, and in the evening we partook of the emblems of the sufferings and death of our dear Lord and Master, which was strengthening to me, and I hope to the rest. Though some seem careless, my faith is sure and steadfast in the Lord. Pray for me brethren and sisters, that I may continue to grow in the favor and knowledge of the Master.

Bro Humphrey read from the Bible this morning concerning the keeping of the commandments, and it did us good. Let us practice keeping them, that we may receive the blessing.

I delight in reading letters from those scattered abroad, and would like to hear from Sister Abbie Howard again.

Your sister in hope of life through Christ only.

Dear Restitution:

As my subscription for the year 1893, has expired I enclose $1.50 for renewal. It is with great pleasure that I peruse its pages, especially those articles of Bre. Joblin, Wilson and many others; also Bro. Eychuner's "Sermons at Hickory Grove. It was almost like sitting under the sound of his voice.

I would say to the brothers and sisters abroad, I am trying by God's grace, to so live as to be worthy of a crown at the appearing of our Lord and Master. I oft times feel sad and discouraged when I see our friends and neighbors turning away from the truth, and saying by their actions they will not have it. Then I hear the sweet words of Jesus saying, fear not little flock, it is your Father's good will to give you the kingdom. So dear brothers and sisters, let us be firm and steadfast, for who shall separate us from the love of Christ. Yours looking for the King in his beauty.

Dear Restitution:

It being some time since I have written a few lines for your letter drawer, I thought that I would write, thinking perhaps there might be some this would interest. I would say that from last March until October the 11th, myself and husband have been making our home with the dear ones of like precious faith, at Sebolls Ferry, Oregon. We were with them to their June meeting, which we enjoyed very much. Heard some splendid sermons from Bro. Skeels, Bro. Jaquith and one by Bro. Eshleman, from Seattle, Oregon. It was a feast to us, as we had been deprived so long of hearing any gospel sermons. We also enjoyed their Sunday schools every Sunday, Sister Almira Brooks being the superintendent, and often after Sunday school, when we would listen to Bro. Skeels or Bro. Jaquith preach, the words of the poet would come in our minds:

"Oh, could I stay with friends so kind,
How it would cheer my fainting mind;
But pilgrims in a foreign land,
We oft must take the parting hand."

We would love to have stayed until after the conference, but we had been gone so long from home we thought not best to stay, but it was hard to tell all those dear ones, good bye, and we shall never forget their kindness and hospitality, nor how much we enjoyed going from one home to another, and our desire and prayer to God is, that if we meet no more in this life, we may all meet in the kingdom where there will be no more parting. On the 11th of October, bro. and sister Charles Brooks conveyed us to Portland, where we got on the cars for Fresno, Cal. We arrived at home the 14th, found all well, but our aged mother, who was sick. She lingered until the 24th of October, when she fell asleep to wake no more, until the trump of God shall sound. She was 78 years, 2 months and 25 days old. Her race is run, she has kept the faith, and we hope there is a crown of righteousness laid up for her, and not for her only, but for all those that love the appearing of Jesus. Oh, how we long for that blest time to come, when sickness, sorrow, pain, fear and death will be felt no more, for the last enemy which is to be destroyed is death, then we can sing: oh, death where is thy sting, oh, grave where is thy victory. It is hard to part with our loved ones here, to see them laid away in the cold and silent tomb, to see the empty chair, the vacant place at the table, but we sorrow not as those without hope, for we expect, if we live faithful, to see our loved ones, who fall asleep in Jesus, come again from the land of the enemy, clothed with immortality and eternal life. I would say to all of like precious faith, let us strive to live faithful, have our lamps trimmed and burning, being prepared to go out to meet the Bridegroom when he comes, then we can strike glad hand in the kingdom, no more to part. We here enclose express order for $1.50, for The Restitution, as we see our time is up and we do not feel as though we could do without it. It has been a welcome visitor to our house ever since it first started, and we enjoy the splendid gospel pieces, also the letters of exhortation written by dear brethren and sisters. We would be glad if we were able to aid in the circulation of it, but as our health is poor and times are hard, we do not feel able at present, but may God bless and prosper it, and also the editor, is our prayer. Yours in hope of the soon coming King.

The Restitution, Dear Brethren and Sisters:

If it were possible for me to do so I would send you words of cheer and comfort, but as you have words of cheer and comfort, the word of Father, and Son, as recorded in Holy Writ, same as myself, I shall content myself with writing down a few thoughts as they occur to me. I would say that the Lord is indeed my shepherd, my shield and hiding place, a present help in every time of need, I have tested and know that His grace is sufficient for me. When in trouble or distress I go to Him, He is ever ready to illuminate my path and speak peace to my troubled spirit. If it is not so with you, my brother, my sister, it is because you do not confide trust in God, you do not heed the injunction of Holy Writ. Says Inspiration, "Cast your care on Him, for He careth for thee." He does indeed, His words are powerful, life-giving and life-preserving words. His words as recorded in the Scriptures of truth are able words, able to make one wise unto salvation, able to save our souls and to give us an inheritance among the sanctified.

The Lord has been indeed very gracious to me. When darkness and trouble seems to overwhelm me, and I go to Him in prayer, I never fail to get relief. I am always enabled to see my way then clear, praise God. A way in this desert of sin He has provided, that his saints may escape the snares and pitfalls of the evil one.

Although afflicted and tempest-tost, and almost isolated from brethren of like precious faith, my faith is strong and reaches to that within the vail where our forerunner even Jesus has entered for you, for me, for us, while we wait without for His return, our High Priest, our Advocate, our Deliverer. O he will soon cease pleading for us at the bar of eternal justice. His office of an advocate will soon be succeeded by his other office, Judge of living and dead, whom He will judge at His appearing and kingdom. Now is the time to engage an advocate at the Supreme Court of the Universe. If we sin we now have an advocate with the Father, the Creator of heaven and earth, even Jesus Christ the Righteous, who is acquainted with our frail, mortal nature. He knows all about our infirmity, our ignorance, the cause and the wherefores of our actions and thought. Then let us learn the words of wisdom today, improve the time for the days are evil, make our peace, calling and election sure, by adding the Christian graces. By so doing an abundant entrance will be administered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I ask an interest in your prayers. Pray for me when at the mercy's seat, that God may bless, and comfort us all, and that He may order the affairs of this age so that we may be enabled to spend our sojourn in peace here, and that all of us may be kept by the power of God unto salvation.

Yours in Christian love,

H. Murphy.

Missouri.

Editor Restitution:

Let us each and every one of the brethren, try and testify for Christ. I think, like Bro. Dwiggins, it would be a Christmas well spent, to testify for our Savior. What a glorious thought it must be, my dear brethren, to think of meeting our loved brethren, when sorrow and tribulation will be over, when we shall put on our crown of righteousness, and rule in the kingdom with our Master, so let us put on the whole armor of God and be accepted when the Master does appear. He says, in 1 Timothy iv. 12, 13: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in words, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith and in purity." We must do what our Master requires us to do. These are some of the Christian graces, which are very important to our eternal salvation. Let us not neglect our duty in things which lead us on to a higher, better life. Our Savior was not slack concerning the graces, when he set us the example. He is the first fruits of them that slept; then we that have put on Christ, must give attendance to reading, to exhortations, and to doctrines. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised. Exhort one another with the spirit of love for if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, for we have need of patience, that after we have done the will of God, we will receive the promises. Let us ever be ready, so when the chief Shepherd shall appear, we may be clad with immortality, and reign on the earth with our Redeemer on his throne. What a great blessing it is to have a friend ever guiding our footsteps. Pray for those that are out of Christ, that they may become willing to accept the Savior as their guide and protector, and be obedient to his commands. Pray for me brethren, that I may be an overcomer, and be crowned with a crown that fadeth not away. A sister, waiting in hope.

Dear Restitution:

I want to participate in this Love Feast, the dear brother proposed, to write a few lines to the dear ones of like precious faith, to let them know there are a few here striving to walk in the straight and narrow way. I am so thankful to our Father in heaven for our good paper, as a medium of speaking words of cheer to each other, and for our own talented brethren and sisters, who manifest so much love and zeal for the Truth. We live quite a distance from our church, so we don't get to meet with those of like faith very often. I see we are not all that are debarred of this glorious privilege. I trust it is for discipline. Bro. Hatch came to Ripley the seventh of December, and preached until the fourteenth. I had the privilege of making a visit among the good brethren and sisters, and hearing the truth preached in its purity. I did enjoy it for it had been some over a year since I had heard a gospel sermon. Oh, that we all may live so that we will win the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, is my prayer. Much Christian love to all.

Dear Brethren:

My time expires on the fourth of next month, and I will renew in time so that I will not miss any number of the paper, for it is valuable to me. I have received and read number 48 and will say, that the short letters therein contained did me good. While I was reading, I thought what a Love Feast we could have if we of the Abrahamic faith could meet each other face to face. It certainly would be a feast of love long to be remembered. Then I thought of the glorious and grand meeting in prospect, when at last we meet in the kingdom of God. There with the redeemed. Then, I thought of the joy of this heavenly host, and of the grand singing that will be there, of the hundred and forty and four thousand immortal voices tuned by God himself. And how long will this glorious state of things last? We read of this kingdom, there shall be no end. We also read that there will be no more death, neither sorrow nor sighing, for the former things have passed away. Glorious thought, my brethren, let us praise God and take fresh courage, let us weary not in well doing, nor faint by the wayside, for behold our King cometh to take unto himself his great power and reign, and to gather to himself this glorious company of which John saw. Will you and I be there? If so, we must give all diligence to make our calling and election sure. Your brother in hope.

Editor Restitution:

I see that the time for which I have paid for our paper, The Restitution, that we prize so highly has expired. I had one dollar saved to send to you but sickness has compelled me to use it for medicine, therefore I cannot pay for it at present, but it seems to me that I can hardly do without it. If some brother or sister who has plenty can send it to me for six months, I hope by that time to pay for it.

My husband's eyesight has failed him so he cannot read any more except our coarse print Bible. I read the paper to him. We are of the isolated ones and it is all the preaching we have. I will close by wishing you a "Happy New Year," and praying that the Lord will bless you in your good work.

Yours in the one faith,

Mrs. M———

{Here is another case, brethren and sisters. It is one of the many. Can you let these "little ones" of the Master's flock, go without the paper they want? We will do all we can, but it must be evident to you that we must have aid to carry this work on. Who is willing to lend a little to the Lord? —Ed.}

Conference Report.

According to previous notice the first quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, convened at the New Church in Fountain Co., Dec. 15 to 17, 1893.

The meeting was opened on Friday evening, by a discourse on the "Second Coming of Christ," by Eld. J. T. Prime.

Brother Adams spoke on Saturday evening on "The Christian Race," and Brother Prime discoursed on Sunday from Ps. xxx. 5, and the closing sermon was delivered by Elder Adams, text 1 Tim. iv. 16.

These sermons were especially good. The attendance and attention were all that could be desired. Beside the brethren in the immediate neighborhood, twelve earnest brethren were there from Fairview. Bro. and Sister Morgan, Brothers Newell and Schultz from Moorfield, Brother Harlan from Arapahoe, and Brother Jas. W. Hammond of Fairbury, Neb. Considering everything this was as good a meeting as the writer ever attended.

The treasurer's report for the last quarter was as follows: Received, $145.00. Paid to evangelist, $125.00. In treasury, $20.00.

The evangelist reported: Received, $125.00. Expenses, $19.40. Less expenses, $105.41. Miles traveled, 1075. Discourses, 75. Baptized, 44. Churches organized, 2. At St. Paul with 32 members, and at Wannetta, with 18.

The assistant evangelist reported, Received, $21.00. Expenses, $6.50. Days employed, 23. Discourses, 15. Baptized, 1.

At this meeting an organization was effected to be known as "The Church of God Tract Association of Neb.," which received a hearty endorsement by all present. The following officers were elected for one year. J. W. Hammond, Fairbury, President. Dora Harlan, Arapahoe, Secretary, and James Prime, Beaver City, Treasurer. On motion Elder Adams was appointed to select vice-presidents from the different churches whose duty it is receive tracts from the association, and distribute the same, and solicit membership. The following is the list.

Etta Johns, Blair. Nancy J. Watkins, Gordon. Emma Elton, Irvington. Mary Cole, Ainsworth. Ada Honeywell, St. Paul. Alice Meadow, Wannetta. Sarah Sellick, Bartley. Mildred Wilkins, Beatrice. Mrs. E. A. Morgan, Moorfield. Mrs. H. B. Cramer, Cambridge. Mrs. Ella Adams, Traer, Kansas.

It was moved that the Conference Board be empowered to draw up a "Constitution and By-laws" governing said Association, the object of which is to form a Tract Depository, by which books, tracts, and other religious literature can be kept on hand to distribute through the vice-presidents in all parts of the State. Any one can become a member by paying 25 cts. Here is an opportunity for every brother and sister in the state by a little effort and means to help advance the cause of truth.

Send your name and 25 cents to the Secretary, Dora Harlan, Arapahoe, Neb. Donations of larger amounts will also be thankfully received. Great care will be taken in the selection of these tracts, and if the work is taken hold of with the proper zeal and energy that it should be, great good will inevitably be the result. Scattering tracts is a matter that has been sadly neglected by us as a people.

It is a good thing for other denominations, why not for us? Who will help in this grand work?

It was decided to hold the next quarterly conference at Fairview, March 16, 1894.

J. J. Cady, Sec'y.

MARRIED

At the residence of the bride's father near Laurel, Ia., at Christmas tide, Miss Cora Williams and Albert E. Benny. We trust that our brother and sister may so live that at last they may be called to the marriage of the King's Son at the New Year Jubilee of the world.

A. J. Eychaner.

Sow seed. Send The Restitution to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Still at Work.

Dear Restitution:

During the last two weeks before Christmas we have been holding meetings at Van Allen school house, in Marshall county. The attendance was not large yet there was good interest, and we believe the Word preached will not be without profit in those who heard it. We are now preaching at Irving.

At Gladbrook we hold regular meetings and Sunday school each Sunday. The members are faithful. We are going to build a house to meet in this summer if we can raise the means. We need a house, as we now go out over a mile into the country to hold our meetings at the school house. Brethren, pray for us. Even prayer will help us build it.

A. J. Eychaner.

Killed by Accident.

Clarence, youngest son of Bro. and Sister J. E. Robbins, of Sac City, Iowa, on Dec. 28, aged about 8 years.

It seems from curiosity or some other reason Clarence crawled under the place where the grain was dumped from the wagons in the elevator, and being under that place when a load was dumped, the heavy load pressed upon him in such a way as to break his neck, thus killing him instantly. The sudden death was a shock to the parents, and especially to the mother, yet it was borne with Christian fortitude and submission. Sermon and words of consolation from the Scriptures on the great doctrine of the resurrection, by the writer, in which Bro. Emery took part in the service. We sorrow not without hope, for we believe that one who notices even the sparrow in its fall will not be unmindful of the darling we tenderly laid to rest.

"We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn."

A. J. Eychaner.

DIED

Died on October 31, 1893, at his his home in Jefferson Co., Kansas, after a lingering and painful illness, Father A. Arnold. Age 67 years, 7 months and 12 days.

The writer talked to the friends and neighbors about the cause and condition and hope of the dead. That Christ who is the way, the truth, and the life, has passed through the portals of death and obtained the victory, and that it is in and through and by him that we poor frail, dying mortals can live again, and meet to part no more in the resurrection morning.

Aunt Fanny Aiken fell asleep at her home in Osawkie, Jefferson, Co., Kansas, Dec. 6, 1893. Age 73, years, 1 month and 11 days. We were permitted to call the attention of the friends to the first great, primal cause of pain, sickness, sorrow and death being abroad in the land, and that it was the enemy of God and man that deceived our fore parents in the garden of Eden, and caused them to sin, and death came by sin, and so death has passed upon all men, and that the sting of death is sin, and that the victory over death and the way out of death's domain, the enemy's land, is through and by Jesus Christ our Lord, at the resurrection morning, when this mortal puts on immortality.

T. E. Adams.

PRESENTS FOR FRIENDS.

I hereby offer until further notice one copy of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," leather gilt binding; one copy of same in cloth binding; one copy of "Twelve Words;" one of 8-page tract; and one of "Seeking and Finding," all for the low price of one dollar. This offer is made for the good of the cause of truth. Send to Wiley Jones, Manchester, Va.

See Here.

An Exposition of John xvii. 5, being the article in Restitution of Nov. 1, 1893, by M. Joblin, put in tract form. Eight large pages Price 10 cents per dozen. 30 cents for 50 copies, 55 cents for 100. Only a limited number were printed, so if you want them send soon to this office for them.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

S. C. Oliver, Pres.
E. F. Randolph, Sec'y.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Answer to Reviewer's No. 3.

I find in "the record that God hath given of his Son," that He and Father are "ONE," and that to see the Son is to see the Father. John x. 30; xi. 45; xiv. 9. But if in spite of that record and the danger of doubting it (1 John v. 10) I were so puffed up with my little earthly arithmetic as to cry out "One plus one equals two every time" ("W. H. W."), forgetting the axiom that to every human rule there is some exception; how could I expect to understand the great mystery as to how "God was manifested in the flesh?" And to write "Babylon" after every occurrence of mystery would be too absurd for any sane man.

The Lord said, "I come unto thee in a thick cloud;" and "the Lord descended in the cloud." Ex. xix, 9; xxxiv. 5. But I suppose no Israelite was so silly as to imagine that the Lord was mere cloud. And when "they shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud," or "in glory," will anybody suppose Him to be mere cloud or mere glory? Luke xxi. 27; Matt. xxv. 31. When one of my reviewers comes to meeting in new clothes, do the people suppose him to be mere clothes? And does he not have to put on or get into the clothes before coming to meeting in them? The analogy though imperfect is sufficiently clear to show how illogical it is to suppose that Christ was a mere man or mere flesh because He came "in the flesh." He also came "in the water and in the blood," but was not mere water and blood. 1 John v. 6, American Bible Union, and margin R. V. Where has the Bible ever said that any other being "came in the flesh?" nor does the Bible anywhere call our Lord "the corruptible Jesus," as my reviewer does in RESTITUTION No. 10.

"It was not possible that he should be holden of death, neither did his flesh see corruption." We "were not redeemed with corruptible things." Acts ii. 21, 27; xiii. 37; 1 Peter i. 18. Let my reviewer take care lest he "preach another Jesus" and therefore another gospel than what Paul preached. 2 Cor. xi. 4. The sure word of prophecy had decreed that the true Christ should never "see corruption." Acts iii. 35. This is one of the great proofs of His Messiahship; and I don't see that inventing such a phrase as "immortal soul" is any more subversive of the gospel, than inventing such a phrase as "the corruptible Jesus."

I see a manifestation of the Father in the manifestation of "that eternal Life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us." 1 John i. 2. If it were true that one plus one equals two every time, how could the believer and the Lord be "one spirit," or two human beings be "one flesh?" Or how could we look in a stereoscope with both eyes through two glasses at two distinct images, and behold only one image? So it is false arithmetic to say, even in "earthly things," that one plus one equals two every time.

Is it any more difficult to believe that a pre-existent Divine person became partaker of the human nature, than to believe that a multitude of human persons will become "partakers of the divine nature?" If we be ever so blessed as to become partakers of that higher nature at the resurrection, will we not each one be his own self; and may we not then look back upon our present as our pre-existent state, that is, as the state in which we existed before entering and partaking of the divine nature? Passing from one nature to the other—however mysterious the process—does not annihilate our previous personality. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will still be Abraham, Isaac and Jacob after entering that kingdom which flesh and blood cannot inherit. Luke xiii. 28. As Dr. Thomas says concerning the Word that was God, "This Word became flesh in the manner testified. Was the product, therefore, not Deity? Did the union of spirit with the flesh annihilate that spirit and leave only flesh? Was the holy thing born a mere son of Adam? or 'the fellow' and 'equal' of the Deity? The latter unquestionably. Zech. xiii. 7; John v. 18; Phil. ii. 2."—Eureka, vol. i., page 101.

The Diaglott reads, "And the Logos became flesh, and dwelt among us—and we beheld his glory." John i. 14. So it was the Logos or Word that dwelt among us, and we beheld "his" not its glory. The masculine pronoun shows that the nominative to "dwelt" is Logos, which is also masculine, not "flesh" which is neuter. Reviewer seems to put the dwelling in place of the Dweller,—the house in place of its inhabitant. How could the "flesh" tabernacle or dwell in itself? Does not reviewer know that the Mosaic temple with its indwelling "Oracle typified God manifested in the flesh, and was fulfilled in Christ who called His "body" or flesh "the temple?" John ii. 19-22. What would the mere walls or architectural part of the temple have been without the indwelling Oracle? which in Hebrew is Debir, from the same root as Dabar or Word. Reviewer calls the Holy Spirit "He," but denies that masculine pronoun to the Logos.

Reviewer ought to know that modern writers may be helpful, yet not "decisive." The Holy Scriptures are the only decisive authorities that we have. Surely he could not expect me to quote Campbell, Thomas, or Clark as decisive.

Instead of "I shall be perfected," the Diaglott reads, "I shall have finished;" and Campbell's version reads, "my course will be completed." Luke iii 32. The human nature of Jesus was perfected through sufferings when He arose to die no more. This mode of expression was explained in my fourth article. He performed divine actions in virtue of His divinity, and human actions in virtue of His humanity. Thinking and walking are affirmed of the same person, yet the one act relates to his mental, the other to his physical nature. When the Bible says that "Jesus" was laid in the tomb, it means only "the body of Jesus." Compare verses 42 and 40 in John xix. But when it says He was before Abraham, and John, and all things, and "was God," it means the pre-existent Word. Is my reviewer incapable of understanding such plain language as this?

My expression that "the Word was God before the human nature was created," reviewer says is "true in the abstract." Does he mean to turn historical truths into mere abstractions!!! He then inquires, "But what has that to do with Jesus of Nazareth, born of Mary?" Does reviewer dare to accuse John of writing incoherently? or to say that verse 1 has nothing to do with verse 14 of John i.? That the Word was God in the beginning has as much to do with the birth in Bethlehem as cause has to do with effect; or as the light and warmth of the sun have to do with the sun itself. The world that He came into is the world that He made. John i. 10. How, then, could there have been any "flesh," or Bethlehem, or Mary, if He had not as the pre-existent Word created the world in which they subsisted? It stands of logical necessity that "He is before all things" because by or through Him, as the Father's instrumental Agent, all things were created. Colos. i. 16, 17. How could He have ascended to heaven unless first being "with God," He had descended from heaven? for "He that descended is the SAME also that ascended to where he was before." John iii. 13; vi. 33, 62; Ephes. iv. 10. As the ascending on high means more than resurrection, the descending must mean more than burial. Before His burial He uniformly spoke of the descension as past, and the ascension as future. Although there were many in those days as in these, who "believed not." John iii. 13; vi. 38, 51, 58; xvi. 28.

My reviewer says, "Has it ever been proved that Christ is called the Word in John i. 1? Never; unless the word of Campbell, Clark, Thomas, and a host of other fallible men be taken as proof."

Does my reviewer seriously intend for the balance of his life to deny that Christ is called The Word, after the Scripture has so plainly said, "His name is called The Word of God," and has identified The Word that was in the beginning as the same that "became flesh and dwelt among us?" John i. 14; 1 John i. 1, 2; Rev. xix. 13. Let reviewer beware of anything that even remotely resembles a "denial of the name of Christ," for "If we deny him, he also will deny us." Rev. iii. 8; 2 Tim. ii. 12.

Reviewer seems anxious to tear out the capitals W and L from Word and Logos, although grammar requires a capital for proper names, especially that "All names of the Deity should begin with capitals." Why does he not propose to tear out the capital J from Jesus and E from Emmanuel, and put small ones in their place, contrary to Scripture and to grammar?

To say that the "Word" in John i. 1 was not a person would be far more illogical than to say that the "Voice" in John i. 23, where Diaglott uses a capital V, was not a person. A note in Diaglott tells of an officer in one of the Eastern countries who is called the word or voice of the king, because while the king is screened from view this officer receives and communicates to the people the royal commands. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." John i. 18.

Reviewer tells us that God "had no son" when Isaiah prophesied! What then did the same Isaiah mean by saying, "Doubtless thou art our Father though Abraham be ignorant of us?" Isa. lxiii. 16. And what is meant by calling the Israelites "children" of God, including sons and daughters, in the days of Moses? Deut. xiv. 1.

Reviewer's self-entangling web of questions about the creation is straitened out and blown away by the harmonious testimony of Scripture that God the Father created all things "by" His Word and Spirit. Gen. i. 1; John i. 3; Job xxvi. 13. This three-fold order of operation is beautifully expressed in Psa. xxxiii. 6.—"By the Word of Jehovah the heavens were made; and by the Spirit of his mouth all their host."—Bagster's Version. This three-fold relation in the Divine nature is revealed in the New Testament as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. I have used capitals according to the sense of the text. In Hebrew all the words begin with capitals. "Most of the ancient expositors, by the 'Word of the Lord,' and the 'breath' or spirit 'of his mouth,' understand the Son of God, the personal Word, and the Holy Spirit, as proceeding from the Father and the Son."—Comprehensive Commentary.

Reviewer's charge that I teach a thing which I "do not believe' and cannot believe," seems to me too absurd to need any reply. Besides, I am not defending myself now, but something of more importance, namely, the cause of truth.

To say as reviewer does that "Jesus of Nazareth" was "not from the realms of glory," is no new idea, for the unbelieving Jews used almost the same words long ago. Supposing Him to be a mere man they murmured among themselves, "How is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?" John vi. 42. 43.

All that reviewer says about the "One God" is sufficiently explained by the Savior's words, "I and the Father are ONE." Unless a man can believe these six words and the first verse of John, in their unperverted sense, he should not write or speak on this great subject.

Reviewer seems (if I mistake not) to speak of the Son's "reward" as though it were only "for a thousand years." He, and every one who professes to believe the gospel of the kingdom, ought to know full well that the kingdom which the Father has promised the Son is "everlasting" and shall have "no end." Lu. i. 32, 33; xxii. 29; 2 Pet. i. 11. This, according to the example in Acts viii. 12, is one of "the things concerning the kingdom" which every one ought to know before baptism. The divinity of the Sonship and the eternity of the kingdom are taught so closely side-by-side in the messages of Gabriel and Nathan, that I should greatly doubt my ability to write concerning the former unless I had understood the latter truth. See Luke i. 32, 33 with Sam. vii. 13. 14.

Dr. John Thomas says that Christ and the Father are "One Jehovah;" and this union he calls "plural manifestation in unity." He furthermore says, "All true believers who have been immersed into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit,—not three names, but the One Name of the Divine Manifestation—are a manifold unit—One in many, and many in one. They are 'the ones who shall be'—the Yahweh echad, the One Jehovah, not yet perfected and glorified: but when so, to be King over all the earth. Zech. xiv. 9; Apoc. v. 10."—Eureka, Vol I., Pages 92, 106.

But after these sayings of Dr. T. reviewer says, "We have too much respect for his ability to be able to believe that he could either believe or teach two or three persons in one Deity."

I therefore give the above quotations from Dr. T., not as endorsing them, but simply to show that it is my reviewer himself who "fails to understand" Dr. Thomas.

But how shall we account for such a blunder as my reviewer has made in quoting Liddell and Scott? Their definitions occupy more than two long columns of fine print. Among other things they say in small print which reviewer has given in large capitals, that "Logos never means a word in the grammatical sense, as the mere name of a thing, like epos and rema, Latin vox, vocabulum, but rather as the thing referred to, the material, not the formal part;" this I have given verbatim, italics and all as found in lexicon; edition of 1849. But reviewer stops the quotation at a comma, and omits the part necessary to complete the sense. This omitted part of the definition is entirely against reviewer's position. The definitions, a little further on, say that "Protagoras" a philosopher who lived about 100 B.C. "was called logos." This proves that logos was sometimes used as a proper name by the Greeks. And in the last paragraph of definitions, the lexicon says, in large capitals, that the "LOGOS" is "GOD THE WORD."

Greenfield's lexicon says the Logos is "the Divine Word, by whom God created all things, and revealed his will to man."—Philadelphia Edition, 1846.

Parkhurst's lexicon says the Logos is "The divine and substantial Word of God, i. e., the second Person of the ever-blessed Trinity. . . . . Christ is called Debar Jehovah the Word of the Lord, Gen. xv. 1, 4; 1 Sam. iii. 7, 21; xv. 10; 1 Kings xiii. 9, 17; xix. 9, 15; Psa. cvii. 20. . . . . The Grecizing Jews speak in the same style. Thus Wisdom ix. 1; O God who hast made all things en logo sou by thy Word: and chapter xviii. 15, 16, the Almighty Logos is described as a person leaping down from heaven and executing vengeance on the Egyptians. If it be asked why the second Person of the eternal Trinity is thus called the Word of God, the easiest and most natural answer seems to be, because HE hath always been the great Revealer to mankind of Jehovah's attributes and will; or because, as he himself speaketh, Matt. xi. 27, no one knoweth the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. Compare John i. 18."—London Edition, 1854.

Pickering's lexicon says the Logos is "the Word of God, or Christ, in the New Testament."—Boston Edition, 1858.

Bagster's lexicon says the Logos is "the divine WORD."

Thayer's lexicon says the Logos "denotes the essential Word of God, i. e. the personal (hypostatic) wisdom and power in union with God, his minister in the creation and government of the universe, the cause of all the world's life both physical and ethical, which for the procurement of man's salvation put on human nature in the person of Jesus the Messiah, and shone forth conspicuously from his words and deeds: John i. 1, 14."—New York Edition, 1887.

Robinson's lexicon says the Logos "stands for the divine pre-existent nature of the Messiah, which became flesh and dwelt among us as Jesus Christ, the God-man."—New York Edition, 1850.

"The Century Dictionary" says "The Word" is "The Son of God; God as manifested to man; same as Logos."—Copyrighted 1891.

Webster's Dictionary says the Logos is "the divine Word; Christ."—International Edition, 1893.

After these testimonies from seven Greek and two English lexicons, the readers can see for themselves whether I "suppressed" the lexical meaning of Logos and Word, in any manner "wrong and cruel to the unlearned." Let them all judge whether it is I or my reviewer that more deserves the charge which he brings against me of having "suppressed" the meaning in a manner "wrong and cruel to the unlearned."

After making this charge my reviewer says, "God employs these words as they are defined by lexicographers." [illegible] by this confession of his own, his cause is lost for ever; for lexicographers, as just shown, say that the "LOGOS" is "GOD THE WORD."

Thus my reviewer appeals to lexicographers and they decide against him.

Why not, therefore, let this controversy end?

Written kindly, and for the sake of truth.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the first resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Take Courage.

Hickory Grove Sermons.
No. 5.

A series of discourses delivered by A. J. Eychaner in the Gospel Tent at Hickory Grove, Sept. 9-25, 1893.

We were last evening investigating in the realm of nature to ascertain what is her teaching on the subject of immortality. So far as we had gone we found her testimony in perfect agreement with the Bible, viz: that the things seen are temporal. We wish to continue the investigation this evening and come at once to the propositions relied upon as arguments from nature to prove that man in the present state is in possession of immortality.

6th. The awakening from natural sleep after a night of rest. When we enter that mysterious state called sleep, the senses seem to lose their power and activity. The sight is closed. The hearing gone and all the other senses more or less suspended. The person is said to be asleep. Yet while the senses are thus at rest there is life in the body, and when the rest is completed, consciousness and activity again return, or the person may be awakened by shaking or being spoken to. But in this case as in others already examined, life was not extinct. There was rest but not death. Death in the Scriptures is compared to sleep and called a sleep, from a similarity of the two states and more especially from the fact that from both there will be an awakening. If in sleep the functions of life wholly ceased instead of being at rest, there would be no awakening. The miracle of resurrection would be necessary each time we went to sleep in order that our lives might be continued. In death, these functions wholly cease. If it were not so, those who were dead might at any time wake or come to life again without outside help. The righteous are said to be asleep in view of the fact that they will wake again. That state from which there is no awaking, cannot be called sleep, but it is indeed death. The righteous are said to be asleep not because the functions of life are not all entirely suspended, but because God has promised to restore those functions by a resurrection from the dead. The difference between sleep and death is this, in sleep the person retains life and the power of awaking, but in death life is gone, and the power of awaking lies wholly in the hands of him whose voice alone can waken the sleeping dead. The sleeping man may awaken, but he who sleeps the sleep of death will never awake except through the power of God. Thus Paul declares, that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. If therefore there is no resurrection, there will be no future life. If that be true, then death ends life. If there ever shall be an awakening of God's people from the sleep of death, it will be because life has been restored to them and not because they had possessed it while dead. But in natural sleep life has never been absent. This difference between sleep and death is apparent and stands as an irresistable conviction in the mind of all who look at the facts. To argue that because death is called sleep that therefore the person is not dead, would be strange logic indeed while the sober fact of death remained to be explained away. The argument is as all others are which are sought to be established upon the analogy of nature, viz: assumption of the point to be proved then arguing an analogy from that assumption. We say to our opponents kindly, prove to us that in death life yet inheres in the physical body and then we will admit the perfect analogy of sleep and death. If there is any life in the body in death, it has never yet been demonstrated, but that there is life in a sleeping person admits of the most ample proof. So I conclude that the analogy of death and sleep lies in the fact of awaking and reliving and not in the fact of continued life.

There are three other propositions under this head which from their similarity we may consider as one. They are:—6th Somnambulism, the mesmeric and comatose states, and the revival of certain animals and insects after the torpor of winter.

We may state at the beginning of these propositions that they are similar in scope and extent to those already examined, and while they are all natural phenomena and stand as facts in the natural world the question remains, what do they teach? Can they by fair and unsophisticated testimony stand as advocating human immortality. 'Tis true the somnambulist walks in his sleep he scales high buildings, performs difficult feats, and even works out problems, which he fails to do in his waking moments. 'Tis true that persons under mesmeric influence do things that they would not attempt in the natural or normal state. So to with those in a trance. 'Tis true that many insects revive after being solidly frozen up during many months, upon the return of spring. But in each and every case we ask, was there death? Had any of these passed out of the realm of natural life and natural conditions? Had the sleep walker died? Is the mesmeric state beyond the border of this life? Is the trance or hypnotism or coma after death or this side? Were those frozen ants dead? If so, did they have a resurrection as the fire or sun warmed them? The fact in all these cases is, that life has never ceased, or in other words, there had none of them died; and the question still remains, what do they teach? [illegible] unusual conditions in nature, life or a tenacity of natural life. But beyond death they show nothing. They do not even contribute one element of immortality. All are in this life and so prove nothing beyond death. Bear in mind that it is sought by these to prove that man or a part of man does not die? How can sleep-activity show life beyond what we call death? How can the torpor of an animal in life show that immortality is a natural birthright to man, or that because an animal sleeps through winter, that therefore when man dies, he is not dead? The fact that the animal wakes up in the spring is proof that he was not dead. But does man ever wake up from death, and show us by that waking that he was not dead? Give us the proof and faith in present immortality will result. That man will be made immortal through Christ by a resurrection from the dead, we believe, but that he is immortal by nature in sin, we deny. There is yet one more proposition and is considered the crowning proof of the existence of some innate entity which defies death and rises above death and soars away to Elysian fields, a thing of beauty and an emblem of immortality; it is:

7th. The worm and butterfly argument. It is sought to show by this proposition that as the psyche of the worm emerges as the butterfly, so the soul of the body of man emerges as the creature of immortality. Let us take a common butterfly and follow it in the different phases of its life. There are seven stages of its growth, four of which are apparent and easily traced. 1st, the egg, 2nd the worm, 3rd the chrysalis, 4th the butterfly. We should remember at the beginning that all the stages of its existence are this side of death. The point at which the psyche emerges from the chrysalis is not death; but the death occurs at the end of the butterfly stage. There was life in the egg, life in the worm, life in the chrysalis, life in the butterfly until it died, but beyond its death there was no life. Man too lives in different stages of growth. First as an elementary sperm life, second as an embryo, and third as a fully developed being, capable of all the functions and exercises of life. The second stage of man's existence corresponds more nearly to the chrysalis state of the worm. Man casts off the habiliment or covering of his embryotic state at birth, just as the psyche casts off the chrysalis covering when it rises into the butterfly state. Man's death is not at this point, neither is the butterfly's. Death comes to both at the end of the highest period of their active life. Death comes at the end of all these stages, and ends all unless a higher power restores life again. Those who seek proof for continued existence after death from this illustration, invariably make the point where the butterfly emerges from the chrysalis to correspond with the death of man. They tell us there is where the soul emerges from the body and soars away just as the butterfly emerges from the cocoon, joyfully essaying its untried wings, and rejoicing in its freedom. But a moment's reflection will serve to show us that there is more poetry here than analogy, more sentiment than good sense. The point at which the butterfly emerges from the cocoon is not its death, neither does it correspond to man's death. But it is the point where the analogy demands correspondence with man's birth. As man leaves the covering in which he was enveloped during embryo at birth, so the butterfly leaves the covering of the chrysalis state when it leaves the cocoon. This is the place where the analogy lies and also in the death of both man and the butterfly further on. There is no analogy between the death of man and the birth of the butterfly. The analogy of the death of man is found in the death of the butterfly. Birth is never death in nature, and we may add birth is never death in the Bible. On the other hand where nature says death, there is no life and no birth. It is assumed by the advocates of this theory, that a soul leaves the human body at death, placing the emerging of the butterfly as the analogy, and then asking us to accept the statement as an argument. It is a kind of ecclesiastical jugglery that easily deceives the unthinking and especially those who want to believe that it is proof.

The birth of man into this state corresponds with the birth of the butterfly so far as correspondence is possible between different orders of life, and the death of one to the death of the other. But where is there any proof of life beyond death in either case? There is none in nature, and clear and unequivocal is her testimony, that death is universal and complete.

It is only when we turn to Revelation that we find immortality possible to man in another state. That state he can only reach by a resurrection or an instantaneous change to immortality at the coming of Jesus. He offers immortality—eternal life upon the terms of the gospel. He brought it to light through the gospel. Eternal life is a matter of promise and hope, each of which is evidence that we do not possess it. We have the natural body now. We are born of the flesh and are flesh. We bear the image of the earthy, but if faithful until death we shall be born into the higher life of the spirit. Then indeed will we be spirit. Then will we wear the image of the heavenly, for those who will be worthy of that world by a resurrection will be equal to angels and can die no more. Mortal now, but immortal then.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 17.

1. And he said unto his disciples It is "inadmissable that the stumbling-blocks should not have come; but woe unto him through whom they come.

2. It would be an advantage to him if an ass's mill-stone were hung around his neck and he were cast into the sea than that he should become a stumbling-block for one of these little ones.

3. Take heed to yourselves. If thy brother sin, reprove him; and if he repent, remit unto him.

4. And if he sin against thee seven times a day and return unto thee seven times, saying, I repent, thou shalt remit unto him.

5. And the apostles said unto the Lord, Add to our faith.

6. And the Lord said, if ye had had faith like a mustard kernel as it were ye might have said ur to this sycamore tree, be thou rooted up and planted in the sea and it would have obeyed you.

7. Who of you forsooth who hath a bond-servant doing the work of a ploughman or a shepherd and who hath come in from the field, will say unto him straightway go and lie down?

8. But will not rather say unto him, get ready that which I am to sup on and gird thyself and wait on (deacon-service) me until I have eaten and drunken; and after that do thou eat and drink?

9. Doth he have gratitude towards that bond-servant because he hath done the things directed?

10. In this wise ye when ye have done all that ye have had appointed you, say we are unprofitable bond-servants. We have done what we ought to have done.

11. And it came to pass as he was going his way to Hierousalem and was passing through the midst of Samareia and Galilaia;

12. And was entering into a certain village, there met him ten leprous men, who stood afar off;

13. And they lifted up their voice, saying, Jesous, Master, have mercy on us.

14. And when he saw he said unto them: Go your way and show yourselves unto the priests; and it came to pass, as they were departing they were cleansed.

15. And one of them, when he saw that he had been healed, returned glorifying God with a great voice;

16. And fell at his feet thanking him; and he was a Samareitan;

17. And Jesous answered and said, were there not ten cleansed? And where are the nine?

18. Were there not found to return and give glory to God except this alien?

19. And he said unto him Arise and go thy way: Thy faith hath saved thee.

20. And when asked by the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God was coming, he answered them and said. The Kingdom of God cometh not with lying in wait for it.

21. Nor will they say, lo here or there. For lo the kingdom of God is within you.

22. And he said unto the disciples. Days will come, when ye will long to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye will not see.

23. And they will say unto you, lo there and lo here. Go not nor pursue after it.

24. For even as the lightning that lighteneth from out the one part under the heavens shineth unto the other part under the heavens, so will the Son of Man be in his day.

25. But first it behooveth him to have suffered many things and to have his value rejected of this generation.

26. And even as occurred in the days of Noe, so will it be also in the days of the Son of Man.

27. They were eating, drinking, marrying, giving in marriage until the day when Noe entered into the ark, and the flood occurred and destroyed them all.

28. Likewise even as it occurred in the days of Lot; they were eating, drinking, marketing, selling, planting, building; and on the day when Lot went out of Sodoma it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all.

30. According to these things will it be on the day when the Son of Man is being revealed.

31. On that day, he who shall be on the house-top and his utensils in the house let him not come down to take them, and the one in the field likewise let him not turn backward.

32. Remember Lot's wife.

33. Whoever shall seek to preserve his soul will lose it, and whoever shall lose it will propagate it.

34. I say unto you on that night there will be two (men) in a bed. The one will have been taken and the other left.

35. Two (women) will be grinding at the same place (or together). The one will have been taken and the other left.

36. (Not in the best text.)

37. And answering they say unto him, where, O Lord? And he said unto them, where the body is, there also will the eagles have been gathered together.

COMMENT.

"Inadmissable" instead of "impossible" R. V. One of the cardinal truths of Christianity and faith is that "nothing is impossible with God." I have given the true meaning of the word here used and it is a legal term used in a legal sense just as we say that certain evidence is inadmissable from a legal stand-point. There is another word for "impossible" in the Greek.

"An advantage to" instead of "well" R. V.

"If ye had had" instead of "if ye have" R. V. Makes the conclusion applicable to that specific time and occasion and not in a general way as commentators and preachers usually teach and as might be inferred from the reading in the C. V. & R. V.

"As they were departing" instead of "As they went" R. V. Makes the act of healing take place on the way while they were in the act of going to the priests, while the natural inference from the other reading is that it took place after they had gone to the priests.

"Alien" instead of "stranger" R. V. The former defines a person of another race and organization, the latter a person with whom we are not acquainted simply.

"Hath saved thee" instead of "hath made thee whole" R. V.

"With lying in wait for" instead of "with observations" R. V. The idea of an insidious watchfulness you see entirely left out. It is the same sort of difference there is between the watchfulness of the thief and the officer who is after him.

"Will" instead of "shall" and "shall" instead of "will" along here R. V. The difference is between command and prophecy.

"Have his value rejected" or "to be rejected for value" instead of to be "rejected" merely R. V. This is too important to be disregarded, I think, by any one who wants to understand God's revealed purpose in redemption.

"Preserve" instead of "gain" R. V. One cannot "gain" what he has already got, namely his soul.

"Propagate" instead of "preserve" R. V. One cannot "preserve" intact and "propagate" at the same time. You cannot preserve the caterpillar life and propagate the butterfly; neither can you "preserve" the wild olive nature and successfully graft in the cultivated variety.

"The eagles" no doubt here designate the angels sent out together in "the body" of Christ at the resurrection—that is "the body" of which Christ is the "Head."

There have been many various fanciful interpretations of this passage of which the commonly accepted one that it refers to the Roman "Eagles" gathered at the destruction of Jerusalem. I think the most wanting in spiritual insight and acquaintance with parable teaching.

Offences.

The Master tells the disciples that offences will come; but woe unto him through whom they come. It were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones. Luke xvii. 1, 2. How very careful and guarded we should be, lest we say or do something that will be offensive to one of the little ones—the weak ones. Offence is often given because we are off our guard, not thinking or designing to offend any one, yet there is no excuse for being off our guard, which is to be negligent in duty. O just think of it, brethren and sisters, better be chained to a mill-stone and cast into the sea without any hope of rescue, than to offend one of the little ones. Solemn thought indeed. And yet how often we take the matter into our own hands, and say offensive things and do offensive deeds, regardless of others' feelings. And even laugh at them and tease them over their weakness. Now this is all wrong, every bit of it, and two wrongs never make a right. And if we had the glory of God, and the good of our fellow man at heart as we should, we would seldom, if ever, offend any one. James says, "For in many things we offend all, or all offend. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

Then on the other hand, some are very easy to take offence, it seems they are looking out for offence a good share of their time. And if some brother or sister should say a word thoughtlessly, or do some little deed that was not just as it should be, they catch on and ponder over, and magnify the little deed until their sensitive nature is hurt bad, and they feel discouraged, almost ready to give up and walk no more with the Master or his people. This is all wrong, and our faith must be very weak, and should be cultivated and strengthened. Teach us all to do our duty, dear Lord, and to overcome evil with good.

Wages.

Wages is that which is paid or stipulated for services—hire—reward.

He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto eternal or age-lasting life. John iv. 40.

They that be wise—or teachers, margin—shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever. Dan. xii. 3. But how about those who turn people to lies? What shall be their reward?

As a dream when one awaketh; so O Lord, when thou awakest thou shalt despise their image. Psa. lxxiii. 20.

The wages of sin is death. Rom. vi. 23.

The most sublime sin is soul immortality.

It is the solid Word of God or substance thereof sublimated or raised to a state of vapor.

It is the promises to God's people made into wind and confusion, —into mysticism and nonsense.

The greatest amount of wages per se, lie just ahead.

There is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet. Jer. xlix. 23.

On the land there is perplexity.

Remember the covenant God made with Abraham and the blood of its ratification.

Restitution is the word—and for a restored earth we should be looking.

Adam lost the dominion or rulership of earth; not of heaven—for that he never had to lose.

Christ has regained it; and will yet reign in Jerusalem on David's throne.

The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this. Isa. ix. 7.

The penny a day is sure to the faithful.

The Napoleonic Revival.

The revival of the worship, as one may call it, of Napoleon in France is attracting wide attention, and men's minds are busy seeking some explanation of it. Some have given expression to the opinion that it is but a step from the worship of the hero and the military glory he represented to the worship of the imperial idea also, and on that basis are already predicting a revolution. There is no doubt of the fact of the blazing out again of the Napoleonic idea. French literature, the stage, and the fashions in furniture, in dress, and decoration have shown it increasingly for several years. But the fashion has not been confined to France. "Empire" fashions have been increasing in favor in this country also, from literature to ladies' fans. Yet one does not therefore augur an outbreak of imperialism in this country any more than a return to allegiance to the British crown because the jeunesse doree turn up their trousers when they think it is raining in London. To one who looks on from the outside the cause, or a large share of it, does not seem far to seek. The Napoleonic Empire introduced original ideas and fashions, and, for that reason alone, is likely to show variously modified revivals at irregularly recurring periods. But the chief cause would seem to be that Napoleon is conspiculously representative to Frenchmen of an epoch when France stood alone against the world and under this man's sword shaped her own institutions for twenty years against leagued Europe, under the name, much of the time, of the Holy Alliance. Frenchmen feel that the Triple Alliance of to day is the child and heir of the other alliance, and is aimed almost solely at France, and it is this feeling that is at the bottom of the Napoleonic revival. It has reference to Napoleon as the sword of France, and not to Napoleon as First Consul or Napoleon as the conqueror at Marengo or the Pyramids. As regards republicanism or imperialism it has no necessary significance whatever.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A NUMBER of foreign workers to whom we have sent papers for several years past still wish to receive them. Who will donate a little for this.

JUST as we are preparing to go to press word comes of the sudden death, Jan. 3, at Seattle, Wash., of Bro. George W. Young, well known to many of our readers. The written notice will appear in the next issue.

WE wish to thank the kind friends who have so generously aided, by their donations, in the work of supplying papers to the poor ones. There is still more of this to be attended to, and we trust that others may see that this is a good way to work for the Master.

Divine Teaching.

Behold what manner of love the truth hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. Happy art thou, oh Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms. Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee, which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men! Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people; thou hast covered all their sin. Bless the Lord, oh my soul, who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases, who redeemeth thy life from destruction, who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies; for the Lord God is a Sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will be withhold from them that walk uprightly. O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise up against thee in judgment, thou shalt condemn. How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God! How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son. All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off. These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat; for the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe all tears from their eyes. They shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. So shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us and hath given us everlasting consolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and establish you in every good word and work. This is the heritage of the servants, and their righteousness is of Me, saith the Lord. Blessing and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Amen and amen. •

God's Gracious Condescension.

Our old Bible is apt to fall open at the 6th of Hebrews; the verses 13-20 inclusive show so much of God's condescension and love that we often [illegible] to them: "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. And so after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath of confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath, that by two things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us,—which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil, whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an High Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."

Oh, what an anchor! Can we imagine an anchor surer, or more steadfast than the hope set before us, and growing out of God's oath-confirmed-promise? This anchor was never known to fail in the most tempestuous sea, or stormiest weather. Were an experienced person to see an anchor lowered from the side of a large vessel when the sea was boiling furiously he would hardly believe it possible that such a little iron appliance would check the drift of such a sea monster; but the officers who had often tested it and never found it wanting, would confidently trust it again to hold the ship amid the fury of the storm.

It is thus with those who have often tested the anchor whose flukes both sure and steadfast enter within the veil. Every test gives additional confidence; every trial gives stronger assurance. Are all our dear readers who have named the name of Christ rejoicing in hope? If not, why not? The fault is not on God's part. He has taken infinite pains to give them strong assurance;—and if the assurance that all the riches of God's favor stored up for saints and to be disbursed to them in the age about to dawn does not cause them to rejoice in the prospect, it is safe to conclude that there is a defect in their title. They must have been losing ground for some cause. May God help them to revive the things that remain, fan the embers to a flame and resolve anew to be out-and-out for God and Christ and Truth.

We are not blessed with the violent persecution of the early church that soon weeded out the mere intellectual assenters to the truth, and the milk and water adherents to it; and as time rushes us on to the end of the acceptable time it becomes us all to examine ourselves to see whether we be in the faith, or whether it be dead for lack of works. •

Selected.

The Old Year Abroad.

The old year which has been signalized principally by important political events of a popular nature and distinct gains in the direction of the people's rights and larger freedom. In England particular interest centres in the passage of the Irish home rule bill by the House of Commons Sept. 1 by 34 majority, though on the 8th of the same month it was defeated in the House of Lords by 419 to 41 votes. In its own dependencies the most important event was the suppression of the young Khedive's attempt to take the reins into his own hand and rule Egypt for himself. Last of all the burning question under discussion is the comparative strength of the navy.

France has been in a continuous state of excitement. Ministries have come and gone rapidly. The Panama scandal caused the resignation of the Cabinet in January and M. Ribot formed a new one. Meanwhile the Panama trials resulted in the conviction of Ferdinand de Lesseps, Charles de Lesseps, Fontaine, Cottu, Eiffel, Lequay, and [illegible]. The Ribot ministry resigned on the question of the budget and M. Dupuy formed one which resigned Nov. [illegible] the income tax question, and was succeeded by another formed by Casimir-Perier. The new Cabinet has encountered Anarchist hostility and Dec. 9 a bomb was thrown into the Chamber of Deputies with disastrous effect. The cowardly act, however, has given the opportunity for severe restrictive measures. Other events of interest in France have been the formation of a Franco-Russian alliance as an offset to the triple alliance of Germany, Italy, and Austria and celebrated with brilliant fetes at Toulon and Paris; a short war with Siam over the Annam boundary question, which ended in the success of the French and the acquisition of new territory; and the Dahomey war, which resulted in the abdication of the King of that country.

Germany and Austria also have been the theater of stirring political events. In Germany the army bill was rejected May 6 and was followed by the dissolution of the Reichstag. In the subsequent elections the government secured a small majority and the bill was passed July 15 by 201 to 185 votes, increasing the effectiveness of the army by 85,000 men. The other legislative measure of special interest is the passage of the bill for the return of the Jesuits. The year in Austria was signalized by the resignation of the Taafe Cabinet and the appointment of Count Windisch Graetz as Premier. Among other reforms an extension of suffrage has been proposed as a conciliatory measure. Dissatisfaction is rampant both in Hungary and Bohemia, to such an extent in the latter country that it is now under martial law. Evidently the relations of the different members of the Austrian governmental systems are in a dangerous condition of tension.

Italy also has had its full share of political troubles and public scandals. Early in the year the bank scandals caused the downfall of the ministry and a new Cabinet was formed by Sig. Giolitti, which in turn was overthrown by the same scandals. Sig. Zanardelli formed a Cabinet, of short duration, however, and ultimately Sig. Crispi was restored to power. Both in Spain and Portugal there have been numerous Cabinet crises growing out of financial questions, and the Anarchists have been busy in both countries with their cowardly outrages, which culminated in the bomb explosion in the theater at Barcelona. Spain has had a little war with the Riffian tribes in Morocco and after a three months' campaign has overcome them and secured an indemnity from the Sultan of that country.

The old trouble between Sweden and Norway has broken out more fiercely than ever and the Norwegian Storthing boldly has rebuked King Oscar for refusing to concede to Norway independent diplomatic representation abroad. Should the coming elections in Norway result in a radical majority it will demand the abandonment of political unity in foreign representation, and should it be refused war will be not unlikely. The London Times, commenting on the situation, says:

"Despite the superiority of her military resources Sweden would find it a hard task to reduce Norway to subjection, and harder still to keep her in subjection. If the sentiment of the Swedes compels the King to unsheath the sword the European powers who are the sponsors of the union ought to intervene, armed with a European mandate, as in 1814. Sweden might act within limits, leading to an arrangement for the avoidance of a war crisis. Opinion in Norway is, in the meantime, raised on only two issues—union and monarchy or separation and a republic. But among the contingencies acute observers detect a third course—the creation of a throne in Norway, with Prince Waldemar, youngest son of the King of Denmark, as king."

Russia has had a quiet year, being concerned mainly with checking the fatal ravages of the cholera, expelling Jews from the country, and consigning Nihilists to Siberia. In the Balkan regions there has been much stir. In Servia the young Alexander deposed the regents and proclaimed himself king, since which time (April 1) Cabinets have been made and upset with cheerful regularity. There is a speck of war between Albania and Montenegro and the mountaineers of the latter are calling upon the Sultan to restrain the former from further encroachments. Turkey and Roumania have been quiet. Grecian Cabinets have resigned several times on financial issues and at last it has announced officially that Greece is bankrupt. Labor strikes in Belgium have been the rule and popular agitation growing out of them at last took the demand for universal suffrage. The Chambers, forced by the dangerous attitude of the people, finally yielded to their demands and since then quiet has reigned.

Asia has been quiet. The new representative Parliament in Japan is doing well. The most notable event in India has been the stoppage of silver coinage. Siam has had a short and hopeless war with France ending in its discomfiture, the payment of a heavy indemnity, and the loss of territory. China has had trouble with the great powers over the massacre of missionaries, but at last has promised to make reparation and is now in trouble with Russia over the occupation of the Pamir or "the roof of the world." Samoa has had its yearly war between Mataafa and Malietoa, ending in the surrender of the former. In Africa the only events of consequence have been the trouble between Egypt and England, growing out of the appointment of a new ministry by the Khedive without consulting England. The young man, however, was brought to terms speedily. In South Africa there has been a long struggle between English residents and the Matabele ending in their defeat and the capture of their King, but not without considerable loss to the English. —

Our Southern neighbor, Mexico, has had its share of revolutions, though not of a very serious character, and our Northern neighbor, Canada, has had a tolerably happy year and a new Governor-General, the Earl of Aberdeen. Central and South America have been in almost constant turmoil. Honduras has a revolution, beginning in April, and still progressing. Nicaragua would have had trouble with Honduras but for the fact that it too has had its revolution which ended in the success of the rebels, the resignation of the President, and the appointment of Zavala as dictator.

In Brazil revolution continued in some of the States during the earlier part of the year, but in September the Peixoto Government encountered its most serious danger in the revolt of the navy under Admiral Mello. The revolt still continues. Rio Janeiro several times has been bombarded, but without serious loss. The end of the struggle probably will come when Melleo's vessels meet the vessels purchased by the government and fitted out with dynamite guns in New York. The Argentine Republic also has had its revolution which finally has been suppressed. Rumblings of discontent have been heard in Ecuador, but its most dangerous prospect is the possibility of war with Peru over the boundary question. Chile, except for the loss of a Cabinet, has been quiet. Guatemala has distinguished itself by a proclamation of free labor.—Chicago Tribune.

War of the Sects.

Bismarck remarked some years ago that the next European war would not be caused by the triple alliance, but would come from the side of Morocco. The war between Spain and the Moors, who live near her possessions on the Moorish coast, renders the fulfilment of this prediction possible for several reasons. As the Turk is the sick man of the east of Europe, so the Moor is the sick man of the west whose succession is coveted by several powers. England wants Morocco, or at least a part of it, to enable her to command the Straits of Gibraltar. Spain because the Moor is her neighbor, and she is naturally the principal heir, and France is interested because the country adjoins Algeria, and the Arabs who are her subjects are bound to the Moors by the common bond of kinship and religion. If there is a general uprising of the Moors there is no telling where it will lead. The population of Morocco is composed of tribes more or less under the control of their chiefs, and half of them ready at any moment for a revolt which their isolation always renders difficult to subdue. They are the most ignorant and warlike, and consequently the most fanatic and dangerous of all the followers of Mohammed. If the Sultan were not able to control the rebels the foreign powers would be obliged to interfere to protect their own subjects, in which case the situation would be most delicate, and the worst would have to be feared.

It would be fortunate if the trouble ended here, but there would be other complications to be feared. The war against the "Christian dogs" is an article in the creed of every Mohammedan, the more deeply implanted as he is the more ignorant. If the Sultan, who is the lineal descendant of Mohammed and more respected by the faithful than the Sultan of Turkey, were unable by his moral influence or by force of arms to control his subjects, there would possibly be a general uprising throughout Northern Africa, beginning in Southern Morocco and extending among the tribes of the south of Algeria partly isolated by the desert of Sahara, among those of Tunis, infecting Tripoli, perhaps causing the Madhi to renew his exploits in the part of the Soudan south of Egypt, and making its effects felt among all the petty Mohammedan kingdoms and chiefs in other parts of the Dark Continent. A sacred war of this kind would affect the interests of all the great powers of Europe, Russia and Austria excepted, having colonies in Africa. When the rebellion of the Madhi occurred it remained circumscribed in spite of the emissaries sent by the prophet to excite the Arabs of Tunis and Algeria. It was the affair of Egypt and England alone.

If the troubles between Spain and the Moors do not end in the speedy and utter defeat of the latter a general uprising of all the Arab tribes that border the desert of Sahara is possible and has for some weeks past furnished matter for reflection for the press and the diplomatists of Europe. The French are particularly alarmed for Algeria, not only on account of a certain agitation perceptible among the tribes near the boundary of Morocco, but on account of the cluster of oases called Tuat, south of the western part of the Province of Constantine, also claimed by Morocco.

An expedition prepared to be sent into this region was countermanded a few weeks ago on account of the revolt of the Moors at Melilla, because it was feared that if it went so far into the desert it might be destroyed by the hostile tribes excited by the Mohammedan priests sent among them by the Moorish insurgents.

A Madrid newspaper reports that an officer of the American navy, whose ship stopped in a Spanish port, remarked casually in a conversation that the only way to deal with the Moors was to treat them as the United States had treated the Indians—that is, annihilate them. It is true that the Indians in this country are in process of annihilation, but it is the result of circumstances rather than of a policy deliberately pursued by our government. The remark attributed to our officer probably changed its form in passing through a Spanish medium. Yet it contained a germ of truth, which is this: All human beings who are incapable of being civilized, and who are the natural enemies of civilization, are destined to disappear, as the American Indians are disappearing. This is eminently true of the Arab tribes in Africa, who are fanatic, aggressive, and a standing danger to their civilized neighbors. They are barbarians of the worst type, and absolutely useless to the rest of the world. Slavery is a Mohammedan institution and the slave trade is carried on by Mohammedans alone. No one can object to the followers of Mohammed believing as they please, but their creed is most intolerant, teaching directly or indirectly the hatred of all other sects and their conversion by the sword. These peculiarities of the faith partially disappear in a Moor or a Turk who is educated, but in the mass of believers, who take literally the teachings of the Koran, they are accented and lead to atrocious consequences. If their ancient power were restored to the Moors, the Turks, or the Arabs Christianity would again be obliged to defend its citadels, as it did a thousand years ago, against the hordes of Mohammed advancing from every side. Fortunately Christianity is better equipped for defence than in those distant epochs. In matters of religious faith, as in external nature, it is doubtless the fittest that will survive. But the processes of evolution are slow, and we shall have to wait.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Massed Soldiers of the Czar.

Gen. Sir Archibald Allison's article in the December number of Blackwood is not exactly cheerful reading for those who appreciate the blessings of peace. Sir Archibald draws attention to the fact that while France has been increasing her army more rapidly than Germany, she has now about come to the end of her tether; while Germany, though she has been moving at slower pace, is able to continue her present rate of progress for many years to come.

We are, in the opinion of this authority, slowly but surely progressing towards a "war of giants." That the struggle will find Russia and France on the one side, and Germany, Austria, and Italy on the other, is, he considers, evident from the present localization of the various forces. Referring to the Russian army, Sir Archibald finds that out of a total force of nearly 1,000,000, 784,000 men are massed on the German frontier and in the reserve behind it; while Odessa and the Crimea are held and Constantinople watched by only 80,000; and the Caucasus occupied and the Turkish frontier in Asia Minor observed by 50,000: while in the whole of Transcaspia, along the Afghan and Chinese frontiers, there are only 51,000; and on and about the Sea of Japan some 12,000.

From a general survey of the disposition of Russia's forces, Sir Archibald Allison comes to the conclusion—first, that she is straining every nerve to mass men on her Polish frontier, so as to be able, in conjunction with France, to crush Germany, even though aided by flanking Austria and distant Italy; next, that until this contest is over, Russia has determined to give up designs on Constantinople; and, finally, that she has no present intention of making any move upon Afghanistan or India.

Further than this, Sir Archibald regards it as certain that Russia never really intended to undertake such a distant and difficult enterprise as that of moving a force sufficient to seize our Indian Empire through the inhospitable and hostile country of Afghanistan. What she will probably do, in his opinion, before making her great move is to endeavor to induce us to believe that she is really about to invade India, so as to chain our large European force there to that country.

When the German system attains its full development Sir Archibald estimates that her available trained force of war will reach the enormous number of 1,300,000 men. At present he reckons that the dual alliance (France and Russia) has in peace 362,000 men under arms more than the triple alliance (Germany, Austria, and Italy,) but that the latter has in war the superiority by 503,000.

Razing of the Mosque of Damascus.

Private letters received this week from American travelers in Asia, make mention of the curious fact that the Turkish authorities seem to have suppressed all extended mention of the destruction of one of the most noted edifices in the world—the great Mosque of Damascus—though that event occurred many weeks ago. No particulars have been given, though the destruction of property in connection with the burning of the mosque must have been great. The fire removed one of the most noted buildings in the world, whose site is the center of associations extending back into the mists of antiquity, and which was one of the principal points of interest in a city full of historical attractions. The great mosque stood near the castle, occupying a quadrangle 163 yards long by 108 wide. Along the north side was an open court surrounded by cloisters resting on pillars of granite, marble, and limestone. The mosque itself extended along the whole southern side, and its interior dimensions were 131 by 125 feet. In the center was a dome resting on four massive piers. Underneath was a cave in which the head of John the Baptist was said to be preserved in a golden casket. The mosque had three minarets, one of which was 250 feet high, and upon it, according to Moslem traditions, the Savior was to have descended on the day of judgment. Round the mosque were traces of a court 1,100 feet long by 800 feet wide, encompassed by colonnades similar to those of the temple of Herod in Jerusalem and the temple of the sun at Palmyra. Authorities have thought it highly probably that this was the site of the temple of Rimmon, mentioned in 2 Kings v. 18, and that it became in after time the seat of the worship of Jupiter. In the fourth century it was converted into a church and dedicated to John the Baptist, and in the beginning of the eighth century it was seized by the followers of Mahomet.

What of the Night?

"Watchman, what of the night?" This was the anxious inquiry of one long years ago, and today the cry resounds with renewed energy.

"What of the night?" Darker and more dense the gloom with every day that passes. Men's hearts are indeed failing them for fear, and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth.

When will the morning dawn? The Watchman of Old said, "The morning cometh," and the Watchmen of today tell us that the golden tinge of the glorious dawn is appearing, and soon this long dark night will end, therefore be ye glad and rejoice, for a day of joy and gladness is about to be ushered in.

"Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute justice and judgment upon the earth. A King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. The wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Who among you will hearken and hear? Look unto the Lord and be ye saved. Trust in the Lord forever. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, and by his stripes are ye healed."

In the Lord is everlasting strength and underneath are the everlasting arms. L. A. C.

Poetry.

Linger Not.

The time is short!
If thou wouldst work for God, it must be now;
If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow,
Redeem the time.

Shake off earth's sloth!
Go forth with staff in hand while yet 'tis day;
Set out with girded loins upon the way;
Up! linger not!

Fold not thy hands!
What has the pilgrim of the cross and crown
To do with luxury or couch of down?
On, pilgrim, on!

With his reward
He comes, he tarries not; his day is near;
When men least look for him will he be here;
Prepare for him!

Let not the dust
[illegible] the feet from the eternal rock;
Face calmly, solemnly, the billows' shock;
Fear not the storm.

Withstand the foe;
Die daily, that forever thou mayst live;
Be faithful to the end, thy Lord will give
The crown of life.

Letter Drawer.

To all the beloved ones, greeting:

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." A blessed foretaste of the coming gathering, the general assembly, where will be recounted the trials and struggles, the alternating hopes and fears that culminated in eternal deliverance. This Love Feast came just at the right time. All along the line drooping, despondent hearts needed a word of good cheer. Yes, pass the word from lip to lip, till, like the Alpine shepherds awaking the echo from hill-top to valley, let the joyful news be heard from Maine to California, and from the Gulf back to the Great Lakes. Shout till the echo rends the sky "our King is coming," and let us all be ready. The darkening shadows of the last gloom are spreading rapidly over all the earth. The "distress and perplexity" that was to precede his coming are being rapidly developed. All eyes are turned to the East, and intently watching the rising storm that is to convulse the political powers of Europe. The fearful scene may burst forth in all its sublime fury at any moment. God's purposes are ripening fast, and in view of all these things "what manner of person ought we to be?" Can there be but one answer to this momentous question? Human enterprises may fail, business schemes may perish, but let the Lord's work be done, and that quickly too. Let this year be consecrated to the Master's service. The highways and hedges must be visited. Who will carry the invitation to the feast? A few vacant places are yet to be filled. Let us all bear the message, and constrain them to come.

J. F. Wagoner.

Editor Restitution:

My dear brethren, I am sorry to let you know that I am so reduced in health. I have been walking on a wooden leg for 11 years, but now my leg and hip are in such a condition I can hardly walk on it. I cannot earn any money to spare for the paper as it takes all we can get to live on. I will have to ask you to stop sending me the dear Restitution. I am so sorry, as it is our only preacher. I think it will not be long until my Lord will come and call for those who love him, to meet him in the clouds.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may so live as to meet you all in the kingdom of our dear Lord, Jesus Christ. Good bye, my brothers and sisters.

[Who will have the pleasure of sending the paper to this brother. It will be very pleasing to hear the Savior say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Who will hear this?—Ed.]

Dear Brethren:

I have never written to The Restitution before. Seeing so many have written I thought I had better write a letter too. I think The Restitution is a very good paper, and I enjoy reading it very much.

The New Year is here and may each of us resolve to read its pages more than we did in the year just past, and may we profit by it, for the things that are coming to pass show us that Christ's coming is near. In Luke xxi., Christ speaks of the things that shall come upon the earth. He says, "Behold the fig tree and all the trees. When they now shoot forth ye know that summer is near. So, likewise, ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the Kingdom of God is at hand." He also says, "Lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh." May we draw near to the Lord and he will draw near to us.

Hannah M. Barber.

Dear Restitution:

If you will allow me space I will tell the readers something of myself, of my faith and hope.

I am living about 30 miles north of Spokane, Wash. I and my wife are the only readers of, and believers in The Restitution, in this part of the country. We are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith of the restitution of all things. We daily read the paper and the Bible and compare them together, and with the times we are living in, and we find a beautiful harmony in them. We have learned more of the truth of the Scriptures in the last two years than ever before. I tell you the Old Book has become new, and the more I read the more I want to, and enjoy it.

Yours in search of the truth.

Dear Restitution:

I thought while I was renewing my subscription, I would just say to the brethren, that since coming to California, we are isolated from those of like precious faith, but I have not neglected to speak a word for the Master at every opportunity. I got one subscriber to The Restitution, who has embraced the truth. I wish and request the preaching brethren to come and preach for us awhile at least.

I became obedient to the truth about twelve years ago through the teaching of Bro. T. E. Adams of Kansas, and was baptized by him. How plain and easy to be understood is God's revealed will, since we received the truth. Enclosed please find $3.00 for The Restitution.

Your brother, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

Chris. Arnold.

Dear Restitution:

I see that my time has run out, but I still want the paper but have not the money, as our crops dried up and we did not raise enough to feed the stock and ourselves. I would be pleased if you would still send it as it is all the preaching we have that is worth hearing. I do not want to beg, but if you can send it I will send the money some time in '94. I would not give The Restitution for all the other papers in the world.

Your brother in hope of eternal life.

[We hope and trust that the friends are not through with their donations for sending the paper to the unfortunate. Some have done nobly in this line, and we thank you for it. Still there is need for more.—Ed.]

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have been feasting on the letters written through The Restitution.

How cheering to read the testimonies of those of like faith. It is well known to those of our church people with whom I have labored, that the most enjoyable service to me is that of a social service. One in which all may participate, and tell of the precious things of God. Hence the blessing imparted by the reading of the letters.

We are here in Florida, isolated from believers of the truth, and as we read we almost imagine ourselves at home, listening to some cheering words from Grandma Taylor, Bro. Roberts, or Whited. Some others we know would willingly speak if we were all together in a public service.

A Brother Miller from Kansas has spoken of Old Antioch, and the missing faces. We could add to the dead roll until the picture would be dark and appalling, and our hearts be broken with grief, for we remember open graves over which we have stood. As we think upon these things, we thank God that there are variations in the life of a minister, as well as other servants of the Most High, and our experience is much like that given by our Brother Miller, whom we have never seen, but we expect to see.

When we think of Plymouth, North Union, Argos, and Antioch, there comes with the names sweet remembrances and the blessing of God in meetings held there.

We remember well the time when it broke our hearts to bid adieu to friends and say a last farewell, and as we look forward with the bright anticipation of a Christian's hope, amidst the dark things of earth, a flood of light and joy comes into our very hearts. We read in that Blessed volume "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Psl. xxvi. 6.

The last six weeks have been the darkest days of our life. All through our life, from our earlier boyhood day has been characterized with hardships and disappointment, as we have related some of the incidents of our life it has brought tears to the eyes of the listener. But, amidst these things we love the Lord, and his Holy Book, and when affliction comes like a storm, God has prepared a place of refuge, and to that place we go.

We are so thankful our little children are almost well, and we are encouraged, and will soon be at work in the vineyard, the Lord willing. Pray for us that much good may result from our efforts.

We thank our friends for the letters of condolence in our affliction.

We are yours, working for the Master.

Bro. Underwood:

I can find no word that will express my appreciation of our paper as well as the word good. May it still live in its good work.

Our faith in the coming King is still strong, and we think his coming is near, even at the door.

Father and Mother Appleyard are still with us. They are in their 70th and 83rd years. Their faith in the promises increases with years, and their hearts desire is that their Redeemer may come before the enemy claims them.

When surrounded by the cares and miseries of this world, and at times almost drowned by them, we can but think that, if all the reward we are to receive, is received in this life as we pass to the grave, it is scarcely worth the living. But, there is a brighter and better world for the faithful. Our great anxiety is, shall we be there? Will you? Will those dear friends so dear to me in this life be there?

Let us be true to our Lord, and he will be true to us.

Wishing The Restitution and all its dear contributors a Happy New Year, I will trust in the Lord for a happy 1894.

May F. Appleyard.

Editor Restitution:

At this late day I write a few lines to those scattered abroad, who, like myself love to hear from the brethren. I see letters from several that I am well acquainted with, as I have been a reader of The Restitution for 35 or 36 years, or, eversince Elder Marsh was publisher, with the exception of 2 or 3 years, and find that it grows better as it grows older.

I think the times indicate the Gentile age about to end. I have been a believer of this doctrine for 37 years. Am well acquainted with B. Wilson, H. V. Reed, Geo. Moyer, and W. H. Wilson.

I will close for this time, and if this does not find its way to the waste basket I may say more in the future.

Wishing you a Happy New Year with all the rest of the brethren, I remain your brother.

Editor Restitution:

Dear brother: this is Dec. 30, and I have just finished reading the Love Feast, and indeed it has been one to me, and I hasten to write a few lines for a future number, as the Editor says this number will not publish them all. I did not receive the paper of the first week of this month, and it is the only number of the whole year that I did not get, and not knowing of this great Love Feast, I will send my mite now.

I am delighted with the harmonious teachings of them all. I never read so many from all over these United States, and yet, what a oneness of faith. First, the Kingdom of God on earth, second, the second coming of our Lord, third, the resurrection of the dead, fourth, the reign of Christ, and the Saints over the nations of the earth to restore and bless.

It is a blessed privilege to me to read them over, and what comfort, encouragement, and consolation to strengthen us in the cause of truth as we struggle on our way.

There is one thing that I have failed to do, which we might all do, and that is to make a feast, and invite the poor, the lame, the blind, and the maimed, that they cannot recompense us again, that we may be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Let us aim to do deeds that will reach forward to the glorious future. Mortify the deeds of the body that we may live when Jesus comes to reign.

My father died two weeks ago, being over 80 years old. We were not able to be there, hence were not permitted to see him laid away, but hope to meet him in the Kingdom of God where death and parting will be no more. Through ignorance we were prevented from joining the Christmas Love Feast, but desire to join in the New Year Feast.

Yours, for the Redeemer's sake.

J. A. Moyer.

Dear Restitution:

Find enclosed $1.50 for the renewal of The Restitution, as we cannot do without it. We get our preaching through its columns. At the present time, my wife and I are alone. We have no meetings of the one faith, but are doing the best we can under the circumstances. We still contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints by trying to keep the commandments which are written in the Bible. By so doing we hope for eternal life when the Kingdom of God comes.

Dear Brethren of The Restitution:

Enclosed you will find $2.00: $1.50 to be applied on my subscription for 1894; the 50 cents to any one's subscription not able to pay.

About fifty years I have taken this paper under various names, since it was first started by Elder Joseph Marsh, at Rochester, N. Y., as the "Voice of Truth." I like it yet, so book me for a life subscriber.

Yours looking for that blessed hope when the Master comes.

Dear Restitution:

As Brother Dwiggins has suggested, and although I feel inadequate to the task, I will write.

When Bro. Dwiggins shows the love of Christ, how can one refuse to cast in their mite. He does not ask for those most competent to write, but all from the least to the greatest. Such love has caused me to feel a union, a oneness that I never felt before. This is the best Christmas I ever saw.

My prayer is that we are near the time of a grand reunion of all the faithful.

Your sister, in Christ Jesus.

Mary F. Cook.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find $3.00 which you may use for the good of the cause. I do not want to be without the paper as it is all the preaching we have of our choice. How I would like to strike glad hands with all of like precious faith. How the letters of greeting did cheer me in the lonely hours. That paper was a Love Feast indeed. I am afraid I do not let my light shine as I should, but I am determined by his grace not to lose sight of the beautiful city.

The present writing has brought us to a review of our past life in the view of God's Word, and of the soon coming King. How much I have neglected prayer and self examination, and how I have failed in the cross bearing enjoined upon the followers of Jesus, but I am made to rejoice when I think of the redemption in Christ Jesus.

The letters from brothers and sisters help to lighten our labor in the Master's vineyard, and helps us to be better soldiers in the warfare. Let us pray for each other that our trust and confidence in redeeming grace fail not.

I want to be ready and waiting for the glorious appearing of our King.

Mrs. S. F. Anderson.

Dear Restitution:

We are very thankful that we have been enjoying your visits for another year, and we desire them to be continued. We have been very much interested in articles by Bro. Joblin on the "Seed of the Woman." We love the simplicity there is in the Word of Jesus, and also the articles of Bro. Wm. Wilson on "The Immortal Book," and other writers who are too numerous to mention here. I thank God for his precious truth. The Lord seems to have blessed us more than we can mention, even during these hard times. The dear friends in our little church have been very kind to us. We hope that the paper will be just as precious in the coming years, and we hope that they will take advantage of the suggestion of Bro. Dwiggins. Yours in the blessed hope

Martin T. Aslaksen.

Dear Household of Faith:

Which are the heirs that are promised that glorious kingdom from the foundation of the world. Why? Because we are dead to the world, but alive to Christ. Another good proof—I know a good many of the brethren and their works, and to read their letters of testimony and conclusions on the precious Word of God, and to see those great facts reasoned and brought to one center, is very satisfactory to a Bible reader. Brethren, we talk about being isolated, I believe I understand the full meaning of that word (wish I knew the explanation of all others as well), it has been our lot (wife and I) to be alone wherever we have been located for the past fifteen years (to the world I mean); but we have full access to the best company in this world, not being present in the body, but in word and spirit, and we believe fully he is able and will perform all he has promised. My experience in being alone in the faith, to a true disciple of Christ, after having understood the organization of the human family and seen the true light of the Gospel of the kingdom, and obeyed, then we are ready for the fight. It is well to my mind, it don't strain one's system very much to keep clear of the creeds, traditions, doctrines and commandments of men, it is all of the world and condemned by the Word of God. It is lonesome when we cast our eye from the prophetic Word a moment, and look at the congregations and pride and strife, each one trying to outstrip the others in numbers, and to command the fine churches and salaries. I want to say, it is very discouraging in one sense of the word, to hear that some of the brethren have left our ranks and united with the fashions of the world. I don't want to be harsh, but I do not see in the light of knowledge, how any one can leave the true faith, and go to the churches of the world. Our Savior says there will be some that will fall away from the faith, and return to the beggarly elements of the world, but their last position is worse than the first, so if they did not belong to the church at first, how could they now? Nay, there is a greater barrier for me to overcome, it is this, will I have all my earthly arrangements in shape, and will I have formed a character in harmony with the great plan of salvation, that will give me an abundant entrance into that glorious City, which is the new Jerusalem that shall come down from God out of heaven.

How I would love to meet with those of our faith, this is one of the trials for me to endure. I cannot hear the Word preached by some of our good speakers. I hope it will not be this way a great while. Brother Underwood, I am aware my letter is a little lengthy on this occasion, but when you get one of these still ones started they never know when to quit, if you will hear me a few moments longer I will be obliged.

I must tell you all about my start in the narrow path. It has been twenty years this coming spring since I was baptized into the all saving-name, and I shall never forget the sowers that cast the seed before my poor wayfaring mind. What per cent. the fold I will be, I cannot tell—God knows. The sowers will reap their reward all the same. I shall be proud to mention their names in connection with our faith—Bro. J. M. Stephenson and Geo. Moyer. God bless you, is my humble prayer. While one has sheathed his sword for the present and is sleeping, the other is still on deck executing the great commands of his Captain. I doubt if you have an idea of the great good you did do at that time. You two visited our parent's home at Salem and old Bunkerhill, in Mahoning Co., Ohio, the place of my boyhood, and heralded forth the glorious gospel in the face of an almost resistless foe; but right there and then, you planted a rock of safety in that sweeping current of destruction, that whosoever would build on it should be saved, and it stands there today, with quite a number of foundation builders, and all safe, and not one dissatisfied. But oh, what changes since that time. I haven't the time to enter into this sad theme. I will close by asking an interest in the prayers of all of God's people. What honor and glory it will be to have our names called to perform any command in executing the great plan in the future age. Brother, if this letter is too long and tedious, lay it by for something more profitable. Yours, looking for the close of Gentile times, and a permanent kingdom under King Jesus.

Jno. C. Venable.

Ohio.

Dear ones of like precious Faith, greeting:

I will send my testimony. I am trying to serve my Master. I feel sometimes that my light is far too dim, but my trust is in Christ, my only hope of eternal life. Pray for unworthy me that I may grow strong in his service, and be kept faithful unto his coming, that I may have an abundant entrance into his kingdom.

Veronica A. Straight.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Address of Treasurer of Ladies Evangelical Aid Society, Miss Emma Jackman, Box 884, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Sow seed. Send The Restitution to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

S. G. Oliver, Pres.
E. F. Randolph, Sec'y.

The Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for January presents in its first pages a character study of Prof. John Tyndall in which Dr. Beall explains many points of great value to students of phrenology. The veteran phrenologist, Dr. J. L. Capen, contributes some very original and surprising views on the organ of weight which will excite interest if not controversy. Prof. Sizer continues his elaborate series, How to Study Strangers, and in this number discusses Quality, with many illustrations. His phrenological delineation of the celebrated reformer, Lucy Stone, is especially sympathetic and closely analytical. It will be read with profit and pleasure. Mrs. Charlotte F. Wells gives an account of George Combe's remarkable experiments with the daughter of Prof. J. J. Mapes, which deserves very particular mention, as it contains certain proofs of phrenological principles which will satisfy the most incredulous and exacting investigators. The editorial features are unusually strong, and a published letter from the eminent scholar, Joseph Cook, on the value of phrenology, will command wide attention. The other departments are replete with good things. Price, 15 cts; $1.50 a year. Address Fowler & Wells Co., 25 East 21st Street, New York.

The Preacher's Magazine for January is the first number of the fourth volume of this most excellent Homiletical Periodical. The leading sermon is entitled "Christian Brotherhood," and is by the Venerable William M. Sinclair, Archdeacon of London. The senior editor, Mark Guy Pearse, contributes another chapter on "Moses: His life and its Lessons," taking up "The Story of the Golden Calf." Joseph Parker, D. D., writes on "How to Read the Scriptures" and Dr. C. O. Eldridge, "The Key of Experience" or "Pages for Young Preachers." Outlines and sketches of sermons on various subjects are furnished by many distinguished clergymen and among them we notice a children's sermon with the subject "Room," by the Rev. J. Reid Howatt. There are also excellent articles, by James Stalker, D. D., on "A Young Man's Religion," and "Money," by the Rev. Andrew Murray. Among the other departments are "Notes and Illustrations," the "International Sunday School Lessons," "Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts," and "About Books." The magazine is published monthly, at $1.50 per year, Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York City.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Answer to Reviewer's No. 4.

Reviewer seems to conclude that the oneness of the Son with the Father consists not of "a oneness of divinity and nature," but means only that "Jesus spake the words of the Father, and the Father did the works by Jesus."

But would the Jews have tried to stone him for claiming such a oneness as that? Did not all their prophets claim the same? Stoning was the punishment for blasphemy, which the Jews falsely charged him with on this occasion. Levit. xxiv. 16; Jno. x. 30-33. When they heard him in the temple call God his Father, and claim similar power to protect his sheep and give them eternal life; and affirm in addition to this, "I and the Father are ONE;" their reply shows that they understood him to claim not power and inspiration only, but Godhead or divinity also, for they said, "Thou, being a man makest thyself God;" and they tried to stone him, as they had tried before and on the same charge. Jno. viii. 58, 59; v. 17, 18.

If after the Savior's words, "I and the Father are One," the question be asked, "One what?" Dr. John Thomas answers, "One Jehovah."—Eureka, Vol. i, page 102. It would be ungrammatical to answer, "One words and works." The term to be understood after "one" must be of the neuter gender and singular number, in order to agree in gender and number with the term for "one," according to the rules of the Greek grammar. The term Theion, translated "Godhead" in Common Version, and "Deity" in Diaglott (Act xvii. 29), seems to fill all the requirements of the context, for the oneness of power mentioned there is based on oneness of nature. In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead, and all things that the Father hath are the Son's also. Col. ii. 9; Jno. xvi. 15. Does reviewer believe this? If he had paused to "think" a little, perhaps he might have found out all this without perplexing himself with so many needless questions. Now will he please refer to what I have said about the meaning of Godhead. Don't get thrown off the track by the arithmetic which says that "One plus one equals two every time,' for then how can you ever understand the heavenly mathematics which says that Christ will "make in himself of twain one new man," and that baptized believers "all are one man in Christ Jesus." Ephes. ii. 15; Galat. iii. 28. R. V. Has not reviewer heard of "E pluribus unum" which means "One composed of many?"

"The record that God hath given of his Son" goes back in Mark to the ministry of John and the prophets, in Matthew to his descent from Abraham, in Luke to his descent from Adam, and in John to his being in the beginning with God as the Word that was God. We must accept the whole record. 1 Jno. v. 10.

Reviewer says the "same oneness" of all believers with the Son and the Father "is prayed for, not in the glorified state, but in mortality, that the world may witness it and be influenced to believe God hath sent Jesus." Does reviewer then believe, like Post-millennarians, that the world will be converted while the saints are "in mortality," that is, before the advent and resurrection!!

The oneness of the disciples in the Father and Son was not the same as that of the Son with the Father an accomplished fact at the time of the prayer, as the difference in the tenses clearly shows. The prayer was "That they may be one, even as we are one." The oneness prayed for is consubstantial, and realized when the saints are "made perfect in one" divine nature and "glorified together" with Christ at the resurrection. Jno. xvii. 22, 23; 2 Pet. i. 4; Rom. viii. 17; Phil. iii. 21. By such a "manifestation of the sons of God" with Christ their glorious Head, judgments will be executed on the wicked, and "the world" caused to "believe," and be blessed for a thousand years; for "when the Lord's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Psa. cxlix. 5-9; Isa. xxvi. 9, 10.

After quoting several occurrences of logos as a common noun, reviewer concludes, "There is no personality in logos: and if it be twice used of a person," etc. I don't know what he means by this, for after making a positive assertion he seems immediately to express a doubt of it. My last answer showed clearly enough the use of logos as a personal or proper name. The names of things and even adjectives used as personal and proper names abound in the Bible and out of it. For example, among such titles applied to Christ are alpha, amen, anointed, branch, bread, corner-stone, day, life, light, lion, omega, resurrection, star, sceptre, truth, vine, way. Applied to patriarchs in the sacred genealogy are red (Adam), rest (Noah), laughter (Isaac), praise (Judah), strength (Boaz), beloved (David), gift (Nathan), etc. And above all in illustration of this point we are told that "God is light," and "God is love." 1 Jno. i. 5; iv. 16. Does reviewer see "no personality" in these names?

Does not reviewer know that Gibbon was "a kind of general infidel?" Why then does he quote such a writer, after objecting so bitterly to my quoting Adam Clarke?

I have no apology to make for those who do not believe that "Jesus Christ came in the flesh." The record that God hath given of his Son embraces that as well as Jno. i. 1-3, 20; viii. 58; x. 30, etc. And another portion of that record says, "Not that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, HE hath seen the Father." Jno. vi. 46; i. 18. How is it possible to harmonize the first clause of this verse with the last unless we remember that, as Dr. John Thomas expresses it, "Jesus Christ in the days of his weakness, had two sides—the one, Deity; the other, Man." It was by virtue of his Deity or Godhead that the Son had seen the Father whom "no man hath seen at any time." Divine actions and attributes are affirmed of his divine nature, and human actions and attributes affirmed of his human nature; as already explained.

Reviewer accuses me of "keeping back part of the truth," because in quoting from Heb. i. 8, I did not quote the whole of verse 9, which he calls "the explanatory clause." He then quotes verse 9 and stops to say, "For our part we do not see any pre-existence in this passage." But if he was sincerely looking for pre-existence, why did he stop so soon and break off the quotation so abruptly, and why did he not quote the very next verse which is full of pre-existence, and reads thus, "And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands."

Also when quoting "My glory I will not give to another," why did you not, brother, kindly quote the connected truth, which says, "I am the first, I also am the last;" which shows the Son is not reckoned as "another" in nature but as ONE with the Father, for he also says, "I am the first and the last," and that he will "come in the glory of the Father." Isa. xlviii. 11, 12; Rev. i. 17; xxii. 13; Matt. xxv. 31.

Concerning the oneness of the Son with the Father reviewer makes what seems to me an unscriptural assertion that, "There is no divinity or divine nature in that oneness." If two coins—one all gold, the other partly gold—are united into one coin, can it be truthfully said, "There is no gold in that unity or oneness?" The Father is supremely Divine, and therefore of logical necessity there must be "divinity" in a union or oneness which includes HIM.

Reviewer again accuses me of being "unjust and cruel to the unlearned." To prove this he says, "In Isa. xlv. 21, the eternal God asserts his unity by saying, 'There is no God beside me; I am God, there is none else.'" But in my Bible it reads, "There is no God else beside me; a just God and a Savior; there is none beside me." Let every reader turn to his Bible and see which quotation is right, for leaving out the "Savior" makes a vast difference in the argument. The word here translated "beside me" is mibbaladai, the same that is so translated in Isa. xliii. 11, "Beside me there is no Savior." The word biladai, of the same meaning, is translated "not in me," in Gen. xli. 16. "Beside me" or "without me" would give a good sense to the rightly informed; but "not in me" would be still more suitable in Isa. xliii. and xlv.; for to understand the Father as saying, "There is no God and no Savior not in me" would beautifully harmonize with the Godhead of Christ who expressly said, "I am in the Father," and commanded us to believe the same. Jno. xiv. 11. If "Beside me there is no God" were proof that Christ is not God, would not "Beside me there is no Savior" prove also that Christ is no Savior? which would contradict all the New Testament. See Acts iv. 12. So, according to sound criticism, the text that reviewer fled to for help has utterly demolished his theory, just as the lexicons did when correctly quoted. Isa. xlv. 21 is death to [illegible].

What sort of a translation would that be which would undertake to crowd into one verse all the various meanings (sometimes 10 or 20) of every word in the verse? The intelligent translator therefore tries to select for each word that shade of meaning which best agrees with the text, the context, and the general teaching of Scripture.

Reviewer says, "Jesus certainly excludes himself from the Godhead, by making separate mention of himself by name and official capacity, as well as by supplication to the Father." This shows that my reviewer has not yet learned the difference between person and nature, and needs to read again what I have said on that subject. When Adam and Eve were the only two persons in the human nature, did Eve exclude herself from it by calling herself Eve, and sometimes asking help of Adam?

Reviewer also makes the assertion that "a resort to Hebrew lexicons is disbelief of God." Does reviewer mean to accuse Peter and Paul of "disbelief of God" for thinking!!! And does he accuse Paul of inculcating such disbelief by commanding us to "think!!!" 2 Pet. i. 13; 1 Cor. iv. 9; viii. 10; 2 Cor. ix. 5; Phil. iv. 8.

In the same illogical strain reviewer seems to regard as "an awful precipice" the oneness of the Son with the Father, as affirmed by me, as though it might, perhaps, "involve the Father in the death of the cross." Here is reviewer's old error of confounding person and nature. Was Abel's death the death of Adam also, simply because they both had the same nature?

Reviewer says, "We are expected to believe that because Jesus was called God, he must have pre-existed: we see no logical connection." But when we find in a single verse that the same Being who is called God was also "in the beginning with God," we have the strongest kind of "connection" established between his Godhead and his pre-existence. Jno. i. 1.

When saying, "We have seen that Jehovah excludes all and every one from the Godhead," reviewer seems to forget that in RESTITUTION No. 43 he said, "The Scriptures plainly teach that there can be [illegible] of personalities possessing divine nature."

What is Godhead but divine nature? See the dictionaries. Has not my reviewer, therefore, unintentionally contradicted himself? And if Christ be excluded from the divine nature, on what grounds could we worship him? We should, in that case, have to tear out of our Psalmody all prayerful hymns to Christ; and, worse than all, to discredit all those prayerful addresses to him that abound in the Bible.

The answer to "How could Christ die?" was given several months ago in the fourth article, at the proper place in a systematic treatise. Written kindly in defense of the faith.

WILEY JONES.

ANSWER TO REVIEWER'S NO. 5.

Reviewer, after taking a look at one of my fortresses (Phil. ii. 6), turns off and makes a two-column attack on Trinitarianism, of which I am no defender. Then, in the midst of his fight against the errors of Trinitarians, he seems suddenly to remember that he is not touching my position,—not even "reviewing" it. So he stops by telling us that his "No. 5" "is intended to prepare the way for an examination of Phil. ii. 6." Until his long-deferred "examination" of that invulnerable fortress, it seems needless for me to make any further reply.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Poetry.

Some of These Days.

Some of these days all the sky will be brighter—
Some of these days all the burdens be lighter;
Hearts will be happier—souls will be whiter—
Some of these days!

Some of these days, in the deserts upspringing,
Fountains shall flash, while the joy-bells are ringing,
And the world—with its sweetest of birds shall go singing—
Some of these days!

Some of these days! Let us bear with our sorrow.
Faith in the future—its light we may borrow;
There will be joy in the golden tomorrow—
Some of these days!

—Frank L. Stanton.

Practical Suggestions.

"I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and thou art dead." Rev. iii. 1.

In the November Number of Faith, (organ of the British C. I. M.) Dr. Edward Foster, a well known writer, complains of the stagnation and want of energy amongst those of our faith. He asks:—

"What is it that palsies our association life and hinders the spreading of our testimony?—Deadness certainly.—Multitudes are hungering and thirsting for the Word. There are hosts of enemies to be combatted, and few warroirs in the field. The warriors are there wanting to be up and doing, hungering for work, real right down Evangelistic work that God requires at our hands, but the sinews of war are lacking." He adds, "Indeed it may come to pass that many of us, sad and sorrowful at the lack of loyalty and high sense of responsibility may drop away from an association that cannot rise to a sense of its privileges.—You dear brother (Editor Faith) publish monthly a goodly list of evangelists, but how many of them are solicited by the "churches" or well-to-do friends to visit them for a week or two and proclaim in the open spaces in the streets and villages around, in cottages and schools the Unspeakable Gift of God?—'Tis only by open air preaching and colportage that we can get to the people."

Another writer in Faith in continuance of the subject, publishes an article and furnishes a table showing a most painful decrease in the "Mission Branch" of the C. I. Society for the last seven years and adds that unless there is some radical change there can be but one ending.

Another writer states that "open air work alone will avail to reach Christians with our glorious teaching."

The same dry rot that effects our brethren in Great Britain affects us. The question, "Why is it we make so little progress?" may be heard on all sides, and the writer who has the cause earnestly at heart and has given the matter much earnest thought desires to suggest some of the most prominent and probable hindrances at work.

1. Lack of evangelists and preachers.
2. Lack of Church buildings.
3. Apathy, lukewarmness, and lack of zeal.
4. Lack of open air preaching and tent work.
5. Lack of self sacrifice.
6. Lack of money—Idolatry.
7. Lack of organization.

The writer on first acquaintance with our people was greatly struck with the high average ability, profound knowledge of the Scripture and evident research and deep thought on all Scripture points of interest displayed by our preachers and writers, in common with those he would add, of the Adventists. Secondly by their paucity in numbers and inadequate support. Thirdly by their lack of appreciation by a large proportion of their adherents.

Think of one of our foremost states with about one thousand adult members of the faith, not keeping more than one evangelist in the field and he not continually employed except for one month during the tenting season.

Think of the same state (and there are others no better) not raising funds amounting to 50 cents per head.

Think of how many must actually contribute absolutely nothing as the bulk of the amount is in reality contributed by a mere handful.

We have men with talent enough to make their mark in any of the Orthodox Churches, who have refused handsome offers, and sacrificed pay and position for the love of Christ and his blessed truth, and who too often do not seem to be understood or appreciated. No wonder we lose them, that finally they are disheartened and starved out of our ranks, unless they have private means of support and can afford to preach for nothing to those often better off than themselves.

As our competent preachers die off, retire to the poor house or lunatic asylum (as some have) drag out a wretched existence with health ruined in the service of God and disease aggravated by poverty, or secede disgusted to preach on their own account to the outside world. How are we to replace them? It is the urgent and burning question with all our thinking folks who love the cause.

We need a fund to educate preachers and fit them for the work. But, even if we educate a few, how are we to secure their services in the future?

Young men or women, so destitute of means as to require a bestowed education, cannot be expected to preach for nothing and board themselves. The assumption is unpractical, not to say unchristian.

If they earn their own living when wanted for evangelical duties how are they to leave? Business men won't employ hands whose service can not be depended upon.

Their idea of combining the service of God and Mammon is of Satan and will not work. If it did why can not some of our well informed business brethren give half or a third of their time to evangelistic work?

Ask them and they will tell you their family and business affairs need all their time and attention, and most of them cannot even have leisure to attend conference.

But, in the case of the missionary, preacher, or evangelist, the case is different. They are idle or covetous or should be able to support themselves and preach to their more wealthy brethren. Is this true? Who dares to deny it?

Another reason we lose our preachers is because they cannot get regular work. Most of them hunger for constant employment in the Master's work, but few seem to want them and that seldom, and so they hunt their desire elsewhere.

Again in many places where there is a church organization there is a local preacher who has a buisness and preaches semi-occasionly or on the Lord's day, either for nothing or occasionally receiving a few dollars in a burst of generosity.

This is bad for both preacher and organization, especially for the latter. The preacher is often an able man, but he has his family to support and can spare no time for organization or strengthening the spiritual longings of his brethren, or building up the church. These things are neglected therefore, and the members disappear or fossilize and settle down into an indurated or comatose condition. Do you doubt it? Look around anywhere.

Whilst doing this, the local preacher of course excludes a regular minister who would give all his time to these things, for the people love their money and will not hire a minister, if they can get anything in the way of preaching for nothing, and experience shows that they seldom realize the necessity for any thing but preaching, which is after all but one of many branches of the minister's work.

Lack of churches.

The bulk of our preaching is done in secluded School-houses, too obscure to attract the notice of the general public, or too inconvenient to get at.

We need to attract the attention of the outer world, people who are unacquainted with us or our views. To do this we must push ourselves into prominent notice.

We may sneer at the rowdy methods of the Salvationists, but they are wiser than we are by long odds, and all the live organizations are adopting the main idea that brought them success—public preaching and extraordinary methods to attract notice.

Meeting in holes and corners will never reach the public. On the other hand expensive buildings should be avoided. No matter how rough the building if there is room, the site conspicuous and the people know there will be preaching on practical subjects of vital interest, founded on the immutable Word of God, they will come. If you doubt ask our evangelists. The people want God and the consolation of religion. They avoid fashionable and eminently respectable places, where they are not wanted and the religion is of the kind that would chill an ice-berg, and the hearers are gospel hardened sinners of the hopeless class.

Some say, if we dont have nice church members and nice buildings, the nice people wont come. Well, let them stay away. If they wont come, then that class will that the nice people scare away.

"When they all with one consent began to make excuse," what did the Master of the feast do? Luke xiv. 17-24. Did he urge and entreat, and flatter them. Well, hardly. Let us follow his example and then we shall know that we have the Master at our backs, and are not on the wrong path.

Unfortunately we do different. We wish to copy the example of the worldly, who get into debt for expensive edifices, and use improper means to draw a crowd, and raise funds, and suggest that their ministers preach nothing that can offend the most fastidious heathen.

It is mortifying to see some of our able preachers (who if known could hold the attention of hundreds) addressing a handful for lack of proper convenience. Given a building large enough, in a good position, and we have men who can keep it filled and draw the kind of audiences required, i. e. intelligent thinking men and women seeking light and truth.

Let it be borne in mind, what one of the Faith writers asserted, that "no Church Organization can continue to exist any great while without regular preaching." Apathy, lukewarmness and lack of zeal, lack of self sacrifice and idolatry.

More than preachers, buildings, or money, is required, viz., zeal in our adherents.

How many of these take any active public part or show any great amount of public sympathy in the work, outside of a very few? Hardly any so far as known.

How many subscribe to, or otherwise aid, comfort, and support the papers upholding our views? How many endeavor to get new subscribers or subscribe to send a copy to an unbelieving friend, or some indigent person? Yet all this is strictly a part of the Lord's work. It is an absolutely Christian duty to keep these publications on a healthy basis.

No organization such as ours can exist without an organ, and yet the writer knows at least one body of thirty or forty members where not one "Restitution" was taken last spring, and perhaps not yet.

How many of our members sacrifice their own interests to attend conference?

How many are willing to have the tent meeting in their vicinity at a busy time? How many want it in the slack of winter or spring when a little excitement is quite a Godsend to break the monotony of country life?

How many of our people give a tenth to the Lord? Enough to show that the plan is practicable and possible, and if for some why not for all?

If our Lord condemned the blind Pharisees who gave a tithe of all they possessed, and fasted, (in other words exercised great personal sacrifice and self denial) twice or thrice a week, what will he say to those who having light, draw nigh unto the alter, and thank God they are not as these sinners, and yet do nothing but honor him with their lips, while their hearts are far from him?

If we through the love of money which is covetousness, which is idolatry, (Eph. v. 5) suffer our preachers, evangelists, and religious organs to perish for lack of support how can the love of God abide in us? "No covetous man, which is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and God." Eph. v.

Our preachers and writers usually or often at least shrink from introducing these subjects as much as required. They are often sensitive men of high purpose and naturally dread the coarse and vulgar retort too often made, either openly or behind their backs, that they are self-seeking.

This accusation is senseless, because self-seeking men avoid all such delicate topics, caring nothing for their hearers welfare and knowing their money is invariably most easily extorted by coarse flattery and delusive doctrines.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, when you surrendered to Christ, you promised to give up all for him to take up your cross daily and follow him, to lay all at his feet.

Have you done this? or have you sinned against the Holy Spirit, for which there is no forgiveness, neither in this world or in that to come? probably because "if they believed not Moses and the Prophets" and Christ, neither would they believe even should they rise from the dead?

What was the sin of Annanias? He had lied, not unto men, but unto God. Have you done the same? Have you also kept back a part of the price? Let each one answer this question in the privacy of his own apartment, on his knees in the presence of God.

Pray our Heavenly Father that he may send his Spirit and remove your stony heart of covetousness and apathy, and give you a living, loving heart of flesh, or it will be better for those of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment than for you.

"Unto whom much is given, from them is much required." You will not be judged by what other self-styled Christians do, or think, for every man shall give an account for himself.

Lack of open air preaching.

We need continuous open air preaching, tent work, lecturing, and preaching in the larger towns. Our ideas especially appeal to the intelligent and thinking classes and to those who are Christians, as well as to the world's people.

The bulk of the thinking classes, are in the towns and cities and in the greatest collective numbers, there we must work or fail in our duty. We have competent men, only funds are lacking.

Lack of organization.

Lastly, we need organization. This does not necessarily mean adopting certain dogmas and rules, but it does mean that we must fail at last or adopt some organized method of confronting the foe. Our brothers and sisters of the same language realize this at last, but they, as we, have to contend with the objections of those who cannot keep up with the necessities of the hour,—good people but unprogressive and behind the times.

Let us watch therefore, lest when the Master returneth he findeth us sleeping.

"Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 15.

H. T. Baker.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 18.

1. And he spake a parable unto them to the effect that they ought always to be offering votive-prayers, and not to be cowardly therein.

2. Saying, There was a certain judge in a certain city, who did not fear God and who did not regard man.

3. And there was a widow in that city, and she came unto him, saying, requite me of my opponent.

4. And he was not willing for a time; but after that he said to himself Even though I do not fear God and do not regard man,

5. Yet because this widow wearies me, I will requite her that she may not weary me out with her coming.

6. And the Lord said, Listen to what the judge of injustice saith.

7. And shall not God requite his elect ones who call to him for aid day and night, and be forbearing with them?

8. I say unto you he will requite them speedily. However will the Son of Man when he hath come indeed find the faith upon the earth?

9. And he spake unto some who trusted in themselves that they were justified and despised the rest, this parable:

10. Two men went up into the temple to offer votive-prayers; the one a Pharisee and the other a tax-gatherer.

11. The Pharisee stood and offered this votive-prayer to himself: O God I thank thee that I am not as the rest of mankind, rapacious, unjust, adulterous, nor even as this tax-gatherer.

12. I fast twice during the Sabbattic period, I tithe all that I possess.

13. The tax-gatherer though stood afar off and was not willing to lift his eyes toward the heavens; but smote his breast, saying, Be favorable to me the obdurate sinner.

14. I say unto you that he went down to his house justified rather than that one, because every one who exalteth himself will have been humbled, but the one who humbleth himself will have been exalted.

15. And they were bringing him also the new-born babes that he might touch them; and when the disciples saw it they rebuked them.

16. But Jesous invited them saying, Suffer the little children to come unto me and prevent them not, For of such-like is the kingdom of God.

17. Verily I say unto you, Whoever shall not accept the kingdom of God like a little child as it were, shall not have entered into it.

18. And a certain ruler inquired of him saying, Good teacher, Having done what shall I inherit eternal life?

19. And Jesous said unto him, why dost thou say I am good? No one is good except one, God.

20. Thou knowest the commandments? Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not murder; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not testify falsely; Honor thy father and thy mother?

21. And he said, all these I have watched to keep (Exoteric watch) from my youth.

22. And when Jesous heard it he said unto him, Still one thing thou lackest, Sell all that thou hast and distribute to beggars, and thou wilt have treasures in heaven; and come hither, follow me.

23. And when he heard this he became very sorrowful, For he was very rich.

24. And Jesous seeing that he had become very sorrowful said:

25. With how great difficulty do those who have the utilities go their way into the kingdom of God.

25. It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's-eye (the side-gate next to the wide gateway) than for a rich man to have entered into the kingdom of God.

26. And those who heard it said, who indeed can be saved?

27. And he said, The things impossible with men are possible with God.

28. And Petros said, Lo we have left our own things and followed thee.

29. And he said unto them, verily I say unto you, There is no one who hath left household or parents or brethren or a wife or children for the sake of the kingdom of God,

30. Who will not have received in return manyfold more in this period and in the age to come eternal life.

31. And taking the twelve aside he said unto them, Lo we are going up to Hierousalem, and all that hath been written through the prophets in respect to the Son of Man will have been accomplised.

32. For he will have been delivered up to the nations and he will have been mocked at and disdainfully treated and spit upon.

33. And after they have scourged him they will kill him, and on the third day he will arise.

34. And they understood nothing of these things, and this oracular word was hidden from them, and they did not comprehend the things said.

35. And it came to pass when he was drawing nigh to Hiericho (Hallowed-mounds) a certain blind man was sitting by the way-side soliciting.

36. And when he heard that a multitude of men were going their way along he inquired what this might be.

37. And they told him that Jesous the Nazarene was coming by.

38. And he called for aid saying, Jesous, Son of Daveid have mercy on me.

39. And those who were leading forward warned him to keep silent: but he cried out all the more, Son of Daveid have mercy on me.

40. And stopping he directed him to be led to him.

41. And when he had drawn nigh he asked him, what wilt thou have me to do? And he said, Lord, That I may see. (look up.)

42. And Jesous said unto him. See (lit "look up") Thy faith hath saved thee.

43. And straightway he saw ("looked up") and followed him glorifying God. And all the royal-people when they saw it gave praise to God.

COMMENT.

"A certain judge" instead of "a judge" R. V. When the Lord says "certain" we do not want to be uncertain about it.

No "oft" in the text.

"Requite me of my opponent" instead of "revenge me" R. V. Judges do not indulge in revenge or at least should not and this word is never used in this sense.

"And be forbearing with them" instead of "and he is, etc., over them" R. V.

"The faith" instead of "faith" R. V. Leaving out the article leaves out the gist of the whole statement. Of course there will be faith as between man and man if there are any people on the earth.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

"Justified" instead of "righteous" R. V. There are none and will be no righteous people on the earth until the perfected spiritual state of things has been reached, which will not be "during the time of the Gentiles." There must come a new age and a new order of things (or Kosmos.)

"Votive-prayer" all along here instead of "prayer" merely R. V.

"Who" instead of "which" R. V.

"Possess" or control instead of "get" R. V.

"Sabbattic-period" instead of "weeks" R. V.

"The obdurate sinner" instead of "a sinner" R. V.

"Favorable" instead of "merciful" R. V.

Why "justified" in the last case and not in the first? R. V. It is the same word in each case.

"The new-born babes" (βρέφη) instead of "babes" merely R. V. This word properly means an unborn babe; but is sometimes used of a new-born babe as here.

"Such-like" instead of "such" R. V. Makes all the difference there is between a comparison and an identification. He does not mean to say that heaven is made up of "infants" nor is it a fair inference which is frequently drawn that there are infants in heaven—that is this passage is quoted as proof of this inference. There is far better evidence than this of the power and purpose of God to save infants and irresponsible children.

"Like a little child as it were" instead of "as a little child" R. V. for the same reason.

"No wise" not in the text.

"Good Teacher" instead of "Good Master" R. V.

"Murder" instead of "kill" R. V. The law in all ages has made this distinction.

"Watched to keep" instead of "observed" R. V. The latter too indefinite to express the Scriptural idea of this word.

"With how great difficulty" instead of "how hardly" R. V. Not the same idea at all. The difficulty seems to be a divine one instead of a human one if we are to judge by the comparison used to illustrate it here. The camel represents the rich man and the owner and loader of the camel is God. It is not to be inferred that the camel is troubled about getting through the narrow gate-way called the needle's-eye, but his Master is, and he would prefer to get him through without unloading him and save time, but this is impossible in the natural conditions while in the spiritual conditions and "with God" it is possible. So the conclusion commonly drawn, that riches are a bad thing is all wrong. It is easy enough for God to unload us of our riches if he thinks best: but it is also possible for him to get us through the needle's-eye without unloading us, and that is the comforting assurance here.

"The utilities" instead of "riches" R. V. very suggestive in itself of the true philosophy in all this matter of worldly riches.

"Through the prophets" instead of "by the prophets" R. V. makes them agents or instrumentalities instead of the efficient cause, which makes all the difference in the world in the argument of God.

"Treated" instead of "entreated" R. V. Not the same thought, any one can see.

"Will arise" instead of "will arise again" R. V. No "again"

"Oracular word" instead of "saying" R. V. I repeat this because it will bear emphasizing in view of its importance.

"Comprehend" instead of "perceive" R. V.

"Soliciting" instead of "begging" R. V. The same distinction in the Greek that we make in the English.

"Hath saved" instead of "hath made thee whole" R. V. God's salvation is always organic. We never will be saved as "ghosts."

The Reviewer Reviewed.

No. 6.

According to promise we now turn our attention to Phil. ii. 6--not to prove Jesus did not pre-exist, because we proved by the revealed purpose of God, in ten articles that no pre-existent person could be the redeemer of mankind. God, in hundreds of passages has revealed that, and that truth stands whether we can take all the kinks out of ten or a dozen passages more or less tampered with by the apostacy, or no.

First. This epistle begins by speaking of God as One, not two, and the Lord Jesus Christ separately from God, see our No. 2, also verses 6-11.

2d. Being made of a woman, but begotten of God, it was the moral and mental traits of his Father which were stamped upon him. And being Son of God, a co-partner with Abraham, and heir to David's throne he was rich indeed--rich in his own right yet for our sakes he became poor, that we by his poverty might be made rich. (See 1 Cor. viii. 9.) He knew God was his Father and realized the dignity of being the Son of God; but who--knowing this, for the time being he waived all his claims, and said to his disciples that he was among them as one who served. And

3rd. This Scripture plainly says (verse 8) that he was found in fashion as a man when he humbled himself,--(not as a spirit Son) and became obedient unto death.

4th. Verse 9 proves that his exaltation and a name given him above every name was because of his humility and obedience,--not because of a right to it on account of a prior spirit existence.

5th. It was God who exalted Him (verse 9). How could one God exalt another who was equal to him? How could one God give another, who was equal to him, a name above every name?

6th. Verse [illegible] shows that it was the Jesus who was born of Mary, who had a body of flesh, who received the exaltation and name, not a pre-existent Son.

7th. Humility is the lesson of this passage, and we are exhorted to have the same mind as Jesus, who it is claimed thought it not robbery to be equal with God. Strange sort of humility that! It is pure assumption to say he was rich in glory in heaven and gave it up. Reviewer says the pre-existent Son of God did not die in one article, and in another quotes Phil. ii. 6 to prove that he who humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross pre-existed and was equal to the Father! The good work goes on; this discloses the true inwardness of pre-existence. The claim that he was equal with God contradicts John's quotation from Jesus, chap. v. 20, "The Father loveth the Son and showeth him all things;" and chap. xii. 49, "The Father who sent me, he gave me commandment what I should speak;" and chap. v. 43, "I am come in my Father's name;" and chap. xiv. 28, "My Father is [illegible] work. [illegible] Was it an act of humility for the pre-existent Son of God to divest himself of his own form, as claimed, in order to be made in the form of God--the form in which he was found? (verse 6).

9th. If the humility consisted in taking the likeness of men, should not the likeness of men be taken off when exalted?

10th. His humility did not consist in being made at all, but in humbling HIMSELF after being made of a woman.

11th. It is Jesus the anointed who is to be confessed as Lord to the glory of God the Father. How is God the Father glorified by Jesus being confessed as Lord? We apprehend in this way. He graciously instituted means for a NEW creation; the seed of the woman had overcome, and was the first specimen of perfected humanity, the beginning of the creation of God; the stone which the builders rejected had become the chief corner-stone of the stupendous temple for God to dwell in, and was constituted Lord of life and glory the great reservoir of the spirit from which we can draw the initial fulfillment of his sworn purpose, to fill the earth with his glory. How would a pre-existent son being made Lord [illegible] to God's glory, and how could he be benefited by it, seeing he never pre-existed? Pre-existence puts Christ at the Head of the First Creation the old system of things, the natural, which ends in failure and final overthrow. What honor is that, compared with being the head of the system that can never be moved?

12th. We ask what the pre-existent one laid aside? Was it his power and deathlessness? If so, how then is it claimed that he evaded death by evacuating the body born of Mary, and was at hand on the third day to raise it again? Does this look as if he emptied himself? On that hypothesis, had he not his power still; was he not superior to death still? If it be said that he did this by the power of God, what becomes of his equality with God?

13th. God has promised to put all his enemies under his feet; does not this settle the equality question?

14th. If it still be asked what, from our point of view, Jesus gave up? we may add that he gave up the life by which he was constituted the heir of David's Throne--the life by which he became heir of the promises made to him and his Father Abraham, and heir of the world.

15th. The pre-existent doctrine implies that the Son without a name, divested himself of the form of God, although he thought it not robbery to be equal with God. What was he after he thus divested himself? Did he divest himself of his personality--his conscious existence? From the fact that he did not die when the body of Jesus died, proves that he does not believe John when he says the word was made flesh; for the flesh died; proves that he classes himself, alas, with more who do not believe that the Anointed came in the flesh. It is painful to write this, but the truth must be told.

16th. We [illegible] that if he left his form in heaven he did not come down from heaven [illegible] from a pre-existent [illegible] because he was [illegible] a woman, and because the form of a person is the person himself. If the "He" who had a personal form in heaven came down he did not leave that form in heaven. The duplicate entity or two-nature scheme, or pre-existent son and the human seed of the woman constituting but one Christ or person comes from the creeds published in our No. 5, and more,--it paves the way for us to return to the immortal-soul dogma, and double nature of man which originated in the mythology of heathendom.

17th. The name "Son of God" was inherited, but the name above every name was given him;--that name was Jesus. And by the Spirit of the Eternal Father we aver that his name was never mentioned before it was mentioned in connection with his mother. "Listen O Isles, unto me, and hearken ye people, from afar; the Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name; and he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me, and said unto me, thou art my servant O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. Then I said, I have labored in vain; I have spent my strength for naught and in vain; yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my reward with my God. And now, saith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him. Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength."

How can one read these words of his origin and name, and of God making his mouth a sharp sword, and polished shaft, and hiding him in his quiver, and declaring him to be a SERVANT, and saying his reward for his labor is with his God yes; how can one after all this read Phil. ii. 6 in the common version which appears to make him EQUAL WITH GOD, and ask no questions? The Diaglott reads in harmony with God's purpose, as follows: "Let this disposition be in you, which was also in Christ (anointed) Jesus, who though being in God's form, yet did not meditate a usurpation to be like God, but divested himself, taking a bondman's form; having been made in the likeness of men; and being in condition as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross; and therefore God supremely exalted him, and freely granted him that name which is above every name." [illegible] We thank God that one into whose heart God has shined, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus (anointed), and whose scholarship is [illegible] conceded even by the enemies of the truth, has helped us over the difficulties of this passage legitimately, so that we need not accept a reading which conflicts with hundreds of other passages, and which was influenced by those unscrupulous enough to forge the words "In heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, 1 John v. 7 8," in order to sustain the creeds published in our last, concerning the One, Two, and three Gods in One God. Dean Alford says it is now known that the supposed citations of these words by the early Latin Fathers have disappeared on closer examination and that they are omitted by all Greek MSS. till the 15th century.

Why did not the learned Reviewer bring his classic lore to bear upon this Scripture. At least, he might have given his reasons for his preference for the common version, which Dr. George Campbell regrets was so much influenced by the translation of Beza; and quotes that translator as saying "that he would not have translated some things as he did were it not that he could thereby strike a severer blow against adverse sects, or ward off blows aimed at him." See "Preliminary Dissertation," vol. ii., p. 228. No honest and intelligent person will deny that a correct explanation depends upon a true rendering. This is the best we have to offer by way of explanation. We hope it may help others to prove all things, especially Pre-existence; but in case this be not the result, we can certainly profit by what God had previously revealed of his grand design or purpose. All truth is in harmony; and instead of beginning with a few difficult passages toward the close of the divine record, let us look at the necessities of the case between the Creator and the creature—the obstacles in the way of reconciliation. On the part of Reviewer we have not noticed the slightest attempt to show what part in the redemptive scheme the pre-existent Christ took, or why it is a matter of life or death to believe or not believe it. This is to be deplored, unless it be that it has no place in the plan of salvation; and in that case it should be abandoned. Reviewer is morally bound to tell us what he supposes the pre-existent Christ is to him, so that we may test that, too, by God's own record of his Son.

Certain is it that death was and is the wages of sin. Adam could only impart a corruptible nature to his children and the whole race honors the law by death. No one can evade the penalty of the law, but God has instituted means by which a new race shall be formed out of the old one.' And here the question will be asked, what means? Well, there was no remission of sins without the shedding of blood. This proves that no spirit being could possibly be the Savior of the world of mankind it must be one of our own race; that it must be one of our race who had no sin of his own to account for.

Foreseeing that no one begotten by man would ever live without sin, he determined in his wisdom, love and power to make a son of man for that special purpose not out of the ground, but of a woman, by the power of the Spirit. By this miraculous interposition (see Luke i. 30-35) the Son of the woman was the Son of God, as well as the seed of Abraham and David, and is certainly he by whom all the families of the earth are to be blessed by the coming King over all the earth and putting down all rule and authority, and restoring all things predicted by the prophets.

As all God's promises centre in this special Son of man by Divine begettal, and for four thousand years made no reference to him as already existing in heaven, and as it was absolutely necessary for him to keep God's law perfectly when it was possible for him to disobey it, be perfectly obedient unto death under the most adverse circumstances, absolutely have no sin of his own to account for, so that he could be brought again from the dead through the covenant ratified or made effective by his own blood, (see Heb. xiii. 20) he must have been human in nature.

In the briefest way this shows from the necessities of the case between God and man, how utterly impossible it would have been for a spirit being to have become the world's redeemer; and how supremely ridiculous it is to talk of Christ being equal with God, and of a God being placed under his own law and rewarded for his obedience to it, when disobedience on the part of that God was an impossibility.

In the love of the Truth [illegible] mitted.

[illegible]

[illegible] On Jan. 12th, 1894, at her residence in Sidney, Kosciusko Co., Ind., Mary A. Hahn, daughter of Lewis and Nancy Shatty, and wife of Samuel Hahn, aged [illegible] years, 4 months, and 8 days.

Sister Hahn was born at Mansfield, Richland Co. Ohio, and was the mother of 9 children, 5 of whom preceded her to the tomb.

She was baptized by Bro. James Watkins of Michigan, (now deceased) and united with the church at Gospel Grove, and lived a consistent Christian life, holding the blessed hope of the gospel, the hope of the resurrection of the righteous dead at the personal coming of Jesus.

Sister Hahn possessed those qualities of mind and heart, which endears a mother to her children, being quiet, gentle and kind.

Funeral discourse by the writer, based upon 1 Thess. iv. 9.

Not long will be her dreamless sleep,
The Lord of life and light will come,
Not long will faith await and weep
Beside the gateway of the tomb.

Unsealed will be the sightless eyes
And warmed to life the pallid hand.
The prostrate form in strength arise,
To walk and serve [illegible] grand.

JOHN L. WISER.

Margaret Haynes, Jan. 12, 1894, aged 71 years, 10 months, and 21 days, after a long and painful illness of over ten months of dropsy.

Funeral services were held at Hawkeye School House, Calhoun Co, Ia. Bro. A. J. Eychaner of Gladbrook, Ia., was telegraphed for to preach the funeral, but, being absent from home, could not be here, therefore, by request of the deceased, a portion of Scripture was read by Bro. J. G. Robinson, prayer by Bro. R. J. White, and song, after which she was consigned to the silent tomb to await the coming of the Lord.

She was a kind and tender mother, always ready to help in time of need.

She was the mother of ten children, of whom seven are still living, four sons and three daughters.

She was born in Licking Co., Ohio, Feb. 15, A. D. 1822, and was married to Silas Haynes, Nov. 17, A. D. 1839, and moved to Marion Co., Iowa, A. D. 1840, and lived in Pleasant Grove until A. D. 1883.

Her husband died June 3, 1893, and one monument now marks the spot where they are lying side by side, both having died in faith of attaining [illegible] that life that never ends, when Christ comes the second time. The dead in Christ shall rise first, the captives let free. Death shall be destroyed. No more death nor sorrowing.

Her constant prayer was, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Oh death, where is thy sting, oh grave, where is thy victory. Glorious day, blessed hope, soon may it come.

GEO. W. HAYNES.

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF MOTHER.

[illegible]

George Smith, at his residence in Walnut, Crawford Co., Kansas, Jan. 12, 1894, of lagrippe, after two weeks of suffering. Aged 52 years, 3 months, and 12 days.

Brother Smith was born in Vernon Co. Mo. Feb. 30, 1842. He was married to Matilda Summers, July 15, 1860. They were the parents of eleven children, ten of them now living.

Brother and sister Smith, were both baptized into Christ by the writer about 18 years ago, and they have both lived a consistent Christian life until death separated them. Brother Smith will be missed by many.

The writer preached the funeral sermon from Job xiv. 14. This was his own selection. A large number were present. Death will hold Brother Smith until "He cometh who holds the keys of hell and of death." Let us all be ready to hail that glad day, is my prayer, for Christ's sake. Amen.

JOHN FOORE.

[illegible] Dec. 31st, 1893, Elizabeth, wife of Jacob Elton, aged 55 years, 9 months and 10 days.

Sister Elton was born in Jamaica, Long Island, March 21st, 1838, was baptized into Christ in the year 1891, and lived a consistant member of the Church of God. Having lived for the past 24 years in the nortwestern part of the city of Omaha, Neb. Last October the family removed to their farm, 7 miles distant.

The subject of this obituary leaves a husband and 9 children to mourn her loss—6 sons and 3 daughters. Funeral discourse by the writer, text first Thessalonians 14th chapter, commencing with the 13th verse. After close of discourse, Brother Elton made a few remarks relative to the state of the dead, and the hope of the Christian when Jesus returns to call his own. Then the faithful wife, the Christian mother and our beloved sister was laid in the tomb to await the summons from on high.

Conference Report.

The conference, known as the "Northern Nebraska, and Southern Dakota Conference of the Church of God," met at Ainsworth, Nebraska, in the Court House Hall, on Dec. 22, having been postponed from the 15th, on account of the two conferences being on the same date. The attendance was good, and seven were added to the fold by baptism for the remission of sins.

At the business meeting after the reading and approving of the minutes of the last meeting, a number desired that we unite with the State Conference, and at the next business meeting a committee was appointed to draw up written resolutions for the same, which afterward were approved and adopted, after which the conference adjourned.

WM. H. DENSON, Sec'y.

"Surely An Enemy Hath Done This."

George W. Young, of West Seattle, Wash., late of Brooklyn, N. Y., died January 3, 1894.

Just a few remarks in connection with the above case for the benefit of the brethren. First, a few weeks ago our dear Bro. Young, while in the act of breaking up some wood into stove lengths, a piece flew up and struck him in the eye, which quite prostrated him for some days, but he got better so that he could again spend a part of his time at his business as Secretary and Treasurer of the Pioneer Printing Company in Seattle; but the effects of the blow so shattered the nerves of the eye and paralyzed them, that what is called creeping paralysis set in, and worked its way to the brain and then to the heart, which was the cause of his death.

On Wednesday morning, January 3rd, I called on him at his residence about some School Board matters to be attended to at 10 o'clock, but he told me he could not go with me as he was going to the city at that hour; so I left him and went home. He, however, soon followed me to my house and told me what he would do, and then went over to the city at 10 o'clock, in his usual good mood. After arriving at the city, and about 1 o'clock, he and his brother-in-law, A. D. Edelman, went to the Arlington Hotel to visit a friend, and while sitting there a short time enjoying a social chat in his usual way (for he was always social and entertaining when in good health), he was taken suddenly ill and his friends laid him on the bed, but still no relief came, but he grew worse and soon began to gasp for breath to sustain life, which was very fast ebbing away. A physician happened to be in the hotel, who was immediately summoned to try and restore the then dying man, but the enemy of all flesh—Death—had obtained too strong a hold on the vital parts of our dear brother to be induced to let go. He had come for his victim and he must go. This all took place in about fifteen minutes, and he whom we had learned to love, breathed his last; yes, fell asleep in Christ. But, oh! how sad! how sad, indeed! leaving home in the morning in apparent good health, never more to return.

He was a worthy citizen, a good neighbor, a loving husband and father, and a zealous Christian, always ready to lend a helping hand in time of need and willing to do good at all times and under all circumstances. His character was unimpeachable for its sterling quality both as a business man and a private citizen. Only a few days ago, as we were talking together about the customs of this Pacific Coast country, he remarked that it was notorious for its general sharp practice in its dealings among men in general, which he was very much opposed to. We have always found him willing to pay for value received in all his dealings.

His religious belief for over forty years has been in strict accord with the Bible and the teachings of this paper—THE RESTITUTION—and always ready to impart the knowledge he possessed concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ to his fellow mortals. He was well read in the Scriptures and also history, so that he was always ready to speak of the gospel of the Kingdom of God and of the things that are coming on the earth. He was a man of many books, for he possessed a well filled library of over one thousand volumes of choice literature, occupying a large part of the walls of his library, neatly fitted up with shelves and drawers by the writer.

The funeral services of our deceased brother were conducted at the Arlington Hotel on Friday, Jan. 5th, at 1 p. m. As he died at the rooms of a friend, it was thought best not to remove him to West Seattle, only to take him back again, as a family burying ground was purchased in Lake View cemetery, where we laid him away, to rest until the Life Giver shall come to call him forth to Immortal Glory, when he shall be clothed with immortality and made like unto the angels and can die no more; for, as he lived so he died, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ, with a full assurance of hope of seeing the King in his beauty when he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. We trust he will be among those that shall recive a part in the first resurrection on whom the second death will have no power, for they shall be kings and priests unto God and shall reign on the earth. He did want to live to see the Lord come in all his glory and not to have to go down into the death state and wait in the cold tomb; but he was satisfied; his Lord had been there and had taken away the dread of the sting of death, and has called back from heaven to his beloved brother, John in Rev. i. 18, saying, "I am He that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore and have the keys of hades and of death;" and in John xiv. 19, he makes one more consoling promise to his faithful followers, saying, "As I live YE SHALL live also." Peter says in i. 3 4. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." As our brother was of a firm belief that we are now living in the last days of Gentile times, he so expressed himself to the writer when in conversation about these things only a few days ago.

Our brother has left behind him to battle with the world a loving companion, four daughters and one son, the youngest, a son, being about ten years of age. All the others are believers in the One faith and hope of the gospel, so that they can say: "We sorrow not even as others which have NO HOPE, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

The writer being requested by the family to say a few words to the assembled friends, offered a few Scripture readings for their benefit and the comfort of the bereaved ones, as follows: Job xiv. 1-14; xvii. 13-18; 1 Cor. xv. 20 30 and 35-58; Phil. iii. 20-21; Rev. xx. 6-9; vii. 15-17; xxi. 3-7; Titus ii. 12-14; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; Jer. ix. 1; Rev. xiv. 13. Also offering a few comforting words to the bereaved family, advising them to continue in their course marked out in the Gospel of the Kingdom, and in due time they would reap if they faint not, and holding fast the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. Arriving at the cemetery we quietly laid away our brother to await the summons to come forth, by our Lord, the life-giver, all clad in glorious immortality and the youthful beauty of everlasting life. A short prayer to our heavenly Father, committing him to his care and keeping, and the following, ended the services:

"Earthly cavern, to thy keeping
We commit our brother's dust;
Keep it softly, softly sleeping,
Till our Lord demand thy trust."

L. C. CATTELL.

Dear Sister Young and Family:

We have heard with saddened hearts of the unexpected death of our late brother and associate, George W. Young, and we would hereby express our deep and heartfelt sympathy with you all in this your hour of bereavement. We pray that our heavenly Father in his great love and mercy will grant you his sustaining arm, and give you that peace which passeth understanding. That the consolations of his Word may indeed be precious unto you, and make you resigned to his will in the trial that has befallen you, and that your faith fail not.

To us, Brother Young was most dear, and though of late years parted from us by many miles we always thought of him as being with us in spirit. A loving husband and father, a faithful friend and adviser, and a thorough and sincere Christian we ever found him, and we feel keenly your and our loss, though we "sorrow not as others who have no hope." We hope to meet again in that kingdom, where there is neither sickness or sorrow, where God will wipe away all tears, and we shall behold the King in his beauty, even our dear Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ. With much love and hearty greetings to you all, in behalf of the Church at Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

With anxious expecting I shall await the advent of our dear paper this week, for in it I expect to find my Christmas feast. Doubtless it will be brimful of good cheer, for the weary watchers scattered abroad, which all the pleasant dainties of the Holidays utterly fail to supply. If I shall be able to add a word or thought to that volume of testimonies, that may cheer a weary soul, I shall be glad. Heavy with anxious watching, at the bedside of a sick mother for two months, fittingly serves to animate my long cherished desire, namely, that mortality may soon be swallowed up of life, and earth's inhabitants shall not say, I am sick. She is better now, and I hope will continue to improve in health. She is nearing her three score and ten years, but if we can but lift the veil of futurity, and look into the blissful cycles of an endless life, we may see all these years only the childhood of our existence. Dear friends, the more I study the Word of God, the more surely and firmly fixed I find the foundation of all our hopes. We are of royal blood, and the richest and best that ever flowed; heirs together to an inheritance undefiled, and fades not away, reserved in heaven for us who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. The Master is coming soon, may we all be ready. I know the world, yes, and some professed Christians too, will tell us, "O that story is old, there is nothing bright about it." They get seared at the very thought. Our blessed Lord, our elder brother, is the sinner's best friend, and bids them to come to him, and live. But the world is not wise, they will not hearken until the judgments of God are in the land.

What a happy thought that was of Bro. Dwiggins', to set the household into a sweet circulation for a little while. Perhaps we may become better acquainted, and the Master's cause flourish anew. See Malachi iii. 16, 17, and we will find the blessed result of such a Love Feast. I hope every one will read those words over again, and see how precious. And they shall be mine, said the Lord of hosts in that day when I make up my jewels. What a thought? Were words ever sweeter? A blessed promise we cannot fail to understand, it needs no comment.

The old year is dying now, we can almost hear the last strain of its funeral dirge, 'mid the seeming commingling of voices we catch the words sin and death. The new year, ah, what will be its record? We hope and we pray. Thy Kingdom come. Soon may we look into the loving eyes of him who wept over sin, and died to rescue sinners from an endless death. How sweet to remember his last words—Surely I come quickly. Amen. And may we with his beloved John, in one accord respond, even so come Lord Jesus. Your sister in the one hope.

Dear Brethren:

Knowing the time that we are indeed living in the last days, it is now high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand. Let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness; not in chambering and wantonness; not in strife and envying. Ma, we have on the Lord Jesus Christ, that we may be able to stand in the evil time. And having done all, to stand, having on the whole armor of God; living soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of Jesus, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works, for as much as we know that we were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold from our vain conversation, received by tradition from our fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. Yes, the blood of him who offered himself without spot to God, that our faith and hope might be in God, who raised him from the dead and gave him glory; and when he comes again in the glory of the Father, and all the holy angels with him, then will he say to all of his waiting children, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Then, this time of suffering will come to an end, when God's own hand shall wipe away the tears from every weeping eye; and pains and groans, and sighs and fears, and death itself shall die. Oh, glorious time, may it soon come. In view of this glorious time, may we heed the Savior's injunction to the apostles when he told them to watch and pray always, that they might be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and be enabled to stand before the Son of Man, and not be ashamed. Farewell, dear friends, strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many will seek to enter therein, and shall not be able. Yours, looking for the blessed hope.

Dear Restitution:

I am a little late coming in with my letter; at the same time I am glad that I am one that am trying (in my weak way) to "contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," which faith Abraham first had delivered to him. Paul beautifies it by saying, "Know ye, therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." Gal. iii. 7. "So then they which be of faith, are blessed with faithful Abraham." Gal. iii. 9. Now, brothers and sisters, let us all try this year and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, trusting in God to deliver us from wrong doing, and praying to him not to abandon us when trials and persecutions overtake us. I am afraid some of us do not trust him enough, but depend on self too much. Peter says, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light. 1 Pet. ii. 9.

I am one of the isolated members, all the preaching that I hear is in THE RESTITUTION, and I thank God that I am able to have that come to me. When I read the letters from those of like faith, it makes me want to be with them, and I sometimes think that I must be acquainted with them; they speak my ideas so perfectly; and then, I console myself when I realize that they are my brethren. I have been asked by members of several of the so-called Christian churches to unite with them, and have a home; but, let me say right here, that I prefer to be alone in the truth, rather than have a home with error. I fail to find any compromising grounds. And to close, let me say to all of the brothers and sisters of like precious faith, if it is not our lot to meet in this age, let us so live that in the age to come, we may be classed as children of faithful Abraham, and be seated with him in the kingdom of God. Yours in hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find $3.00 to apply on my subscription and one other. I am glad to see so many of the brothers and sisters respond to the invitation to the Love Feast. While I am so late, I feel like taking a back seat, just inside the door, if happily I am not shut out all together. I am in hopes I shall not be too late for the marriage supper of the Lamb. I am trying to so live, that I may be accepted of him when he comes.

Dear Restitution:

The Christmas number came last night, and I was so interested in reading the many letters that I thought I would try to add my mite. Bro. Siples family and ourselves hold our weekly meetings regularly. The words written by Sister Wince struck a responsive chord here. I love our meetings, it is the happiest time of the week. There are but five of us here, but we have the Lord's promise that where even two or three are gathered together, there he will be in their midst.

We hope to have some sermons preached here this winter. It may be there are some who would believe and obey. I want to say a word about prayer. I know from experience that the Lord is always ready to help us when sorrow and trouble come, if we go to him in faith and trustingly for help. I hope there are none of us who do not know the pleasure and profit derived from prayer. Let each one try the coming year and see that we take every opportunity for doing something for the Lord. If we teach that the coming of Christ is almost here we should show by our lives that we believe it. Your sister in Christ.

CARRIE ANTRIM.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find money order for $3.00, $1.50 to continue my subscription for another year and the other $1.50 to send THE RESTITUTION to some one too poor to pay for it. If our social meeting is not closed yet, I would say to the household of faith, I am still trying to fight the good fight of faith still trying to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. I would ask one and all, are we denying ourselves of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world? Are we doing our whole duty? Our Savior said of a certain one, She has done what she could. Will he ever say the same of us? God forbid that any of us should become discouraged, or faint by the way, or that our lives should prove a stumbling-block for others to fall over. That we may all prove faithful, and at last meet in that better land, is my prayer.

ELIAS SIPLE.

Lousiana.

Bro. Underwood:

Find enclosed a money order for $3.00. You will send THE RESTITUTION to the name given. I send you two new subscriptions to commence with 94. We have been engaged the past week in a meeting at Benwick. Some interest is manifested, one has asked to be baptized. We will close our meetings Sunday night, hoping for the best good. You may say in THE RESTITUTION that my P. O. address is still Marathon, Iowa. Brethren can address me there. I will go home before a great while. I have been out on this trip since the 14th of October. I am standing the trip much better than I expected when I started from home. Yours truly, wait for the King.

T. J. WHITESITT.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:

I take up my pen for the first time to converse a little to the household of faithful ones. I feel to rejoice when I read the good and interesting letters from so many of the dear ones in Christ. It makes me feel as though I must help on a little in the good cause. It certainly is a great and glorious privilege to speak to each other through the columns of our dear old paper. I have been a reader of it for 25 years, and consider it one of the best I have ever read for explaining the Scriptures. I should feel very much lost without it. I don't for a moment intend to neglect reading my Bible, for that is the true light, such as our heavenly Father has left for us all to consult, and to make us wise unto salvation.

I send you an order for three dollars—$1.50 is for the renewal of my paper, and the other is to pay for some one who is not able to take it. Dear brothers and sisters, pray for me that I may hold out faithful unto the end. With love to all who are in Christ, your sister in hope of the soon coming kingdom such as will be established here on earth.

Editor Restitution:

I have enjoyed reading the letters in the Love Feast very much, I want to add my mite also. After due deliberation, I yesterday (Jan. 17) was baptized in the all-saving name of Jesus Christ, by my father—J. S. Hatch. I can see my duty plainly before me, and I want all those of like precious faith to offer up prayers, that I may be strengthened to walk in the narrow way that leads to the better life to come. My daily prayers will be, that we all may enter into the kingdom of God's dear Son, and that the time may soon come. I am at present working at the Invalid's Home, in Kokomo. May THE RESTITUTION continue to shed its glorious light upon the faithful. Yours in the hope of eternal life.

JENNIE E. HATCH.

Dear Restitution:

We are indeed living in an age of crime, when the votaries of Satan assemble with the world living church, and would-be professors are frequently found in the house of revelry, rather than in the house of prayer. Evil men and seducers wax worse and worse deceiving and being deceived. And the few tried disciples of Christ will seek the old paths and rejoice as they behold the approaching day. Though the church of today has no Paul making personal appeals to them to secure a crown that fadeth not away, it has a record of his teaching, his exhortations and his glorious example; and also, the admonition of our Savior, "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." Mark xiii. 35, 36. If by our actions we show our love for thee, we also prove that we are his servants. If, on the contrary our labor and affections are given to the world, it proves conclusively that we are not servants of God, but followers of mammon. A sure index of a person's zeal for the truth may be found in his daily walk and conversation. For says Jesus, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." And again, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." It is the duty of every person to examine themselves and determine whether they be doers as well as hearers of the Word.

It is sad to think that in the last decade of our century so many of those who for years have been baptized into the Church of God should as yet be only babes in the truth. The Scriptures have fallen into comparative disuse among them; and even the ministers, their instructors and guides, have many of them sought out shallow speculations, and are teaching their own private opinions instead of God's truth. This course has imparted to the church a spirit of worldliness, and now, the earnest, zealous, God-living Christian is superseded by the world-loving professor, who fills up the hour of divine worship with drowsiness, or frivolous talk. Brethren, because we do not know the appointed time when our absent Lord shall return, is that any reason why we should fall into a sleep of carelessness? Should we not rather ever be watchful and ready to receive him? Let us earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, now in our trust and keeping. Shall we defend it, or will we let it linger in darkness, and trample it under our feet? Shall we be found among the slothful servants, neither hot nor cold? Shall we be found at our post, on our guard, doing our duty, or shall we be lingering along as though nothing concerned us, as though eternal life were a mere trifle? Oh, how many there are who do not realize these things, but they will soon realize what they have lost; when they will pray for the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the wrath of the Lamb. Yours in the faith.

Dear Restitution:

The highly prized RESTITUTION comes regularly and it is a source of comfort and consolation to me to read the choice articles which it contains, some of which are worth a year's subscription. Bro. Joblin, Wilson and others are no doubt working for a recompense at the resurrection of the just. I have been well pleased with the Christmas greetings, and should have constituted my mite, but ill health prevented. I have an old chronic trouble, which I do not expect will be removed until this mortal puts on immortality. It will be a day of rejoicing when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem before his ancients gloriously. Oh, that glad morning, that morning without clouds, when the sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings. Oh, how we long to see the King in his beauty. The cares, anxieties, disappointments, sickness, sorrow and sighing will be a thing of the past, never more to be repeated; to be like the angels, to die no more, to have our vile bodies made like the glorious body of Christ, to live forever in the everlasting kingdom of God's dear Son, to sing the song of victorious redemption on the evergreen shore and dwell in the light of God's heaven-lit countenance as long as the sun and moon shall shine and the days of heaven roll on. Oh, dear brothers and sisters, is it not worthy of our consideration? Let us battle for the truth without faltering, for the kingdom is now nigh at hand. The heaping up of treasures for the last days is plainly visible, distress among the nations with perplexity, wonderful preparations for war in the east, all tell us that Gentile times are fast drawing to a close. So then, dear loved ones, cheer up, for your redemption draweth nigh. Oh, the glad day, may it soon come. Dear brothers of the editorial staff, you have my best wishes and prayers. Your brother in hope.

Dear Restitution:

I noticed among the many letters from the dear ones scattered abroad, in last week's RESTITUTION, that Nebraska was not represented at the Love Feast. I send in my mite, and trust that the suggestion of Bro. Dwiggins be carried out each year at Christmas time until the Lord comes and calls us from our labors here, to a position as kings and priests in the age to come

There are many brothers in this state who do not take THE RESTITUTION. Every one who is able should give it their support, and having read it, you should lay it away and when you know of a friend who is interested give him a bunch of them. It may be the means of causing him to embrace the blessed truths you hold so dear. Time is short. Our life is compared to a vapor that appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth away. Therefore, we ought to improve every opportunity for doing good; but we are not apt to see those oportunities, unless we look for them. May we all double our diligence during the coming year, and finally meet in the soon coming kingdom. Yours.

J. J. CADY.

Nebraska.

Dear brothers and sisters:

We are on the eve of another Christmas. We are trying to work for the blessed Master. I do praise his holy name. We are glad we have another opportunity of speaking a word in and through the columns of our dear paper we prize so highly. We are so isolated and don't hear any preaching except through the dear paper. We can't wait till it comes, we are so glad to hear from so many good writers as, Bro. Adams, Bro. W. H. Wilson and all others I can't mention. My husband is blind, and it falls on me to see to all, and to look after him too. I am glad the blessed Master has given me health and strength to take up my cross, and work for my family and care for my poor, blind husband. He bears his affliction with Christian patience for he thinks when the Savior comes, he will give him his eye-sight. It fills my soul with joy to hear him talk on the Bible. He had been a great Bible reader until he went blind. He is still contending for the faith, if he is blind. The people around us are not worshipping the same Lord we do. They claim their Lord never dies; our Lord says, I am he that was dead, behold I am alive for ever more. From your brother and sister.

Troublous Times.

There shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the Book. Dan. xii. 1.

1. This is a national trouble and all nations will be involved in it.

2. It is to surpass in magnitude and severity all other national troubles of past time.

3. It is at or near the time of the resurrection of the dead as shown in the next verse.

4. It is in close connection with the deliverance of God's ancient covenant people Israel, and especially Judah or the Jews, whose doom as a people is foreshown in the vision of the 8th chapter.

5. According to the language of the Great Teacher as recorded in Luke xxi. 25, it is closely related in point of time with the signs in the heavens; but subsequent to these in the order of occurrence.

6. It is near the close of the time of the Gentiles.

In Luke it is worded, "distress of nations with perplexity."

This great trouble is clearly predicted on the prophetic page, and the period of its occurrence sufficiently well defined so as not to take the Bible student by surprise. He is expecting just such a condition of affairs among the nations as will perplex and confound the deepest wisdom of statesmanship. The believer in the doctrine of the nearness of the advent, though styled a "pessimist" and "a prophet of evil" is at the same time an optimist in the highest sense of the word, for he can sing:

"There's a good time coming, the Saviour saith,
When the righteous shall be blessed,
When Christ shall reign over all the earth,
And give his people rest."

He lifts up his head and rejoices because his redemption draws nigh. He sees the gloom now, but beyond the glory; the night of darkness for the world followed by a day of gladness for the poor and oppressed sons and daughters of want who are starving in the midst of corrupting abundance. The time of this great trouble has arrived. This condition of things did not come upon the world without adequate causes, nor has it come suddenly without any premonitory symptoms of its approach. Wise statesmen have seen for years some causes operating that they regarded as likely to put a check to the progress and prosperity of our nation, but thought that the crisis when it would come would be temporary, and no worse than former reverses which came periodically. They thought that a little judicious legislation would soon make matters all right. At the present time the state of affairs confronting them, and the problems pressing upon them for solution, they feel to be more than a match for the combined wisdom of modern statesmanship. Men by the thousands are out of employment in all the great cities of our land, to say nothing of the hundreds of small towns where half the population fold their hands in enforced idleness; asking in vain for work. A conservative man in Boston estimates that the number of unemployed in that city is increasing at the rate of 1000 daily. He further says "there are probably 80,000 who cannot obtain work enough to buy one meal. It is impossible to form an idea of the destitution of a great number of these people. Some have for months eaten not one full meal. They have pawned every thing available, and are but half-clothed." A man on the floor of congress put the number of unemployed at 3,000,000 men. This is a sad picture to contemplate at the beginning of a long winter. If so bad now what a terrible history of suffering and destitution will fill the columns of the daily and weekly papers by spring. Men try to be hopeful that matters will improve soon and base this hope on the fact that a few factories that were closed for months have resumed operations, and reemployed hands that had remained idle so long; but the number who are finding work are many times outnumbered by those who are being daily thrown out of work. Various causes are assigned for this deplorable state of things. Tariff by one, and free trade by another. Demonetization of silver is thought by some to be the principal and primary cause. Combines, trusts and boards of trade are by many regarded as being at the bottom of the mischief. Some believe that over-production is the main factor that has brought about the evil result. Several of these causes, no doubt, combined to bring on this unparalled crisis in human affairs, which began to be felt first in the west and south, and afterward in the north and in great manufacturing centers of the east. Nor is the trouble confined to the United States—all Europe is experiencing the like trouble. The same great questions which demand an answer here, are loudly and urgently demanding an answer there. The conflict between capital and labor in the old world, as well as here, is a perplexing problem not likely to be solved very soon, if at all, by the wisdom of this world; and the socialistic element which is atheistic and lawless is increasing in numbers in strength and daring. The avowed purpose of which is, when it gets strong enough, to level all distinctions of titles and wealth, destroy all systems of religion, annul all existing rights and claims, to properly divide this world up evenly. Jesuitism there as here, is intriguing in various ways, working as it ever has worked since the society was founded by Loyola, to corrupt courts, control legislation and undermine free institutions. The condition of things may improve a little in the spring, but the change will only be temporary. Trouble will go on till the Lord comes.

Human wisdom is not equal to the present task of righting the wrongs which are multiplying on every hand, and bring order and harmony out of this chaos of difficulties. God is testing human governments to their utmost extremity, and when every system fails, God's Son will take the throne of empire, sway a universal sceptre and then peace and plenty will abound. May this mighty change come soon.

MARRIED

Hamlin—Brenner.—At the home of the bride's parents in Warren Co., Ind., Jan. 7th, 1894, Mr. Edward Hamlin and Miss Hettie Brenner. Their wedding was a private one, immediate relatives only being present. The young and happy couple start out in wedded life to bear each others burdens, and share each others joys with the best wishes of their many friends, and, better still, the promises of our kind heavenly Father. May they ever be faithful to each other, that this life may be a joy to them; and true to the Master's cause, that life eternal may be theirs.

L. E. CONNER.

Evans—Smith. At the home of the bride's parents in Warren Co., Ind., Jan. 16, 1894, Mr. Cyrus Evans and Miss Nettie Smith.

More than ninety invited guests were present to witness the ceremony and offer congratulations to two of their young friends who that evening formed a new relationship to each other, and assumed new responsibilities. With their hearts bound together with the strong cords of love, with the help of a heavenly Father whom they serve, may their efforts be one, their reward in this life be a cheerful happy home, and in the sweet by-and-by "a crown of rejoicing" be given them.

L. E. CONNER.

"God weighs our prayers rather than numbers them." That we should pray often, and even without ceasing, is important, but that we should pray with sincerity and earnestness, is still more so.

It is by faith we do great things—faith in ourselves, faith in others, faith in God.

"Great peace have they which love thy law."
Psa. xix. 165.

The Mosaic history of the deluge has been a subject of extreme hostility on the part of those who love not the Word of the Lord. Everything that false science and philosophy could invent, has been cited to prove the Mosaic account untrue. But in these last days, not only science but geology, history, and tradition, unite with one voice, with clear and reliable evidence in proclaiming the Mosaic record perfectly credible.

In support of this assertion, I will now call your attention to the following historical citations. Treasure them in your memory, and they will help you. "The relation of the deluge by the Hebrew historian, is confirmed by the fossilized remains of animals belonging to another world, which are found in every quarter of the globe. Thus the highest eminences of the earth, as the Andes, the Alps, the Appenines, the Pyrenees, Libanus, Atlas, and Ararat in short, all the mountains of every region under heaven, where search has been made, conspire in one uniform and universal proof that the sea was spread over their highest summits; for they are found to contain shells, skeletons of fish, and marine animals of every kind. The bones of extinct animals have been found in America, at an elevation of seven thousand eight hundred feet, and in the Cordilleras at seven thousand two hundred feet, above the level of the sea. In central Asia, evidence is still more decisive; the fossilated remains of the horse, deer, and bear species having been brought to England from the Himalay Mountains, from an elevation of more than sixteen thousand feet. Further, as skeletons of the elephant and rhinoceros, natives of Africa and southern Asia, have been dug up on the steeps or table-lands of Tartary and Siberia; and remains of elephants have been found in various parts of England. Crocodiles, chiefly of the Asiatic species, have been found in the various parts of Europe. The gigantic mammoth, an animal supposed to belong exclusively to the antediluvian world, has been found in the most northern parts of Russia, and also in North America, and in Iceland. The fossil bones and teeth of the rhinoceros, hippopotamus, tiger and hyena, (animals found in Africa and the East), and of the bear, and numerous other animals have been found in England; to which we may add trees of vast dimensions with their roots and tops, and some also with leaves and fruit, discovered at the bottom of mines and marl-pits, not only in regions where it is demonstrably impossible that they should grow; which effect could only be produced by the fountains of the great deep being broken up. Further, the drifting of the ark northward, from Noah's settlement to Mount Ararat, leads us to infer that the main current of the waters of the came deluge from the south; and that this was the case, is most evident from the present appearances of the great continents of the terraqueous globe, whose deep southern indentations and bold projecting capes on the north, together with the chaotic subversions of the ghauts of Hindostan, as well as the mountains of Abyssinia and Caffraria, and of those in the neighborhood of the Straits of Magellan, all conspire to prove that such tremendous disruptions were originally caused by the waters of the great deep, which rushed northward with considerable fury at first, though they afterward grew less violent toward the end of their progress. There are also traces of prodigious disruptions of the earth in high northern regions, as if on purpose to absorb the redundant waters from the south; and in some parts, as in Norway, whole countries have been uplifted on one side, and half buried on the other in vast gulfs which opened to receive them. To these facts we may add that all the researches of the most eminent geologists tend to prove the recent population of the world, and that its present surface is not of very ancient formation."—Horne's Intro.

Aside from the marvelous evidence as given above, we have ancient traditional history, which in the main corroborates the Mosaic account with the exception of a few embellishments added by tradition. The evidence is, that there must have been some fact upon which this history is based, or so many nations remote from each other, could not hold the same historic tradition.

"Berosus, the Chaldean historian, following the most ancient writings, according to Josephus, has related the same things as Moses respecting the deluge, the destruction of mankind in it, and the preservation of Nochus, the restorer of the human race, in an ark, which was carried to the summit of the Armenian Mountains.

The same things are mentioned Hieronymus the Egyptian, Nicolaus of Damascus, and many others. Abydenus, an ancient Assyrian historian, of whose works a fragment is preserved, mentions the deluge, which he asserts to have been foretold before it happened; and speaks also of birds having been sent forth three different times to ascertain whether the earth was dried. Cyril of Alexandria also Alexander Polyhistor, another ancient historian, who says that in the reign of Xisuthrus (Noah,) there was a great deluge, and that Xisuthrus was saved in an ark which Saturn had directed him to build, foretelling the approaching calamity; and that he sailed in it, with the fowl and creeping things and cattle. Plutarch, in his treatise on sagacity of animals, observes that a dove was sent out by Deucalion, (Noah) which entering into the ark again, was a sign of the continuance of the flood, but afterward flying away, was a sign of serene weather.

Lucian mentions that the former generation was a wicked and profligate race, whose vices brought upon them this great calamity, in which they were all destroyed except Deucalion, who for his prudence and piety was preserved in a great ark which he had built; into which not only himself, but his wife and family, and pairs of all creatures which the earth contained, were admitted and rode in safety; while the earth, says he, gave forth great abundance of water, great showers of rain fell, and the rivers increased, and the sea swelled to such a degree, that all things were under water, and all men perished. Lucian expressly states that he derived this account from the Grecians. At Apamea, in the reign of Philip the elder, a coin was struck, on the reverse of which a kind of square chest is represented floating on the waters. A man and woman are represented advancing out of it to dry land. Above flutters a dove bearing an olive branch. On one of the panels of the chest is the word "Noe," in Greek characters.

Mount Ararat, upon which the ark is stated to have rested, is still called by the Persians in the neighborhood, Kohi Nouch, or The Mount of Noah; and Turks, Armenians, and Persians, all unite in representing it as the haven of the great ship which preserved the second father of mankind from the waters of the deluge."

Is it not strange that so many heathen nations have the tradition of this fact if there was nothing in reality upon which the tradition was based? It is an old proverb that where there is smoke there must be some fire.

Men who would deny the testimony above cited would certainly deny the value of all testimony, and shut themselves up to blind unbelief.

The Mosaic account itself bears the impress of faithfulness and veracity. Such must have been our Lord's opinion of it, as he endorsed it, and declared "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." And as to the value of Moses' testimony did he not teach, that he who believed not Moses, neither would he be persuaded though one rose from the dead?

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

There is very little revealed in the Scriptures concerning the ages beyond the millennium. Sin and death will be abolished, and the inhabitants of the earth will consist of the glorified sons of God, for whom during the previous thousand years the earth will have been prepared, perfected and beautified (1 Cor. xv. 24-28; Rev. xxi. 1-4, 23-26; xxii. 1-5). The worshipers of the beast are tormented in the great tribulation in the days of the apocalypse of the Son of Man. They experience the wrath of God, and are destroyed by his fiery judgments in the presence of the holy angels, and the presence of the Lamb. "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever;" or until the age of the ages. As their torment is produced by the "fiery indignation" of Jehovah, "smoke" is a fitting symbol to represent its outpouring, and the "ascending" the continuance of the same. The smoke ascends until the full establishment of the kingdom. Hence the torment ceases when righteousness and peace are manifested by having experienced the scathing judgments of God. The person or power constituting the post millennial "devil" will be utterly destroyed in the fiery deluge which will overthrow the rebels encompassing the camp of the saints and the beloved city. That part of the earth will then, most probably, literally become "a lake of fire and brimstone," similar to that into which "the beast and the false prophet" had been cast whose torment continued until the age of the ages."

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

E. F. Randolph, Sec'y.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

"Church of the Blessed Hope" of West Seattle, Wash. This council regularly meets for public and church service every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Brethren known to this church, or coming properly endorsed by introductory letter, will be heartily welcomed. At present we meet in the school house on top of the hill; cable cars come very close to school house, and ferry brings from Seattle.

The brethren of the Church of God at Beech Creek, Ohio, meet every Sunday at 10 a. m. for Bible class and Sunday school. Communion at 11, where prayers and exhortations are made to our Father, the giver of every good and perfect gift. All visitors address brother George Knife. Kessler, or H. L. Lehman. West Milton, Ohio.

The Church of God at Hammond, La., meet every Sunday at 2:30 p. m., to break bread and exhort each other to love and good works. Wm. H. Wilson, Elder; Sime Siple, secretary.

The brethren of the Church of God hold prayer and social meetings each Saturday evening at J. J. Cady's residence, and Quarterly Conference the first of each quarter at the Fairview school house in Furnas Co., Neb. Brethren from a distance, and all lovers of truth are cordially invited to meet with us. Bro. A. P. Harlan and Eld. A. Adams, Elders. J. J. Cady, Secretary.

The Church of God at Dutton, Mich., meet for worship every first day, morning and evening. Communion every two weeks. Prayer meeting every Thursday evening.

The Church at Watson, Allegan Co., Mich., meet for Sunday school every first day. Regular preaching every first and third Sunday in the month.

The Church of God near Fisher, Mich., have regular preaching every second and fourth Sunday. Lord's Supper every four weeks.

The Church of God at Woodland, Mich., have regular preaching every four weeks. Elder Woodward and wife have charge of these four churches.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 7, 1894. NO. 5.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the [illegible] saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

The Coming Storm.

The Autumn is gone,
And Winter is here,
Hark! I hear the winds,
In their mad career.

Oh those howling winds
In their anger fierce,
The hearts of sin,
They most surely pierce.

For a [illegible] is coming,
Which sinners fear
With none to protect
When the storm is near.

That [illegible] while,
[illegible] to the [illegible]
Though weary from wandering
O'er desert so drear.

Their yokes are so heavy,
They faint on the plain,
Their hearts are exhausted,
Their search is in vain.

Fatigued are their feet
Their burden is life,
Without God in the world
'Tis a wearisome strife.

If only they'd hear
The Redeemer's loud call
'Twould make the yoke easy
The burden so small.

If they'd only be washed
In the blood of the Lamb
Their fears would be [illegible]
And happy they'd stand.

O sinners [illegible] heed
Repent from your sin,
That Ark [illegible] of safety,
The Lord shut you in.

[illegible]

Letter Drawer.

Beloved in the Lord:

I thank the good Father for the "flood" of letters that have been published in the "Love Feast" edition of THE RESTITUTION contained in the three last editions of the paper. It has been truly a feast of good things. That we may fully appreciate the rich blessings that comes to us when so many take a hand and help push the good Gospel Ship along, I will give a short resume of the letters, simply quoting a single sentence from each letter, as there will not be room in the paper for more than that.

No one can read these letters without coming to the conclusion that the writers are terribly in earnest.

Brother John Boyd leads off with the thought "Let us strive to enter into the kingdom." What a good admonition.

Claude L. Austin, with his ringing letter says, "He will not turn us away empty handed."

Bro. D. T. Halstead comes next with a letter full of advice and giving us his personal hope in a single sentence "the anchor still holds." He who is anchored to the rock Christ Jesus is safe.

E. D. Hanson urges the "importance of believing the Word of God."

R. S. Dwiggins "how much the world needs a righteous Ruler."

J. E. Forsyth says fervently "I thank God I have heard the call." Amen.

Fannie T. Dwiggins. "Fit us for the Master's service."

A. W. Darby exhorts us to "cling to the Rock that is higher than I."

Almira Brooks proves her faith by the statement "Jesus is able to forgive our sins."

J. L. Barnes calls attention to the "good news of the kingdom."

T. E. Adams encourages us with the statement "Jesus is soon coming."

J. B. Craton clinches Bro. Adams statement with "the Lord of the vineyard will soon return to reward his servants."

Mrs. J. C. Whitten says "We need words of encouragement and good cheer sent along the line of this little army oftener than we receive them." To which let all respond, amen, and then aid in the good work.

John L. Wince, suffering from the terrible loss of his home says, "We feel very thankful to our Father in heaven." What a blessed thing it is that we have a father that we can go to in times of trouble.

S. Roxana Wince, still suffering from the effects of the fire which destroyed her home, looks up to the throne, and says "God help us all to stand in the ranks." Amen. We will soon have a home that cannot be destroyed.

Mrs. L. W. Cummins steps to the side of Sister Wince and says "I shall gain an inheritance incorruptible."

J. W. Thorp says, "Let us start anew in the good warfare."

Hester V. Cummins rejoices us with the statement "We have much to be thankful for."

Walker Perrine with warning voice says "These epistles may be the last that many of us will ever pen until Christ comes in glory."

Mrs. Mary Forsyth exclaims "Praise the Lord."

L. A. Chaplin quiets our fears with the words, "We have Jesus at the helm, he will guide us."

Jennie Compton says "I am trying to serve Jesus." May God help us all to serve him.

Mrs. M. E. Knowles rejoices in the statement "We see the day of redemption is drawing nigh." May the Lord hasten the time.

Lizzie B. Oliver says she is "Striving for that dear home where sorrow and trouble can never enter."

S. P. Renner says, "We are still battling for the truth." Glorious warfare.

S. R. Clinkerbeard prays "May God bless the loved ones." Amen.

W. S. Finn in poetic strain says,

"While glory casts her golden leaves
And says, 'I've come to stay'
New laws are given to the race,
The mists are chased away."

Abbie A. Howard exclaims "What a strange time we are living in." Truly it is so.

J. B. Lent in anticipation of the good things contained in the "Love Feast" edition, says, "How it will fill our hearts with pleasure to read the testimonies of the faithful ones." He was a true prophet.

Mrs. O. B. Cady from the warmth of her Christian heart says, "We must be vigilant in the Master's cause."

R. H. Sherrill looking over the Lord's vineyard says "Let us labor on." So be it.

Lydia A. Evans feeling the necessity of going to the Father for strength says, "In my weakness my Lord has given me strength."

J. T. Shupter following the same line of thought as Sister Evans, says, "We are daily the subjects of our Heavenly Father's care." How the thoughts of Christians run in the same channel. Here is a sister in Indiana and a brother in Canada expressing the same sentiments.

Ida I. Shaffer says, "Cheer and exhort one another."

Alice Adams with her heart full of love, looks outside the vineyard and says, "Dear halting ones outside the fold, why do you wait?"

Anna B. Eychaner tells of her hope in the words "I rejoice in the hope of the gospel."

Lottie Forsyth proves her faith by the statement "In order to put on Christ I must be baptized."

Ella T. Knowles rises in her place in the Buckeye state, and says, "How grand it is to understand the gospel of the kingdom."

Hannah Prosser looking forward to the "sweet by and by" exclaims, "How sweet the resurrection morn seems when we think of meeting our Father's family all together."

W. H. Wilson in his concise manner says, "Time is short, delays are dangerous."

S. C. Oliver says, "we are greatly encouraged."

Sadie Skeels in exhortation says, "May we live in such a way that the signs of his coming will be a source of comfort and joy."

Alice J. Kerr in the poetry which fills her very being says, "Flowers of his truth have sprung up in my heart and he is stooping down to water them with the dews of his grace." What a beautiful thought.

Viola Skeels gives us this beautiful sentiment, "Live more like our dear Jesus."

H. C. Dewey rejoices in the statement "I am alive and still trusting in our kind, heavenly Father."

"Emma Lindsey asks us, "Can we say we are ready to meet the Bridegroom?"

Laura Skeels says, she is "waiting for the glorious promises to be fulfilled."

Margaret Woodward is a heroine who has been long at the front fighting the Master's battles. Listen to the cheering words of a veteran "I have lived over 80 years. My life is passing swiftly, but as it nears its close my faith grows stronger, my love for the truth deeper, and my anxiety to see the King is greater every day." May God bless and keep our dear mother Woodward.

Mrs. E. J. Rathbun. Here is another veteran. Listen to her while she says "Praise God. Glory to his holy name."

B. F. Skeels says, "May we all be found watching. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly." Amen.

Jennetta Tillman in the consolation of a life well spent says, "Now age is creeping on and He is still my friend." Yea, he will always be your friend.

I. S. Miller looking out on the stormy voyage says, "I have all confidence in the grand old ship."

W. and H. Tuttle unite their voices and say, "We know in whom we have trusted."

Geo. W. Haynes says. "Mother and I wish to say we love to read the good letters."

John Foore with his characteristic zeal says "Let us spread the gospel east, west, north and south."

T. J. Whitsett says, "May his promises and love be sufficient to keep us faithful until he comes again."

Karis Tillman writes "I thank the Lord that he has given me Christian parents."

Mary M. Renner says. "Let us work, watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation."

Sarah Bowman writes, "My hope is in the Lord's coming."

E. Plummer. "Before another year comes I may be asleep in Jesus."

John and Abbie Baker unite in saying, "What joy it gives us to read the loving testimonials."

J. M. Glotfelty speaking for the Church at Lanark, says, "We have buckled on the armor more firmly and entered the battle for Christ."

J. T. Prime breaks forth with "O for a thousand tongues to thank the God of our fathers that the Christian's hope is a glorious reality."

Currie Free says "Learn something more of God's promises."

Geo. Elton with his mathematical precision says, "Stick to exactly what the Bible says."

R. A. Humphrey with love in his heart says, "Brethren, if he so loved us we ought also to love one another."

Eliza A. Rahe says, "By God's help I am striving to walk in the narrow way, and do rejoice always."

Rachel A. Okley exhorts to "Live in grace and grow in the knowledge of the gospel."

William Goin writes, "The more we read and study the stronger our faith is in the coming kingdom.

Abner Oliver "May we all have our lamps trimmed and burning."

Mabel Carpenter, "Hold out faithful to the end."

Mary J. Craton, "I am expecting the return of our Lord and Master soon."

Mrs. Sarah Butcher, "I want to rejoice with you."

H. M. Babb, "I hope to meet you all there." Glorious hope, Father Babb.

Mrs. John Armitage "May we all so live that we may meet on the Evergreen Shore."

D. M. Hudler, "Labor to enter into rest." Brief and to the point.

W. W. Jaquith, "Rejoice that your redemption draweth nigh."

E. R. Boyer, "The Lord be praised for his precious promises."

Myron Young, "I want to do all that I can for my Master."

Mrs. N. G. Calkins, "God have mercy on me that I may hold out faithful to the end."

Izen M. Garton, "We will all meet in the kingdom."

Arlon Siple, "Ere long our King will come."

J. M. Olmstead, "May the God of heaven bless THE RESTITUTION."

Emma and Lee Southerland, "We have turned away from the majority and fallen in line with the little flock."

Mrs. Ollie Bradly, "I am one of the few who are still looking for the King of Beauty."

M. L. Adams, "Wife and I are still in the faith."

Mrs. E. T. Morris, "We are very lonely here." There is a time coming when you will not be so lonely.

J. F. Pierson, "Stand firm in the faith."

J. S. Hatch, "May the dear Lord reward them in his everlasting kingdom."

J. F. Wagoner, "God hasten the day when the curse shall roll from the earth as the vapors vanish from the sunlight."

Robert Railsback, "There will be more joys unspeakable."

J. D. Sheridan, "I feast every day on that bread that alone can give eternal life."

Amos Eaton. "I pray that we may be lively stones."

E. J. Merritt, "my faith is sure and steadfast in the Lord."

Mrs. M. F. Chapin, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?"

Mrs. M. A. Calder, "Strive to live faithful."

H. Murphy, "My faith is strong."

Ella R. States, "Hold fast the profession of faith."

Jennie Cox, "Christian love to all."

W. H. Stewart, "The glorious and grand meeting in prospect."

A. J. Eychaner. "Every prayer will help."

Finally Bro. B. W. Woodward closes the meeting with the statement, "O, I just want to praise the Lord." Well, let us all join him in praise and thanksgiving to him who liveth and reigneth forever. Bless his holy name forever and ever.

Here is the testimony of one hundred and three Christian believers, residing in twenty-one different states and in Canada. All arising in their places and testifying to the truths of the Bible, verified by their experience as Christians. I venture to say that there has never been anything like it before. The written voluntary testimony of one hundred and three persons, residing thousands of miles apart, given on invitation, at once and without delay or time to consult and all testifying to the same thing. The evidence of these witnesses is sufficient to overthrow all the arguments and assertions of all the infidels the world has ever produced.

R. S. DWIGGINS.

Dear Restitution:

We have read with pleasure and profit the many testimonies from the scattered members of the household of faith, contained in the last number of our paper. Many of the names of those who have responded to the call of Bro. Dwiggins, for a feast of letters have been familiar to me since my earliest childhood, and household words in my father's family. Many others are new, while the names of many have become familiar through the pages of THE RESTITUTION, and oh, what a cheering reflection it is, that there are so many who are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and waiting for the appearing of our Master, for the return of the nobleman who has gone into the far country to receive the kingdom, but will return as a thief in the night to the world; but to those who are looking for him he will appear without sin unto salvation." It is testified of him that he shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. And when he comes we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. The testimony is that he is coming to set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed, and that shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Dan. ii. 44. The promise to those who believe his word and obey his precepts, who do not stand still, but press onward in the fight, who are not carried about with every wind of doctrine, but who add to their faith all the Christian graces enumerated by the apostle Peter; who fear the Lord and think upon his name, and they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Mal. iii. 17. And again, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." While those who are carried away by the incessant attacks of evil that has swept so many from their moorings, out into the sea of unbelief, who when the "day cometh that shall burn as an oven shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. i. And they shall be "as though they had not been." Obadiah xvi. The Captain of our salvation has entered into the holy of holies, even heaven itself, there to await the appointed time to come forth from heaven to bless his people. The time of that coming is surely very near, for we have the troubles among the nations, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth. Wars, rumors of war and unparalleled preparation for war, and all the other signs which were to immediately precede the second advent. We are commanded to watch, and I trust we all are watching, and as the evils of the last days continue to increase, we will surely more earnestly pray "Thy kingdom come."

There are but few of us here. Father still continues to proclaim the Word of life. Some seem to be interested, but the majority will not endure sound doctrine, but heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. May we hold fast to the end, is the prayer of your brother in the hope of eternal life.

Editor Restitution:

We have watched THE RESTITUTION for two months to see a report of our October conference, at Scholls Ferry, Oregon, as prepared and forwarded by our secretary, Sister Brooks. We concluded that by some mishap the report did not reach you.

That conference was eventful, and stands most prominent in the history of the work in this far away northwest. Our attendance was large. Bro. Young was with us, and gave the dedication sermon for our new church, a roomy future home for our conference meetings. Bro. W. W. Jaquith and I continued the meetings over the following week. We enlisted a new standard bearer, a young man giving his first sermon during the meetings. You need not be surprised to hear that this same Eddie Groat is doing effectual work for the Master in coming years. Result of our ten days meeting: eighteen of our neighbors and our neighbor's children immersed.

November 3rd, I started out on second half of my fifth year's work as evangelist for Northwest conference. I visited Flatwood, Washington, where I gave ten discourses, and immersed two. November the 18th and 19, I gave three sermons at our home church (we call it Unity Chapel) spoke on the signs of the times, and immersed one more. Looking over the first month of the conference year, I find that I have buried twenty-one in baptism. Oh! how anxious we are that they may all walk in "newness of life." During a period of several weeks I was detained at and near home by the low lingering sickness of my brother Harvey, but December 13th, the enemy did his last work with him. Oh, how we long for the time when our Lord will fulfill his words, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death. "O, death I will be thy plagues, O, grave I will be thy destruction. When we may hear and take part in the glad joyous shout, "O, death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory?"

In the mean time I was under obligation to hold a discussion at Sherwood with Bishop Dillon, D. D. This discussion was arranged by a Friend's minister, a United Brethren minister, and one that in former years preached for the Christadelphians. We discussed the following questions: 1st, Do the Scriptures teach that the soul of man is conscious, or that it is unconscious between death and the resurrection? 2nd, Is the Scriptural doctrine of the punishment of the wicked utter destruction, or is it unending suffering?

It is presumable always, that a disputant does not know, is not competent to know, whether he wins or loses. In this case the Friend's minister told me, that at least half and some say two-thirds of the people are on your side.

I must say that this same bishop of the United Brethren Church is circulating a book, purporting to be a discussion between himself and Miles Grant, which on its face is a very unfair report, it having been prepared by himself after the debate, which took place a year ago last October, in Pennsylvania. I hope this may come to Miles Grant's notice.

W. L. SKEELS.

P. S. I see that so much interest was taken in the social talks through your Christmas and New Year's numbers, that I felt like suggesting that it might add interest to the paper to have a quarterly social meeting through it. Do not think me too forward in making this suggestion. Of course you might have to call some of us down before our talks were complete, so as to give room for others, but if you should announce that rule we would submit in good grace.

[The Conference Report was sent by Sister Brooks all right, but was by accident lost. We regret this very much, as this being the first meeting in the new church, it was especially desired that it be published. It cannot be helped now. —ED.]

Dear Restitution:

I have been reading the letters in THE RESTITUTION with great satisfaction. They all speak the same sentiment and hope. They are hoping for the return of the Nobleman that has gone into the far country to receive his kingdom and are looking for his return. This is my hope and has been for forty years. It does my soul good to read them. I am here alone. I have not heard the gospel preached for ten years and I see no one of our faith. It makes me feel lonely but I have the Bible and THE RESTITUTION for which I am thankful. Remember me in your prayers. I pray for all of like faith. Let us all stand fast in the faith that was once given to the saints. Let us be up and doing while the day lasts. Watch and pray, the time will soon come when we will all be together no more to part.

Enclosed find Postal Note for $3.00, $150 to pay for my paper, and $1.50 to send the paper to some poor brother that Brother Underwood may select.

Yours in hope.

Dear brothers and sisters:

I ask you to bear with this mortal for not being able to send his mite before. I am distressed with Catarrhal Bronchitus in my throat and lungs. I get no rest day nor night. Will you hold me up to the throne of heavenly grace that my faith fail not, and that when my Lord comes I can answer. I am indebted to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith for sending me the paper for these years without money and without price. May the Lord reward you with a bright crown at the resurrection morn that will be your glory for all time. I need more grace that I may be strong in Jesus the Christ. I live here alone, as it were, with no one near me that has the true gospel faith, and many hard names I am called because I believe that the saints will be rewarded at the Lord's second coming. Light has shone along my path and the gospel is more plain since THE RESTITUTION came in my possession. May the Lord bless the Church of God in Christ Jesus, and enlarge our hope from day to day, till we all shall meet in the kingdom of God at last to go in and out no more forever.

Yours in the one faith.

Editor Restitution:

How welcome are the weekly visits of your paper which we have been taking for almost thirty years. I have been a member of the one faith for over four years, being baptized with seven others, two sisters, three brothers, a brother-in-law and a neighbor, by my uncle, Geo. Elton.

How grand it is to read the letters from the different brethren and sisters of like precious faith who are scattered all over the continent.

I do not feel much like writing at this time as my heart is wrung with sorrow over the death of our dear beloved wife and mother.

She was always a devoted wife and loving mother, setting an example that would be well for any one to follow.

She died the afternoon of the last day of the old year. She was on a visit in the East when taken sick and was home only three days when she died. How hard it was to part with her when we know we will not hear that sweet voice or soft footsteps of her who has done so much for us; but we should not mourn as one without hope. She was a devoted Christian, loved by all who knew her. I feel so confident she will be raised at Christ's coming. Any one desiring to write us words of comfort through the columns of THE RESTITUTION would be thankfully read by the heart-broken husband and family.

O may the Lord soon come to reign on this earth is my prayer. Amen, and amen.

I remain your unworthy Sister, waiting for the soon coming kingdom.

☞ The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

WE will supply friends who wish tracts to distribute with "Pearls" and 4 page tracts at 40 cts per pound, postpaid. This makes about 600 pages.

BRO. A. J. Eychaner writing under date Jan. 29, says, "We have held meetings during the past week at Pierson, Sac City and Gladbrook with good interest.

IT certainly must be recognized as the right of an Editor to ask that names of contributors to his columns be given. Should one wish their name not given in the paper, they may sign as they please, but, the correct name should also be sent as a protection to the publisher. We cannot use articles unless given the name of the writer.

FATHER Mahoney of Brooklyn canvassed his parish from house to house and declares that hundreds of families are starving, and the results will be appalling to contemplate if relief does not come speedily. •

THE increase of knowledge that marks this age is without a parallel. Multitudes are running to and fro in all parts of the world; but alas, it is not the knowledge of God nor Jesus Christ whom he sent, so that eternal life will not be the outcome. •

THE papers report a trial for Witchcraft in the Methodist Church at Salem, Ohio, and an intense feeling against that church by the people. Rev. Hollister of Alliance is to conduct the trial. Surely this is progress backward that was not expected: although there is no knowing what people may say or do religiously who have no foundation of truth to build upon. •

IT is said that Myrtillus' shield secured him in the field and saved him from shipwreck by wafting him to the shore. But how much more serviceable is the shield of faith. By this the Christian overcomes his enemies and triumphs in the midst of difficulties, and like Paul can say at last, "I have fought the good fight I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the Righteous Judge will give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." •

THERE are two widely different answers to the question, what is man? Of course one of them is not true. We must choose between them. The Bible answer is this: "Man is like to vanity; his days are as a shadow that passeth away." One of the most recent answers of human complacence is this: "A man! no line can measure him; no limit can bound him. The archangel before the throne cannot outlive him. The stars shall die, but he will watch their extinguishment. The world will burn, but he will gaze on the conflagration. Endless ages will march on, he will watch the procession. A man! The masterpiece of God Almighty." Yes; we must choose between them. •

The Eastern World.

The information that comes from Europe through those who heed the "sure Word" is to the effect that the ground-swell of restlessness and discontent of every nationality is more and more marked. How could it be otherwise, when the excessive and ever-increasing military and naval expenditures is entailing such tremendous sacrifices? No wonder careful observers who know little of Jehovah's programme have fearful forebodings that society as at present constituted is in danger of entire overthrow. Signs of desperations are cropping out, and threats that they will carry such loads no longer are being muttered. Every country has its own grievances, but there is a bond of union between them all. Every year brings them closer and closer; and we notice that an international conference was lately held in Zurich and the proposal of a universal strike against militarism was discussed. And it is thought by some that that procedure will be adopted when the governments are engaged in the inevitable struggle now impending.

Cardinal Vaughan, in a speech recently delivered at Portsmouth, England's greatest naval depot, on the "Key to the Social Problem" said communism and atheism have seen a great development in the last two years. One of their societies held 140 meetings in London every week. He had from time to time listened to addresses delivered to the very worst passions of humanity. They were seditions, inflammatory and revolutionary, and their methods were wicked and delusive. They were scattering broadcast literature calculated to undermine the very foundations of the government and society.

The overturning of the existing order of things is part of the judgment written, and the means by which the inhabitants of the world learn righteousness. •

Change of Attitude.

We have often been denounced by the press as pessimists for insisting that worse and worse morally will be the condition of the world if the Bible be true, and that a crisis in the affairs of the world was rapidly approaching that would result in the resurrection of the Jews, nationally. But we notice that quite a change has come over the spirit of their dreams of late. Only yesterday one of our dailies remarked that the religious theorizers who believe that the time is not far distant when the Jews will return to their native land of Palestine and take possession thereof in fulfillment of ancient prophecy will see much of significance in the conference recently held in Paris and approved by the Rothchilds and other wealthy Jews of Europe looking to that end; and says that there is much of a wonderful interest in the history of the Jewish people. They never occupied a more remarkable position in the world than they do now. And that after passing through the most awful persecutions ever inflicted upon any people, they have risen through them all to the position where they practically control the money market of the world. And that Jewish bankers dictate to the princes and potentates of Europe. They furnish gold with which to change monetary systems, as in the recent case in Austria; and that they could return to Palestine and set up there again if they so desired, is entirely possible. But that they desire to do so is quite another thing." This means that those comfortably situated as in this country, do not want to go and will not go, no matter what poetic theorizers may say and do about it. God is nowhere. He is not consulted, because not in all their thoughts; they do not believe what God says about it, although their career has been a wonderful one.

And they do not consider that we do not have to theorize about it when the Great Jehovah says to them in language that cannot be mistaken for something else, "As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you, and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand." Ezek. xx. 33-34. And when he says again, "Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the nations whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land upon the mountains of Israel, and one King shall be a King to them all."......"And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their children's children forever, and my servant David shall be their prince forever...... My tabernacle shall also be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Ezek. xxxvii. 21-27. There is no room for theorizing after such emphatic declarations from him who changes not, and is all powerful to execute his will. What these people who talk of us as theorizers want, is faith in God; that would straighten them out, and make them stand on tip-toe to catch the first gleam of the morning without clouds ushered in by the Lion of the tribe of Judah—the bright and morning star. •

Infidelity.

"Will brother Joblin be so kind as to tell us in THE RESTITUTION, what a real infidel is?" All infidels are real infidels,—they are all *un*believers;—popularly those who do not believe in the Bible as a divine revelation are so called; and by many who live less exemplary lives, are regarded as being awfully wicked. For salvation purposes the mere belief that the Bible is the Word of God is of no value whatever. As long as a person does not from the heart believe the good message from God which it contains, and obey the conditions imposed he is an infidel;—an unbeliever. The gospel of Christ is powerful to save only those who believe it. And when we reflect that unbelievers are classed with hypocrites and other vile characters, it is reasonable to conclude that those who admit the divine authority of the Scriptures and yet refuse to regulate their lives by it, would be more hateful in the sight of God than those who have concluded that it is a human production.

While this subject has been called up we deem it timely to add a word about pious infidels. This may sound strange to some, but alas there are myriads of pious unbelievers; sincere unbelievers,—devout unbelievers. THE RESTITUTION goes out week after week to spread the good message that the gospel of Christ is the power God employs to save people,—and that no intimation has been given that any can be saved on other terms. On looking up the gracious propositions which compose the gospel of Christ we find they comprise eternal life in the kingdom of God on earth, with all their attendant glory, honor, majesty and power; and the conditions exacted are faith in the offer, reformation of life, baptism into Christ for the remission of past sin, and a godly life to the end. But suppose we think we have already the eternal nature of existence, and that at death we hie away to celestial realms, and care nothing—believe nothing about the kingdom on earth to which the poor of this world who are rich in faith are heirs, do we have any faith in the gospel? It is what is promised that makes up the gospel. If we believe something else we do not believe the gospel, and that constitutes us unbelievers, pious unbelievers. As there is not a passage in all God's Book which says piety is the power of God unto salvation, we have no alternative but to believe what God offers, or be counted as unbelievers—infidels. These are solemn considerations for the household of faith. With what earnestness and tenderness it should induce us to labor with those near and dear to us, to see if we cannot lead them to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, before the acceptable time expires. •

Though t[illegible] scare makes its appearance [illegible]ularly at this season of the year, there is apparently greater danger of an outbreak among the European powers than ever before. The Russian government demands that the Kilia mouth of the Danube be made navigable, which would give her a chance to ascend that river with ships of battle. Perhaps nobody is better qualified to judge of the European situation than Mr. Poultney Bigelow. This American gentleman is received by the highest and most influential persons in Europe, by reason of his eminent trustfulness and integrity. At the request of the Associated Press, Mr. Bigelow gave the following sketch on the European situation, shortly after his return to London from Germany:—

"Russia wants Constantinople, and is preparing to take it. Russia cannot succeed in accomplishing this desire without first fighting Austria. She cannot fight Austria without fighting Germany at the same time.

Russia wants the mouth of the Danube—a desire as strange as if France should want to reoccupy Louisiana. Russia, therefore, has one enemy particularly in mind, that is, Germany, and in this hatred of Germany was born the comical friendship between Russia and France, for France means to get back Alsace-Lorraine.

The gravity of the present outlook is not so much in the fact that Russia and France individually dislike Germany, but in the fact that they are united in a hatred that absorbs every other passion. That France is thirsting for war admits of scant doubt to those who saw the delirious behavior of the French people in welcoming the Russian sailors at Toulon and Paris, nor is there any doubt that she is now better fitted for war than she has ever been.

Russia sounded France, and was well satisfied with the result. When war is declared, the two are one, army and navy.

The Russian government has now massed all its active army west of Moscow and the great bulk in Poland. It is persecuting the German language and the Lutheran religion in the Baltic provinces, and is fanning rather than allaying the prevailing hatred for Germany. An editor in Poland was recently threatened with transportation to Siberia because he ventured to reprint an impartial article in the Century Magazine on the Emperor of Germany. The editor was told that in Russia the people do not need to have the German ruler praised.

Russia has been observing great secrecy of late with regard to movements on her railways. Sometimes several days have passed when all traffic on the roads has been stopped, save that of the government. Oddly enough, the money she has been spending upon forts and stores has nearly all been expended against the German frontier. She knows that she must settle with Germany before she can get the Bosphorus.

The German Emperor, meanwhile, is awake, and knows what is passing about him, but he knows, also, that he has much to lose and little to gain by a successful campaign. German men of business feel this, too, and that the next war will be largely devoted to pulling chestnuts out of the fire for England.

The Kaiser knows that in a war with Russia he will be fighting the battle of all civilized countries against a power representing commercial stagnation, political barbarism, and religious intolerance." —The Literary Digest.

Who are the Evangelical?

This question has of late been discussed among the ministers here. In answer to the question it is important to know what is meant by the word "evangelical."

The Editor of the N. Y. Witness, a religious paper that is widely circulated among different sects, says in a late paper that he believes in an "evangelical gospel." This is tautological, as both words mean exactly the same thing. The Greek word translated "gospel" is "evangelon" which is made of Angelon which means a message and the prefix ev, (good) makes it a good message. The gospel of Christ is therefore a good message sent by Jesus Christ the Messenger to the world, more than 1800 years ago. The all-important question is, what is the purport of the good message? It means a great and eternal salvation and the inheritance of an everlasting kingdom on the earth, "under the whole heaven,"—first, a thousand years of millennial peace and glory, and after that the new heavens and earth wherein righteousness alone will dwell. 2 Peter, iii. 13.

The gospel is two-fold.—The first is, the gospel of salvation, which is immediately followed by the kingdom. "In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the Word of truth, the gospel of your salvation." Eph. i. 13.

What is meant by the good message of salvation, and when will the promise of it be fulfilled to those who comply with the conditions?

Salvation means the redemption of the body, and the change to a spiritual, immortal body at the resurrection of the just. Proof.—Paul wrote the church at Rome that he was "waiting for the redemption of his body, for we are saved by hope." These words make redemption of the body and salvation identical, and that he was only saved by hope—"waiting for the redemption of his body." Rom viii. 23.

Again, "For God hath not appointed us to wrath but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ." "So, Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix. 28.

Salvation then will be at the second appearing of Christ.

Now the Christian can only be an heir of salvation. The heirship always comes first and afterwards the inheritance. "Are they not all (the angels) ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. i. 14. Jesus said to the people and his disciples, "Whosoever will come after me, let him take up his cross and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it, for what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life? R. V. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Mark viii. 34.

Paul writes to the Romans, "I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth it." Rom. i. 15.

God has done his part in giving the strongest kind of testimony to prove the truth of the good message he has sent to the world, and those who believe it with their whole heart and are baptized shall be saved at the second appearing.

It is also very important to understand and believe the "Gospel of the Kingdom of God."

In the 2nd and 7th chapters of Daniel, five universal, consecutive kingdoms were predicted, and the first four have arisen and fallen in exact fulfillment of the prediction.

The fifth universal kingdom must be somewhere near. Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome were literal kingdoms. The fifth predicted in connection, which the God of heaven will set up on the ruins of the fourth must be literal also, or the plain rules of grammar be sacrificed.

This kingdom was to be preached in all the world as a witness during this Christian Era, that as many as possible might be taken out of both Jews and Gentiles to become heirs of the promised kingdom, in this age, and in the age to come inheritors. So the apostle James says, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" When will the promise be fulfilled? Ans. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, he will say to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 31.

Hear the apostle Paul, (1 Cor. xv. 50) "Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. Then death will be swallowed up in victory. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

There must be a victory over death, "our last enemy" and the grave, and the saints of all ages become incorruptible, spiritual bodies, before they can inherit an incorruptible kingdom.

Let us take the testimony of another apostle nearly at the close of the Bible. In his inspired vision of the future, he saw, after the battle of the great day of the Lord, and the binding of Satan, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years or millennium was past, he saw "thrones, and the millions of martyrs and others sitting upon them, and they lived, (came to life) and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were ended. This is the first resurrection. Blessed is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power, for they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 5.

The last plagues spoken of and the last great contest for universal empire between the King of kings, and Lord of lords, and the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies, described in the 19th chapter of Rev., also the binding of Satan for one thousand years must precede the first resurrection and millennial reign of Christ and his immortal saints over the nations. Then will be fulfilled the promise in Luke i. 32, that the Lord God will give to him the throne of his Father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever.

The prophet Isaiah says, ("xxiv 23.) "Then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Jerusalem and in Mount Zion and before his ancients gloriously. Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations as when he fought in the day of battle. The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee, and he shall be King over all the earth." Zech. xiv.

"His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." Is not this the true gospel of salvation and the kingdom? If so, I am "evangelical," for I have preached it 50 years.

Paul wrote to a certain church, that if any man preached any other gospel instead of the one he had preached a curse would rest upon them.

A few more testimonies of Christ and the apostles, respecting the true gospel of the kingdom of God.

"Ye are they who have continued with me in my trials, and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on my throne judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel." Luke xxi. 28.

"To him that overcometh (in the good fight) will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. This will be at his future coming.

Matt. xxv. 31. "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. iii. 13.

"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

John says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, neither shall there be any more pain." Rev. xxi. 1 4. "He which testifieth these things, saith, surely, I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

I claim to be "evangelical" because I believe in the good message of Christ and his apostles, instead of the false gospel that now prevails.

Obituary.

Some lives like meteors, influence those around them by their sudden, short-timed and brilliant light; others, like stars, exert a wider and more lasting influence by their steady, never failing light. An example of the latter we have known in the life of Miss Eva Halstead.

Miss Halstead was born in La Porte County, Indiana, in 1855, and died at Cooper Mt., near Portland, Oregon, September 28, 1893. From childhood she showed a mind of unusual strength and accuracy, and early began that intellectual and religious career which has influenced so many, but especially the young with whom she came in contact as a teacher.

She began teaching in the public schools of Indiana at the age of fifteen and continued in this work until she was twenty-one, when she entered a ladies' seminary at Ladoga, Ind., from which she graduated in three years. Later she completed the classical course in the Central Normal College at Danville, Ind. It was here she met Prof. J. H. Miller. When he was elected President of Campbell University, Holton, Kan., he at once decided to secure Miss Halstead as one of his corps of teachers. Her strong accurate mind, and her happy teaching faculty, coupled with her advanced scholarship and great moral worth, convinced him that she would make a valuable member of his university faculty. Consequently Miss Halstead entered Campbell University as a Professor of Latin and Greek in the fall of 1882. It was in this broader field that she began to make herself really felt along the lines of higher education and moral reform. She remained at Campbell University with great success until 1889, when overwork and failing health induced her to give up the Professor's chair for the lecture platform. She spent one year in Kansas in organizing W. C. T. U. work, and appeared often on the platform as an advocate for prohibition. She then removed with her invalid sister to Portland, Oregon. Shortly after her arrival in Portland she was called to fill the chair of ancient languages in Spokane College, Spokane, Washington. This position she filled to the entire satisfaction of all for two years, when she accepted a similar position in the Puget Sound University at Tacoma, Washington. She filled this position until the end of the school year of 1892-93.

As a teacher, Miss Halstead had few equals and no superiors. Her thoroughness, accuracy and enthusiasm never failed to awaken a desire for like qualities in the student under her. Teaching was her profession by choice, and in all her years of hard toil her interest never flagged, nor her work grew irksome. She allowed nothing, personal interest nor comfort to come between her and her work, and many of the thousands of the young people who came under her instruction can testify that no sacrifice was too great for her to make if she could thereby benefit them. As a result she had a strong hold upon students, was appreciated and was justly popular. Her interest and influence in reform work were, if possible, greater than in educational work. Truth, right and principle were very dear to her, and she could always be counted upon as being upon the right side of every reform movement, and a leader in the same. She was actively engaged in reform work wherever she was, and never failed to create an interest in temperance reform and the equal suffrage movement. She was naturally of a quiet, retiring disposition, and consequently did not make many intimate friends, but she was appreciated and loved most by those who new her best. While she would not allow even a friend to stand between her and right, her friendship was always marked by constancy and charity for the one befriended. She was always cheerful and happy, while impressing people with the idea that life was a reality, she impressed them with the thought that there was something in the present worth living for.

During her last illness she seemed to realize that her work on earth was finished, and although a great sufferer she uncomplainingly awaited her reward. Miss Eva Halstead now rests in Lone Fir Cemetery, Portland. She has gone from us but her life is still felt, and will long continue in its influence on the thousands whom she has helped to make better.—Holton Kansas Paper.

Poetry.

Now.

If you have a kind word—say it,
Weary hearts soon sink to rest;
If you owe a kindness—pay it,
Life's sun hurries to the west.

Can you do a kind deed—do it,
From despair some soul to save;
Bless each day as you pass through it,
Marching onward to the grave.

If some [illegible] thing for tomorrow
You are dreaming—do it now;
From the future do not borrow;
Frost soon gathers on the brow.

Speak thy word, perform thy duty,
Night is coming deep with rest,
Stars will gleam in faultless beauty,
Heaven whisper o'er thy breast.

Days for deeds are few, my brother,
Then, today fulfil thy vow;
If you mean to help another,
Do not dream it—do it now.

Sign of the Messiahship of Jesus.

"An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it but the sign of Jonah the prophet: for as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Matt. xii. 39, 40.

The popular supposition that our Lord was crucified on Friday, is out of harmony with "the sign." The supposition is built upon the request of the Jews to have the legs of those being crucified broken, that they may be removed, because the next day was the Sabbath, and it is known that Saturday was the Jews' Sabbath, and the day preceding Saturday was Friday. If we refer to Matt. xxviii. 1, we find our Lord was raised Saturday evening. "Now late on the Sabbath day as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," etc. (R. V.) Now this was near six o'clock Saturday evening. From this reckoning we have Friday night, and all day Saturday until six o'clock p. m. This gives us only one day, and one night. If this is the best reckoning we can get, then his "sign" is a complete failure.

Now, if our readers will follow me carefully in this brief study, I will prove to you from the Bible that our Lord was in the grave just "three days and three nights," no more and no less, but just the exact time according to his own Word.

In the first place, let me refer you to the law concerning the sacrifice of the passover lamb, as found in Exod. xii. 3-6:

"Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house:

And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.

Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats:

And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening. Margin (Heb.) "between the two evenings."

The above regulation with regard to the passover feast has a much higher significance than the object for which Israel observed it. It points to another "lamb (that) shall be without blemish," who should also be sacrificed on "the fourteenth day of the first month," "between the two evenings," when all of the "old leaven," should be abolished, by those who observe this feast. See I Cor. v. 7, 8.

"Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us:

Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth."

Now, "Christ our passover (was) sacrificed for us," on "the fourteenth day of the first month," "between the two evenings," and not after the time for the slaying of the passover lamb has passed, as the apostasy teaches, and in this is the solution of the difficulty. See Mark xiv. 12:

"And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover?"

Here we have a precise date to start with "the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover."

See Mark xiv. 16-24.

And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

"And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

And as they sat, and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, one of you which eateth with me, shall betray me.

And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve that dippeth with me in the dish.

The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body.

And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

And he said unto them, This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many."

Now we arrived at the evening of the first day when "they killed the passover." He then enlightens them as to what shall occur "this night." He says:

"And Jesus said unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me to night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all." Verse 27-31.

In verses 66-72 we read:

"And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

And the maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept."

This brings us to about three o'clock in the morning, when he was before the high priest.

First thing Wednesday morning they took him before Pilate. See Mark xv. 1.

"And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and the scribes, and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate."

Pilate tries him, and finds "no fault," but yields to the clamor of the Jews, washes his hands in token that he is innocent of his blood, and delivers him to be crucified. See verse 25.

"And it was the third hour, and they crucified him."

The third hour beginning at six o'clock A. M., which would make it nine o'clock on Wednesday morning when he was placed on the cross.

See verses 33-37:

"And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land, until the ninth hour.

And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias.

And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost."

From the sixth to the ninth hour was "darkness over the whole land," that is, from noon to three o'clock in the afternoon. At three o'clock Wednesday afternoon he died.

See verses 42-47:

"And now, when the even was come, (because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath),

Joseph of Arimathea, an honorable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Jesus, beheld where he was laid."

We have now arrived at Wednesday evening, when Joseph buried him. And this Wednesday evening was "the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath." See verse 42, as above quoted.

What sabbath was this which occurred on Thursday?

See John xix. 30, 31:

"When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an high day) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away."

No weekly sabbath at any time was ever considered to be a special "high day," but "that sabbath day was." Its origin is found in Lev. xxiii. 5-7:

"In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover.

And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread.

In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein."

Now as we have seen, our Lord died on "the fourteenth day of the first month, even the Lord's passover," as will be seen in our citation of Mark xiv. 12, and what follows.

The next day, then, was the "fifteenth day," "an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein." Hence, it was "the day before" this sabbath, on which our Lord died, and not the weekly sabbath.

It was on Thursday, the fifteenth day of the first month, this "holy convocation," on which the Romans placed a guard at the grave. See Matt. xxvii 62-66.

"Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate.

Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again.

Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, and make it as sure as you can.

So they went and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch."

This guard held possession of the sepulchre Thursday, and Friday up to six o'clock Saturday night. See Matt. xxvii. 1-7:

"In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

And behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow.

And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay.

And go quickly, and tell his disciples, that he is risen from the dead, and behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you."

The time specified here is "in the end of the sabbath," or as the Revised Version has it: "Now late on the sabbath day, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week," etc. It was the day previous to the first day of the week." Now this was about six o'clock Saturday evening. At this time the guard was still there. See verse 4: "And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men."

Now to sum up the foregoing evidence in brief, what do we find?

Tuesday, 6 P. M. "He sat down with the twelve." Matt. xxvi. 20.

3 o'clock A. M. "The second time the cock crew." Mark xiv. 72.

6 o'clock, A. M. "Behold your King." John xix. 14.

Wednesday 9 A. M. "They crucified him." Mark xv. 25.

Noon. "There was darkness over all the land." Matt. xxvii. 45.

3 o'clock P. M. "Jesus cried with a loud voice." Matt. xxvii. 46.

6 o'clock P. M. "Laid him in a sepulchre." Mark xv. 46.

First day in the grave. Fifteenth day of the first month, the Paschal sabbath, sunset Wednesday to sunset Thursday.

Second day Sunset Thursday to sunset Friday.

Third day. Sunset Friday to sunset Saturday.

First night. Wednesday.
Second night. Thursday.
Third night. Friday.

Hence we find with a clear Scripture proof to back every step, we have just three days and three nights, nothing more and nothing less. Oh, how true and exact is God's Word in every detail.

W. H. WILSON.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 19.

1. And he entered into and was passing through Hiericho;

2. And lo, a man Zachaios by name, and he was a chief-taxgather and rich;

3. And he was trying to see Jesous, who he was, and was unable by reason of the crowd, because he was small of his age;

4. And running on in front he ascended a sycamore tree to see him, because he was about to pass along that way.

5. And when Jesous had come to that place, he looked up and saw him, and said unto him, Zachaios haste and come down; For it behooveth me today to abide at thy house.

6. And he made haste and came down and received him rejoicing.

7. And when they saw it they were all murmuring, saying, He hath gone in to put up with a man who is an obdurate sinner.

8. But Zachaios stood and said unto the Lord, Lo the half of my possessions, O Lord, I am giving to the beggars, and if I have cheated any one out of anything I am paying it back fourfold.

9. And Jesous said unto him, Today hath salvation occurred unto this house, because he also is a son of Habraam.

10. For the Son of Man hath come to seek and to save that which hath been lost.

11. And while they were listening to these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Hierousalem, and they thought that the kingdom of God was to be manifested straightway.

12. He said therefore, a certain well-born man went into a far country to take for himself a kingdom and return.

13. And calling ten of his own bond-servants he gave unto them ten muai (50 make a talent) and said unto them, Engage in business until I come.

14. And his citizens hated him and sent an embassy after him, saying, We do not intend to have this person rule over us as king.

15. And it came to pass when he had received the kingdom he returned and said that those bond-servants should be summoned, to whom he had given the money (silver) that he might learn what business they had done.

16. And the first arrived saying thy mua hath produced ten muai.

17. And he said unto him, Well done, good bond-servant. Because thou hast become faithful in a least thing, be one who hath official-power over ten cities.

18. And the second came saying, Thy mua, Lord, hath made five muai.

19. And he said unto him, Do thou also come to be over five cities.

20. And another came saying, Lo thy mua (50 muai make a talent) which I have had laid away in a coarse linen cloth (a sweat-cloth.)

21. For I was afraid of thee, because thou art an austere man. Thou takest up that which thou hast not placed and thou reapest that which thou hast not sown.

22. Saith he unto him, out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked bond-servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man taking up that which I had not placed and reaping that which I had not sown;

23. And why didst thou not give my money to a table (that is loan it) and when I came I should have done it (that is it would have been my act through you as my factor) with interest.

24. And to those standing by he said, Take the mua away from him and give it to him who hath the ten muai.

25. And they said unto him Lord, he hath ten muai.

26. I say unto you, that unto the one who hath there will have been given. But from the one who hath not, from him will have been taken even that which he hath.

27. Moreover these my enemies who purposed not to have me rule over them as king, lead here and slay there in my presence.

28. And when he had said these things he went his way on before going up to Hierosoluma.

29. And it came to pass as he drew nigh to Bethphage and Bethania at the foot of the mountain called the Mount of the Olive orchards, he sent two of his disciples,

30. Saying, Withdraw to the village over opposite; and as ye are going your way into it, ye will find an ass's colt tied, upon which no man hath ever sat, and loose and lead him.

31. And if any asketh you, Why are loosing? In this wise shall ye say, The Lord hath need of him.

32. And when those sent had gone they found even as he had told them.

33. And as they were loosing the colt his lords said unto them, Why are loosing the colt?

34. And they said, The Lord hath need of him.

35. And they led him unto Jesous; And casting their outer-garments on the colt, they mounted Jesous thereupon.

36. And as he was going his way, they strewed their outer-garments on the way.

37. And as he was drawing nigh unto the declivity of the Mount of the Olive-trees; all the multitude of the disciples began hailing to praise God with a great voice for all the works of ability which they had seen.

38. Saying, Blessed be the King who cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven and glory among highest ones.

39. And some of the Pharisees from the multitude said unto him, Teacher, reprove thy disciples.

40. And he answered and said unto them, I say unto you, If these keep silence, the stones will cry out.

41. And when he had drawn nigh, seeing the city, he lamented over it saying,

42. Would that thou hadst known in this day, even thou the things pertaining to peace; But now they have been hid from thine eyes.

43. Because Days will come upon thee, and thine enemies will cast up a trench around thee; and will encompass and constrain thee on every side;

44. And will dash thee and thy offspring within thee to the ground, and will not leave a stone upon a stone within thee, because thou didst not know (recognise) the appointed time of thy visitation.

45. And entering into the temple he began to cast out those who were selling, saying unto them, It hath been written, And my house will (or shall) be a house for votive-prayer; but ye have made it a cave of robbers.

47. And he was teaching daily in the temple; and the chief-priests and the scribes were seeking to destroy him, as were the chief men of the royal-people.

48. And they found nothing they could do; For the royal-people all hung upon him to hear him.

COMMENT.

"Well-born" instead of "Nobleman" R. V.

"Bond-servant" instead of "servant" merely R. V. It makes all the difference in the world here, as the whole gist of the parable turns on this.

"Muai" instead of "pounds" R. V. The gist of the trust committed here is in the primitive significance of this word "mua" something to be remembered and put to good use—The root appears in "mim—[illegible]"—to remember.

"What business they had done" instead of "what they had gained by trading" R. V.

"A least thing" instead of "a very little" R. V.

"A Sweat-cloth" instead of "napkin" R. V. Literally "A coarse linen cloth."

"Placed" instead of "laid down" R. V. The same parlance we use now in handling money or loans. How would it sound now to talk about "laying down" a loan instead of "placing it."

"Unto a table" instead of "into the bank" R. V. Another idiom. They did not have "banks" in those days.

"I should have done it" instead of "I should have required it" R. V. Another idiom in the parlance of "Exchange."

"Ass's colt" instead of "colt" merely R. V. Remember this a fulfillment of a specific prophecy and this is not an unimportant matter, as it had to be an "Ass's colt" to fulfill the prophecy.

"Hail" instead of "rejoice" R. V.

"Teacher" instead of "Master" R. V.

"Would that thou hadst known" instead of "If thou hadst known" R. V. Another common idiom in the Greek where the conclusion is Elidid.

"Cave" instead of "den" R. V. There is another word for a "den" in the Greek.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find P. O. Order for the paper. I send 75 cents to pay for Brother Geo. Ridlen. I do not know his address but suppose you do as you made an appeal for him in the Jan, 17, number, but if he has been supplied, send it to any one that needs it. I wish I could pay for sending a dozen copies to the poor ones but do not feel able at present. We think so much of the dear RESTITUTION we want every one who loves the Lord to have it to read. I have to tell you of the loss to Brother Stephen Thomas, whose house was destroyed by fire and nearly all its contents. It comes pretty hard on him as he had just moved and had by hard work laid in his winter's provision and he has six in his family. He was having meetings in his house, and speaking of the "good news of the kingdom" to interested audiences. How strange are the ways of providence as they seem to us poor, short sighted mortals, but, "He doeth all things well" though we may not see at present. Bro. Thomas was a nephew of the late Dr. L. C. Thomas.

Yours in Israel's hope.

PRESENTS FOR FRIENDS.

I hereby offer until further notice one copy of "The Gospel of the Kingdom," leather gilt binding; one copy of same in cloth binding; one copy of "Twelve Words;" one of 8-page tract; and one of "Seeking and Finding," all for the low price of one dollar. This offer is made for the good of the cause of truth. Send to Wiley Jones, Manchester, Va.

A through Car to California via the Nickel Plate Road once a week after March 1st.—No. 8.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have canvassed the State of Florida as I have had opportunity. It has been the decision that what we need is an evangelist to carry the message to the perishing, and bring about organization. To meet with the success we hope for, we need the cooperation of every one who believes the truth. We need your prayers, your sympathy and your financial aid. We do not ask for great things nor large amounts, but, let every one "lay by as the Lord has profited you." Send your offering to Thos. Dowling, Live Oak, Fla. He will appropriate every dollar to the Lord's work.

Brethren, now seems to be an open field for work in Florida. Will you come to the rescue, or will you let the opportunity go by. There are no organized churches here and it is a field for missionary work and any one prompted with the spirit of love to help us, your offering will be thankfully received. I know of many in other states who have plenty of everything, and know nothing of the hardships a minister has to undergo to spread the truth where it has never been known. Can you not spare $1.00 or $5.00, or $10.00 for the Lord's work in Florida. Come, brethren, help us. We are willing to do all we can to tell the good news to others who have not yet heard that the kingdom is near.

Your brother in the vineyard.

N. H. GRISELMAN.

MARRIED.

At the residence of the bride's parents, Jan., 21st, 1894, Mr. F. M. Godfrey of Rushville, and Miss Nancy J. Watkins of Gorden, Neb. They took the midnight train for Hot Springs, S. D., their future home, where Mr. Godfrey expects to engage in the mercantile business. The best wishes of their many friends go with them. May God add his blessing.

ALMUS ADAMS.

Has your subscription expired? If so, don't let it remain so.

Kansas Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised for the purpose of sending an evangelist to isolated brethren that are desirous of having the Gospel proclaimed in their vicinity and are not able financially to bear the expense.

Those wishing to have an evangelist sent to them, can correspond with the Secretary, L. A. Chaplin, Ashton, Kansas. Those wishing to contribute to this fund may send the amount to the Treasurer, W. H. Bernard, Oxford, Kansas.

Previously published,	$135.00
Previously used, for S. C. Oliver, to go to Oklahoma,	$15.00

California reached easily via the weekly through car which will run over the Nickel Plate Road after March 1st.—No 8.

[illegible] Moyer died Dec. 10th, [illegible] at his home Clarksville, Iowa, aged 80 years and 7 months. Father lived to a good, old age, by reason of his strength he exceeded the limit of three score and ten, and passed the line of four score years. He had been gradually failing for the past two or three years. His pain and trouble has ceased, and now that he is in the sleep profound, he will not be disturbed until the sounding of the seventh and last trumpet of God.

About the year 1839, father settled in Laporte Co., Indiana, and shortly afterward united with the Baptists. In 1843, the Baptists became greatly agitated by virtue of lectures and publications of Wm. Miller, on the expiration of the prophetic numbers of Daniel's prophecy. Wm. Miller was himself a member of the Baptist denomination, and from this fact it was but natural that his expositions of the prophecies would enlist attention among his own sect or people. It was not, however, confined to the Baptists, but created a religious sensation that extended all over the country, and more or less among all religious denominations. The stagnant waters of the church-going people were greatly stirred up, and men and women began searching the Scriptures, and especially the old prophets. They may not have revered the church and its creed less, but the Bible more. Although quite young I can remember the lively meetings, and fervency of spirit that prevailed among those styled Millerites. One family in particular do I call to mind, who became very active and zealous in the study of the prophetic Scriptures. I refer to the Catlins, consisting of four brothers and one sister, all of whom have doubtless fallen asleep in death years ago. No religious meeting was lacking in spirit when the Catlins were present. In later years, N. M. Catlin became an able expounder of the Scriptures. It was doubtless through him that father received his insight into the teaching of the Bible. I have in my possession one of N. M. Catlin's publications, entitled "Protestantism versus the Gospel," which is hardly surpassed in clearness of expression and Scriptural soundness by anything published in later years. The prophetic expositions of Wm. Miller were only the beginning of a new era, characterized by many trials and triumphs, as a few at least have learned by sad experience. The truth had for a long time been disjointed, scattered into fragments, and concealed under a prodigious quantity of theological rubbish, which had to be removed before a people could be prepared for the Lord's coming. If the Lord had come in 1843, he would have found scarcely one ready to co-operate understandingly in the great work of the time and age that follows. It can now, in the light of subsequent events, be clearly seen that neither Wm. Miller nor any of his co-laborers realized or remotely apprehended the nature of the work that had to be accomplished before the crisis of the advent would occur. How fortunately for all concerned that the Bridegroom did not then return. Surely the disappointment was a blessing in disguise, both to that generation, and the one that now is. When I take a retrospective view of things in the luminous light of history and actual experience, and reflect upon what in the providence of God we have been compelled to pass through, the separations, alienations, heart-searchings, heart-burnings, and other discouragements incidental to the developement and manifestation of the truth as a divinely revealed system, I am constrained to look upon the past as a 40 years' sojourn in the wilderness, and still we are in the desert. We are still in that condition where iniquity abounds, and love grows cold,—where perversity, rebellion and lawless instincts and appetites hold high carnival in riotous living, deeds of violence, and the carnal pleasures of the hour. It is through much tribulation that men and women must pass to put their loyalty to Christ and his Word to the test. It is not all sunshine,—many gloomy and cloudy days occur. Many trying ordeals come, often times unexpectedly. The Lord's personal coming was but one element of the truth, made very prominent in 1843-4, but afterwards other elements were discovered, then followed contention and separation. They that exercise faith and courage, and appreciated their opportunity moved on, regretting and sorrowing for the disaffected and rebellious that were left behind. The nature of man—the unconscious state of the dead, probation after the Lord's coming, Israel's restoration, what constitutes a valid baptism, the nature and pre-existence of Christ—all these questions speedily followed from 1844 to 1850, and all over the country contention, agitation and separation prevailed. Even to this day some of the foregoing are still in dispute, and there are other items of doctrine which I have not mentioned that created no little discussion.

Many could see nothing but ruin and desolation as the result, and greatly deplored so much disputation, not discerning that God's truth in its apostolic simplicity must be revived in these last days in order to make ready a people, waiting for the return of the long absent Judge of the quick and the dead. Some fell by the wayside, some turned to the world, and became identified with the votaries of mammon and the intoxicating wine of worldly pleasures; others sought comfort in the pews of orthodox churches, and still others excused themselves on the plea of good Lord and good devil, serve both a little, and take your chances as to the final outcome. But distinct and separate from all others is that class, who having tasted the good Word of God, and having discovered in part at least, his revealed purpose, were determined not to be disheartened by trials, nor discouraged by even the glaring and scandalous infirmities of human nature when actuated by the Diotriphesian spirit of selfishness. Their only ambition is to know the will of the Creator and do it. Such do not permit the mere creature great or small to blind their eyes to duty, nor to stand antagonisticly between them and the God whom they seek to serve. The larger a man is exercised in the school of Christ, the more he is sensibly impressed with his own individual responsibility to a Master who requires our all in his service the whole heart, mind and strength. "He that knoweth his Master's will, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." Knowledge incurs great responsibility, and no man under the law to God can afford to be indifferent. Death is the heritage of sin, and came into the world by man. There is no way of escaping until the Lord comes, and changes the course of events. It does now appear as if the groaning creation would soon find relief through the manifestation of the Son of God. The year 1894 as compared with 1844, certainly indicates a ripening of the situation. Fifty years ago there was no sign indicating that Jehovah was remembering his land, or his ancient people Israel. But not so now, for events in the east are surely shaping and moulding into visible form the conditions required by the prophetic word. It is a long time since death entered the world, but it may be a surprisingly short time to the reversal of the present order, and the resurrection of the dead shall have come as an astounding fact. Some one has said, "truth is stronger than fiction." It is not impossible that in the near future, we shall see as facts, what we now cherish fondly, but feebly as a theory, clouded perhaps by the many doubts of the adversary. "Precious in the sight of the Lord are his saints in death" will yet be verified, silencing all human sophistry and removing all doubts forever.

Geo. Moyer.

Died at his home Scholls Ferry, Oregon, Harvey Skeels, Dec. 13th, 1893.

Deceased was a native of Union Co., Ohio. He moved to Piatt Co., Ill., at early manhood where he married. He and his wife were immersed by C. C. Marston, in the winter of 1870. They moved to Oregon in the year 1874. Like many others he drifted considerably from his early religious views. During his last years he held to what is termed the "Larger Hope," but showed a kindly Christian spirit towards those that could not indorse his views.

He was the second one to bid farewell to life of a family of eight brothers and one sister, and died of the same disease that struck down Brother Levi last June; but in Bro. Harvey's case the paralysis was gradual, sometimes called "creeping paralysis." Bro. W. W. Jaquith gave us the comfort of the resurrection hope in an earnest and sympathetic sermon.

Brother Harvey lived an honest conscientious life. May his bereaved widow, his three sons and two daughters, and we of his father's family live equally as honest and conscientious, that we may have the hope of eternal life, as heirs of the Kingdom of God.

W. L. Skeels.

Mrs. [illegible] Warbritton died at Williamsport, Ind., Jan. 22, 1894, at the age of 81 years, 18 days. Her illness was long and tedious, but apparently without suffering. For days previous to her death, she lay in a semi-conscious condition, and the end was merely cessation of breath.

Mrs. Warbritton's life has spoken for itself among those who knew her, and of death and the future, she had no cause to be afraid.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, if each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe, and at the low price it seems as if this might be done our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893 the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

S. C. Oliver, Pres.
E. F. [illegible], Sec'y.

Thoughts About Christ.

As He was in the Past—As He is Now—And as He will be in the Future.

Whether the religious world is right or not in celebrating the 25th of December as the anniversary of our Savior's birth, it will do us no harm, but may be profitable, to review his life and work from birth to death, or to consider him,—

1. As He was in the past. CHRIST is an official title. The word is Greek, from Christos, meaning in English, an anointed one. We read in the Bible that Saul, and David, and Solomon, were anointed with oil, as kings over Israel. And because commanded to be done by the Lord, they were the Lord's Anointed ones, or his Christs. See 1 Sam. xxvi. 9-12; 2 Sam. xxiii. 1. Jesus was prophetically spoken of as the Lord's anointed. Psa. ii. 2; xlv. 7: Isa. lxi. 1. But as David was not the Lord's Anointed one until Samuel anointed him; (1 Sam. xvi. 12, 13;) so Jesus was not the Lord's Christ (Luke ii. 26,) until he was anointed by his Father with the Holy Spirit at his baptism. See Luke iv. 18; Acts iv. 27; x. 38. So also, as David was placed under trial for a long time after his anointing, being persecuted by Saul, before he ascended the throne; so Jesus was tried, tempted, and made perfect through sufferings, after he was anointed, before he was called "into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." Luke xix. 12. Waiting for "the times of restitution of all things," (Acts iii. 21,) he sits at Jehovah's right hand, "expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." Heb. x. 13.

The apostle Paul speaks of "the man Christ Jesus," 1 Tim. ii. 5; and Isaiah prophetically says, "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Isa. liii. 3. Jesus Christ our Lord "was made of the seed of David according to the flesh," (Rom. i. 3; Acts ii. 30; xiii. 23,) or according to the geneological tables given in Matt. i. and Luke iii. When the time arrived, previously foretold, "God sent forth his Son, having been born of a woman," Gal. iv. 4. He was begotten by the power of the Highest, born of the virgin Mary, named Jesus by the command of the angel Gabriel, and should be called a son of the Highest, or of God. Luke i. 31-35; ii. 21; Matt. i. 20-25. That this remarkable personage was properly a man, everything connected with his life goes to prove. Born as others are—first a babe, then a child, growing in wisdom and stature, then a man of mature age; and subject to hunger, thirst, weariness, grief, joy, suffering, and death. But he was a sinless man—"who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," 1 Pet. ii. 22; on this account the blood he shed was precious, "as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," 1 Pet. i. 19. He left us an example that we should follow in his steps, and he said, "Learn of me;" Matt. xi. 28-30; and Paul says, "Let this mind be in you, which also was in Christ Jesus." Phil. ii. 5. Thus "we see that Jesus, who was made a little while lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor," Heb. ii. 9; and "who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Heb. xii. 2.

The apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, speaking to the Jews, being under the influence of the Holy Spirit, called Jesus of Nazareth a man, but one approved of God, as was manifest by the miracles which God did through him, in their midst. Acts ii. 22 And he also spoke to Cornelius and to those in his house, of this same Jesus being anointed by God "with the Holy Spirit and power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with him." Acts x. 38. Yes, Jesus was full of sympathy for afflicted humanity; his pity flowed forth from his compassionate heart towards the poor, the sick, the helpless, the afflicted; and in him the prophecy of Isaiah was verified—"Himself took our infirmities, and bore our sicknesses." Isa. liii. 4; Matt. viii. 16-17. The power given him by his Father was not used for his own gratification, as witness his threefold temptation in the wilderness, Matt. iv. 1-11; but always for the good of others, and to manifest the glory of God. He disclaimed that either the words he spoke, or the works he did were his own. "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me He doeth the works." John xiv. 10. Though Jesus said,—"I and my Father are one," (John x. 30,) he did not speak of personality, but of unity of action. There was but one will between the two persons. The Father and the Son were en rapport—so whatever the Father purposed or willed was known by the Son, through the Holy Spirit which he had in its fulness. See John iii. 34; i. 19. Jesus was not God, as some say, but the Son of God, and the Son of Man, as he himself claimed to be. He never claimed Divine prerogatives for himself, though he did the works of God. The Jews charged him with blasphemy; but Jesus replied —"Say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God?" John x. 34-36. God, the Father, with audible voice from heaven, when Jesus was immersed, proclaimed him as his beloved Son. Matt. iii. 17. The disciples confessed him as "the Christ, the Son of the living God;" and he declared to Peter that on that rock, (confession,) he would build his congregation. John vi. 69; Matt. xvi. 13-18; 1 John v. 1.

Finally this Jesus, Son of man and Son of God, was put to death on the charge of blasphemy and treason. But God raised him from the dead, "and exalted him with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins." Acts v. 31. He has become the first-fruit of the sleepers—the first to rise from the dead to an immortal life—the first-begotten from the dead, and first-born among many brethren. 1 Cor. xv. 20; Acts xxvi. 23; Col. i. 18; Rev. i. 5; Rom. viii. 29. And now he is no more in the world, but is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God. Luke xxiv. 51; Acts i. 9-11; 1 Pet. iii. 22.

2. As Christ is now. Christ died, but he rose again. And the apostle wrote to the Romans—"Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. vi. 9. He was raised to an immortal life, and has become a priest, not of the Aaronic order, for "our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood," but was made one after the power of an endless life. For of him it is testified, "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. vii. 14-17: Psa. cx. 4. The superiority of this priesthood over that of the law is seen at once in that it is unchangeable; and because this man continueth ever, "he is able to save to the uttermost those who come unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them," ver. 24, 25. What a comfort it is to the Christian that he knows he has a living, personal Savior! One who knows our trials and infirmities, because he has been tried in the same manner. Heb. iv. 15, 16. And for our encouragement it is written—"For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Rom. v. 10. The man Christ Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, and has become the mediator between God and man. 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6; Matt. xx. 28. Moses was the mediator of the old covenant, but Jesus is the mediator of the new and better covenant, Heb. xii. 24; ix. 15; viii. 6. And he is also our intercessor and advocate with the Father, Heb. vii. 25; 1 John ii. 1. This intercessor and advocate is the risen and exalted Jesus, who as our forerunner and high-priest has entered "heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix. 24; vi. 20; iv. 14; Rom. viii. 34.

The present highly exalted position of Christ is on behalf of the congregation, which is his body. Paul wrote to his brethren, saying, "He is the head of the body, the congregation; who is the begineing (of the new creation) the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." Col. i. 18, 19; ii. 9, 10; Eph. i. 20-23. The close relationship existing between the head and body very aptly illustrates the connection and sympathy there is between Christ and those who are his. He loves them, for he bought them with his blood—his life; he called them by his gospel, and they came and followed him. He has recorded their names in his book of life, (Phil. iv. 3) and has promised them eternal life, and declared that they shall never perish. 1 John ii. 25; John x. 28. Even now, in his glorified state, his love, his sympathy, his wisdom, and his power are all pledged on behalf of his brethren. And if we do not obtain all the [illegible] we require, it is all our own fault: for we are exhorted to "come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Heb. iv. 16.

Though the glorified Jesus is now in heaven, yet he promised to be in the midst of even a small company met in his name. Matt. xviii. 20. And he says, "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. iii. 20. And again, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John xiv. 23. This is having fellowship with both the Father and the Son. 1 John i. 3; 1 Cor. i. 9. For this very close fellowship and unity Jesus prayed—"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us." John xvii. 21. It may be asked, how can this be, seeing that Christ is a personal being, and now in the heavens? How can he be with and in us? By his word and spirit, as the Father was with the Son. The Father is a personal being, and is in heaven; yet by his Spirit he is omnipresent. Jesus prayed to God in heaven as a personal being, and taught his disciples to do the same, and yet he said that his Father was in him, speaking the words and doing the works through him. This was because he was filled with the Holy Spirit, which placed him in connection with the Father in heaven. So of the disciples. Jesus said, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." John xv. 7. There must be a personal connection with Christ, by belief of and obedience to his word, and continuing therein in order to obtain the fulfillment of this promise. See 1 John iii. 21, 22; v. 14, 15. "If any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." John ix. 31. God sees and hears and answers through his Spirit. And not only the Father, but the Son also: "whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." John xiv. 13, 14. Let the believer have strong confidence in God and in his Son Jesus Christ, and he will certainly find the promise sure.

3. As Christ will be in the future. Having considered him as he was in the past when on earth among the Jews, and as he now is while in heaven, it remains for us to consult the word of God as to what he will be. The Bible alone can reveal the future. What the prophets predicted about the birth, life, work, sufferings and death of the Messiah were all literally fulfilled; and as these prophecies are so intermingled with others of his great mission and glory which are yet unfulfilled, we conclude that they will be just as surely accomplished. The sufferings and the glory of the Christ were so closely connected, that the prophets themselves did not clearly understand the things of which they spake. 1 Pet. i. 10-12. His work on earth during the time of his humiliation was well and nobly done, and was approved and accepted by his Father. Though he was condemned to death and executed as a malefactor, God justified him by raising him from the dead, and taking him up to his throne, clothing him with Divine authority and glory—"Angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him."

Jesus being of the seed of David was of the royal line, and heir to the throne. This was according to prophecy and the promise given to David. Read 2 Sam. vii. for the promise and covenant; also Psa. lxxxix and cxxxii. 10-18, for further light on the matter. Now read Isa. ix. 6, 7 in connection with Luke i. 30 35. These texts will be sufficient to prove that Jesus of Nazareth was the seed of David, the legal heir to his throne and kingdom. Jesus knew of this fact; therefore he said to Pilate in answer to his question "Art thou a king then?" "I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." John xviii. 37. This was "the good confession" Paul referred to in I Tim. vi. 13, for making which he was crucified. He was a king—the anointed one. God anointed him. The prophecy of Psa. ii. 1, 2 is quoted in Acts iv. 25 27, and applies to the events of that time, and especially to Jesus as the Lord's anointed. The apostle's gospel message to both Jew and Gentile was concerning Christ and his kingdom, for the purpose of taking out of them a people for his name, or for himself. The references in proof, are too numerous to quote. I will only give a few. Acts viii. 6, 12; xv. 13-18; Acts xvii. 2, 3, 7; xix. 8; xx. 24, 25; xxviii. 23, 30, 31.

The first advent was only a preparatory one. Jesus was a teacher sent from God—taught the people righteousness, truth and love—love to God and man. He was a living example of what he taught. He was a preacher—sent to preach the gospel to the poor, or the kingdom of God. Luke iv. 18, 43. He was called "Jesus, (or Savior,) for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. i. 21;—moral, mental, and physical infirmities. In this way he lived and acted until the malice of his enemies put him to death. But this did not end his work. God raised him up from the dead, of which fact the apostles were chosen witnesses, qualified by the Holy Spirit to preach the same good news of the kingdom, and to offer life to those who would believe, repent, and obey the gospel, in the name of their risen Lord. They testified to all that he was coming back to the earth, as Judge of the living and the dead, and to rule all nations, as "the King of kings, and Lord of lords." This would be in the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets of Israel. To know what these things are to be restored, we must consult the prophetic word. There is so much on this subject that I can only slightly touch some of the points, connected with the glorious appearing and reign of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Both Jesus and the apostles frequently spoke of the future advent, But they only confirmed by this the prophetic word. All the prophets speak of the coming of the Lord, and his glorious work. Moses tells us of a prophet, like himself, who should be raised up. Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19; Acts iii. 22, 23. David speaking of Jehovah's purpose, as though already accomplished, says, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Psa. ii. 6-8; Heb. i. 5; v. 5. Isaiah said, "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. * * * * Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. xl. 5, 10. This prophet wrote so much about the coming Messiah, and his glorious reign and kingdom, that the reader is referred to the book itself. See Isa. ii. 1-4; ix. 5, 6; xi; xv. 5. xxiv. 21; xxxii. 1 5; xxxiii. 20 22; lx, etc. Jeremiah calls him "a righteous Branch" raised up unto David, and a King who shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely, and this is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness" Jer. xxii. 5, 6. "And at that time Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord," and "the city of the great king." Jer. iii. 17; Psa. xlviii. 1, 2; Matt. v. 35. The prophet Ezekiel tells us that the diadem and the crown which were removed from the head of Zedekiah, and his overturned kingdom should be no more, until He come whose right it is, Ezek. xxi. 25-27, and that is Jesus—the legal heir to the throne and kingdom of David. Daniel speaks of the Messiah, the Prince of princes, and one like the Son of Man, to whom was given a kingdom, dominion, and glory. Dan. ix 25; viii. 25; vii. 13, 14. Micah refers to one who should come out of Bethlehem, who should be Ruler in Israel, (Matt. ii. 6,) and who "shall be great to the ends of the earth." Micah v. 2-5. He is also called "the Lord of the whole earth." Chap. iv. 13. Zephaniah speaking to the daughter of Jerusalem, says, "The king of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more." Zeph. iii. 15. The Lord speaking to the daughter of Zion through the prophet Zechariah, says to her, "Lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." Zech. ii. 10. And again he says to her—"thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." (See this prophecy fulfilled in John xii. 13-15.) "And He shall speak peace unto the nations; and his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." Chap. ix. 9, 10. And in chap. xiv. 5 we read, "the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee," and verse 9, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one:" and in verses 16, 17 he is called "the King, the Lord of hosts," whom the nations will go up to Jerusalem every year to worship, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. Called also "the Lord of the whole earth" in chap iv. 14; vi. 4. And in Isa. liv. 5, "The God of the whole earth shall he be called."

The writings of the apostles confirm what the prophets have said concerning the glory of the coming Messiah, and the greatness and majesty of his universal empire.

Without enlarging further, I conclude by quoting Rev. x. 7. "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." Rev. xi. 15-18. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God. Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come: because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xv. 3, 4. "And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee: for thy judgments are made manifest."

May that time soon come, when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord." Amen.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Israel, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Jesus the Jews' Messiah.

A Christian was once conversing with a Jew, trying to prove to him that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messiah and fulfilled all the predictions of the prophets concerning the Messiah. Look at Isa. ix. 6, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders." Jesus was born in Bethlehem, and was the son given. Those that are truly his, obey his commandments, they are under his government: "His name shall be called Wonderful." Who that has ever lived, has displayed such wonderful qualities as he? His life was a brilliant display of wonderfulness and amazement; even to his enemies. "Counsellor." No one could ever approach him with a question of divine law, but they found him ready to give a correct answer to all enquiries, and a counsellor on all subjects—"the mighty God." He said—"All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." "I and my Father are one." And so "the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." If all mankind would obey his injunctions and commandments, there would be no wars, but peace would prevail everywhere. He is emphatically "the Prince of Peace." Said the Jew, "Read the next verse please." Said the Christian —There can be no question but that Jesus fulfilled this prediction literally, then how can you doubt that Jesus of Nazareth is your Messiah. The Christian then read —"Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth, even for ever, the zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." There said the Jew: "Did Jesus literally fulfil this prediction?" "Did he occupy the throne of David to order and establish it?" Said the Christian: "That is to be understood in a figurative sense." "Ah," said the Jew with a look of scorn and supreme contempt: "You literalize the sixth verse because your history says Jesus fulfilled it, but you spiritualize and render null and void the seventh verse, because Jesus did not fulfil it. Away with such Christianity. I want nothing of it. If you spiritualize the seventh verse and make it to mean just what your fancy may dictate; by the same rule, we can spiritualize the sixth verse, and make it mean just what our fancy may dictate."—Selected by Daniel Howard.

The Religious Parliament.

The chief of the Buddhist delegation from Japan to the world's fair parliament of religions have returned to their homes and in the report of the proceedings they have this to say: "The parliament was called because the western nations have come to realize the weakness and folly of Christianity, and they really wished to hear from us of our religion and to learn what the best religion is. There is no better place in the world to propagate the teachings of Buddhism than in America. During the meetings, one very wealthy man from the state of New York became a convert of Buddhism and was initiated into its rites. He is a man of great influence, and his conversion may be said to mean more than the conversion of ten thousand ordinary men, so we may say truthfully that we made ten thousand converts at that meeting. Christianity is merely an adornment of society in America. It is deeply believed in by very few. The great majority of Christians drink and commit various gross sins, and live very desolate lives, although it is a very common belief and serves as a social adornment."

If that is a fair indication of the "impressions" made on the heathens of foreign lands by the great congress of religions, the conversion of the world to Christianity is farther away than ever!—Plymouth Democrat.

JESUS says, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." Even so, amen.

"WHEN a man measures the Bible by conceit the book is sure to be wrong; but when he measures himself by the Bible he is sure to be wrong."

WE apprehend that people have scarcely time to wonder what the future has in store for them, these days, for the present almost drives them crazy.

IN honoring the Lord with our substance we have been plainly taught that our Father's measure is one of self-denial, not of amount; in other words, be what is left, not what is given.

HIS life will go out in the blackness of darkness forever who thinks to break off from his sins one by one. The night of death will close in upon him before he is rid of them all.

THIS is the way an exchange puts it: "The man is to be pitied who has to rob his own wife and children in order that the political philanthropist, who puts parties in power and men in the ditch, may continue to fare sumptuously every day."

THE intelligent and obedient believer is praying for the peace of Jerusalem with a discernment that with her peace is bound up every good which an enlightened heart can desire for the well-being of man and the glory of God. Does this apply to you, dear reader?

"PATIENCE," it is said "strengthens the spirit, sweetens the temper, stifles anger, extinguishes envy, subdues pride, bridles the tongue, refrains the hand, and tramples upon temptation;" that being so, and we think it is, it must be a good crop to raise at any time, especially the present.

IT has been said that the doctrines of the New Testament are so comprehensive that they involve all moral truth known by man; so extensive the precepts that they require every virtue and forbid every sin. Nothing has been added to either by philosophy or the progress of human knowledge.

BRO. Alonzo Adams reports having immersed ten persons at St. Paul, Neb., on Feb. 4. This is encouraging surely. Bro. L. E. Conner held a two weeks' meeting at Roll, Ind., and as a result sixteen were added to the church there. He also immersed a young lady at this place on Feb. 8. May these all prove faithful and be a part with the redeemed when Jesus comes.

Groaning Creation.

Notwithstanding the noble and self-sacrificing efforts of the thousands of well-meaning people, the moral and physical condition of the world is not improving. The long looked-for good time seems, from a human standpoint, to be farther off than ever. The tears that have so long dimmed the eye have not been wiped away. Instead of peace and better, worse and worse is the order of the day. Robbery and murder and outrage are fearfully on the increase. "The dark places of the earth are still full of the habitation of cruelty." Every human expedient for righting the wrongs and banishing the ills afflicting the human family fails, no matter how promising a send-off it has; and while we admire the courage and zeal of those who think to finally fill the earth with God's glory before Jesus comes again, the divine lamp clearly shows that the best of men are powerless to save the existing state of things, or prevent its growth. To the thoughtful mind who has not been lumined by the entrance of God's Word the outlook will be dark indeed; but light is breaking for those who give heed to the sure Word of prophecy. And it behooves them to watch and pray lest they enter into temptation that will exclude them from the kingdom.

WHENEVER faith flags, napkins come into use, just as money is concealed when confidence is shaken. Opportunities pass, ability departs, spiritual life dies out, indolence becomes more indolent, selfishness more selfish, timidity more timid. When the light becomes darkness, oh how great is that darkness! If we have but one "talent" the only sure and profitable way is to use it. "[illegible] that hath shall be given." The very worst thing to do is to wrap it [illegible] napkin.

THE Rev. George C. Lorimer, pastor of the Tremont Temple Congregation of Boston, preached a dedicatory sermon in the New Fourth Baptist Church at Chicago, which is said to have been startling in [illegible]. Among many other things he said that "the present [illegible] away." Of course [illegible] How could he [illegible] set forth the faith of Christ [illegible] when they have [illegible] the hope of [illegible] "The doctrine of [illegible] God is the [illegible] with him, and not of the world [illegible] only come in to one who repudiates the law for the adoption of Sons published by the Almighty. Does the Rev. George C. Lorimer think the Almighty has [illegible] to say what shall constitute men eligible to Sonship? If so, what sort of a Gospel does he preach? Or, does he deny altogether the utterances of Jesus which exclude [illegible]?

Waiting for Jesus.

Those who are Waiting for Jesus are [illegible] coming. Alas, there are but few waiting ones. The majority are asking, mockingly, "Where is the promise of his coming?" but even to the scoffers [illegible] to the few waiting ones. This was predicted by the servants of the coming One near two thousand years ago, so that they are living witnesses to the truth, and [illegible] them more than ever determined to trust the sure word of prophecy.

If our dear readers are waiting for Jesus it implies that they are ready for him. They cannot be ready unless they are waiting; and they cannot be waiting unless they are ready. If they reach the dock of the steamer one minute after the line is cast off and she glides away they are not ready. If they arrive a few minutes before she leaves, they are safe; they wait for the start. Only those who are ready go in to the supper.

But what is implied in being ready? We read that, "Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. Clearly this is the same as saying, "without holiness no man shall see the Lord!" Unmistakably, then, those who are waiting for Jesus belong to the spotless band.

Paul seems to have labored on three Sabbaths at Thessalonica with the result that he could afterward write to his converts about their turning from idols to serve the living and true God and wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered them from the wrath to come. Oh, what a blessed hope this is; the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us! Yes. blessed attitude; in hope of the glory of God; waiting for Jesus; looking for him; and although tears of sorrow will sometimes flow, and the groan of pain and mental agony will sometimes escape them, yet the comforting thought that to them that look for him he will bring salvation, enables them to hope on, hope ever.

Waiting for Jesus is proof of love of his appearing. No one would eagerly watch and wait for that in which they had no interest. He is the Lord and Life and All of the Waiting Ones. God help us all to wait patiently, yet vigilantly, for Jesus, that we may hear his plaudit, well done. Amen.

Christ is Coming.

Christ is coming! This is a subject proclaimed with impressive assurance in the New Testament Scripture, and for this reason the importance of possessing a knowledge of the subject as a matter of doctrine must be apparent to all minds open to conviction; and we perceive it to be the central object of faith and hope to which the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ are pointed. To the true Christian, the [illegible] of Christ means life [illegible]. For it is an absolute fact that our Lord and his apostles all taught that this one event was to be looked forward to as being the only time of judgment and reward; the time "when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 31-34. This can only be when Christ comes again in a visible and personal form to the earth. If he is not coming, all the nations can never be drawn up in judgment before him, but will still continue even as they now are, living and passing away in one continual state of turmoil and misery; the righteous sleep will never be called to a reward from him whom they love and serve; they will never [illegible] the glories of unending life, but will sleep in the silent grave through the eternal ages, their warfare and struggle against sin and evil having all been in vain; for it is here, upon the earth, and nowhere else, that Christ is appointed to judge mankind, and to reward the righteous and unrighteous accordingly.

That this was the hope of the primitive Church, let me assure you by reading the words of the apostle Paul, in the second epistle to the Thessalonians i. 7-10, "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them who know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day." And then in the third chapter of Colossians, 1-4, the same apostle sets forth what the present state of the Christian should be, and also declares that the time of reward shall be when the Savior is revealed. These are the words, 1, 2: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth." That is, let your mind be set on those things which are spiritual and eternal, for these are the things of God; and not on the things which we now behold on earth, for they are temporal and will soon pass away. "For (3, 4) ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Thus it is not at death that the saint appears in glory; it will be when Christ appears. That this appearing is something for which we have to wait is shown by the exhortation of the apostle James in his epistle, chap. v. 7: "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

The testimonies we have quoted, confirm our statement that the coming of the Lord was held as the hope of the early church. This hope was no idle dream on their part. It found expression in the divinely inspired utterances of the apostles; and moreover, will be found to be based upon the very clear and explicit teaching of the Savior himself. Take for instance his words in Luke xii. 35-40, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants. And this know, that if the goodman of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through. Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not." Some time after giving to his disciples these words of warning, he told them, by means of a parable, that a certain time should elapse before he came again. And he told them for the reason given in Luke xix. 11: "because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." Then follows the parable of the certain nobleman who went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. During his absence his servants are commanded to use the several pieces of money, which he gives them, to the best of their abilities, and at his return they will be rewarded according to the results which they have to show their master. The certain nobleman is Christ Jesus, who has gone into the far country—heaven, and is now seated at the right hand of God. He there awaits the time to receive the kingdom from the Father, and, having received it, he will return. This was the promise made by the angels to the disciples, when, after the resurrection of Christ, they beheld the Savior ascend on high. In Acts i. 10 we read: "While they looked steadfastly towards heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." When he comes he will reward those who have professed to be his servants, giving to each even as they have used their talents in the service of his truth; dividing between the sheep and the goats. For it is a reality in the spiritual as well as in the natural world—"that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Gal. vi. 7.

Christ is coming! and who can tell how soon he will arrive? Do not think as some of the professed teachers of Christianity in our own day, that his advent will not be until after the millennium, the thousand years of righteousness and peace. Those who believe and teach this doctrine are looking forward to the spreading of the knowledge of the word of God, by means of the increased effort of the churches and chapels at home, and the enterprise of missionary societies abroad. By these human efforts the world is expected to become gradually diffused with an universal law of love to God and man, and everything will be nice for the Savior at his coming.

Friends, if this idea be true, and we may judge by the results of the past, instead of living in joyful anticipation of our Lord's advent, we should rather mourn and sorrow that his coming will be distant. For 1800 years the gospel has been preached, and yet what a state the world is in even now! it is one vast house divided against itself; and as the years roll on, instead of becoming united, the divisions apparently grow wider. We do not say that this is the fault of the gospel; it is because men refuse to accept and obey the gospel in the purity of its teaching. Look how the nations are divided one from another, and the jealousy so apparent among all. Why is this? Is it not because of the inherent selfishness of mankind, each one anxious lest his neighbor should obtain control over more than himself? And to prevent this, or rather, to try to prevent it, each nation sustains a powerful army as a standing menace to its neighbors. And this, we are told, is done to create peace? Peace, to be invoked among fellow-men by the edge of the sword? Nay! it is rather a manifest token of the conviction of [illegible] that peace, under present conditions, is impossible. Every few years testifies to this fact, for every few years witnesses in some part of the world, the breaking out of the pent-up forces of enmity in human nature; quarrels between nations ensue, and the end is strife and bloodshed. Talk about universal love and peace, and preparation for his coming! Ere this state obtains by the proposed efforts of humanity, the world will have grown old and weary by the long delay; the plaintive cry of the watchman will once more ascend: "How long, O Lord, holy and true?" and if the Lord delay until all things are made worthy by man alone, we feel constrained to say the cry will never be answered at all.

But how beautiful the true Christian hope shines out when compared with this mournful outlook. It is great consolation to the children of God to know that the present state of things is not to last for long. This gives them an incentive to be at work in the Master's service, proclaiming his gracious words of life and truth. It encourages them in the duty of seeking in their own lives the "righteousness of God;" inasmuch as they are persuaded of the promise of their Savior that he will come quickly, suddenly, at an hour when he is least expected.

It is nearly 1900 years since he uttered the parable of the "nobleman," since he left the earth for the "far country;" therefore his return is that much nearer today than it was then. When he comes, it will not be to find a world in faith and holiness, for the question was put by himself, as recorded in Luke xviii. 8: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find the faith on the earth?" No! the faith of God will not be found to any great extent on the earth. Men and women will be [illegible] as in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man.

What Lieut. Totten Meant.

[The following article was sent us by Sister Wince, and is a clipping from Messiah's Herald of some time in 1892. September probably, so that it will be seen it is not a new publication. We give it place on request of Sister Wince, and that all may know just what Prof. Totten says of his critics. Those who are followers of Mr. Totten will be pleased with his explanation, and will gather from this interview that he does not "set definite time." Those who are not convinced of his power to clearly see the future workings of all God's plans, and the time of their happenings, will not be disturbed by this, but will "read between the lines" that Mr. Totten is a "time setter." We make no comments. —ED.]

It is very safe to say that Lieut. Totten has been greatly misunderstood and very often misstated. Particularly is this true concerning his statement in regard to the 20th of March, 1892. We desire to present every one in a true light, and to guard against making any false statement. Hence we wrote to Mr. Totten and asked him to explain his meaning for the benefit of the readers of the Herald. In reply, he sent us the following from a recent interview with a New Haven reporter. Since the Lieut. sent it, we suppose it to be the explanation which he desires circulated:

"Lieutenant, did not your prediction as to March 20th fail—that is, as to its being the last day of grace?"

"By no means. I have been persistently misrepresented and misunderstood as to that statement. I believe we are in 'the time of the end,' and that it began on March 20th, and as a matter of fact all of the unprecedented events of this year seem to have occurred since then. The human race owes a debt to its Maker, its legal time ran out, as though it were a note, on March 20th. The three days of grace,' as it were, extended from March, 1889, to March, 1892, and whether the world will see it or not, they exactly cover the period of my own testimony [illegible]. All this is [illegible] we have actually [illegible] be exact!

"I never said or meant that 'grace' [illegible] was to be over with the [illegible] the Holy Spirit would be withdrawn at that time or that repentance [illegible] would be fruitless thereafter. No, and I have [illegible] and am not responsible for what others have assumed I meant. We are now in the days of 'fact,' and this will be more apparent in the future. We were in the days of 'faith.' Now [illegible] faith is more or less [illegible], when fact supplants it, the day of 'grace' is necessarily over when the period of payment or 'judgment,' if you will, has begun, and in that period we certainly now are. This is borne out by the prophetic events upon every line, but particularly the chronological lines."

"But, certainly, professor, you failed as to 'the new star in the east,' which you predicted in Music Hall in Boston?"

"No, sir! [illegible] very plain. [illegible] very day because [illegible] 'morning star' [illegible] the Indian [illegible] For thousands of years the wise men of the east have predicted that [illegible] avatara, the age Kali Yuga would end 'when the sun and the moon rose together near Jupiter,' and the whole subject of the Music Hall lecture was to prove this event took place this year. I had nothing to do with the particular date assigned me [illegible], but Providence so arranged the matter that the very [illegible] selected by the [illegible] was the one, and the only one, on which I could stand, and [illegible] and make such an announcement and seal it with the statement that 'to-day is this ancient prediction fulfilled in you.'"

"But you certainly don't place any credence in a mere heathen prediction do you?"

"How do you know it was a mere heathen prediction?" replied the lieutenant; "and," he continued, "moreover, why should not a mere heathen prediction as to the second advent have as much weight as the one which guided the wise men to Bethlehem 1891 years ago? The fact of the matter is the advent is generally expected all over the earth. Among all classes of men and all races the wise are anticipating 'the coming man,' and this quite as much as at the time of Augustus Cæsar."

MARRIED.

At the home of the bride's parents in Clinton Co., Ind., Feb. 4, 1891, Mr. James A. Skinner, and Miss Elnora Orr. The wedding was a private one, only a few relatives being present. They will settle down in Indianapolis to share the burdens and joys of this life with the best wishes of many friends. May they lead a happy life, and obey from the heart that form of doctrine given by Christ and the apostles.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find draft for $3.00, $1.50 for my subscription and $1.50 for a year's subscription for my sister.

[illegible] would like to say to [illegible] is carried back [illegible] the time when I took the obligations [illegible] hands [illegible] the Word of God's Holy Writ, eyes raised upward to the Great Omnipotent, that I [illegible] and follow the [illegible] and living God. The obligation to me is, believe, repent, and [illegible] baptized. But what? Believe that Jesus is the Son of God, that he died on the cross for our sins, that fallen humanity might be saved through his precious blood, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Repentance now, I feel for your past sins, and being baptized for the remission of the same, and coming to walk in newness of life. That is the obligation but it does not stop here. Imagine now, a picture before us, and in it are these words, "No cross, no crown;" for we have many crosses to bear, and a good deal to work. In John iv. 35 are these words, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields for an opportunity of doing some one good or dropping a word of encouragement to some poor troubled heart. Dead men have not these opportunities, neither have men who are asleep, realizes what might be a glorious opportunity should he awake to a sense of duty. Men are keenly awake to business opportunities. Every opening is sought for by many eager aspirants but in Christ's vineyard this is too much the reverse. The harvest is plenteous and the laborers are few. Oh, ours is a great opportunity. Satan is awake to his opportunities. Christ proved his earnestness in the great work at the cost of his life. Are we awake and ever on the alert? This is one of our crosses. Christian friends lift up your eyes and look. Imagine a field in a triangular shape and the point end on the downward grade and the broad portion on the upward grade gives a view of work. Start from the centre and go down and see how much faster you go and what a small point you will get to. Now start from the centre and go up and it is a slow steady pull and many obstacles in our path and the field is broader to work and the cross is heavy to carry. I think my reader can now get my idea without any farther explanation. Now let us stop and think a moment and than imagine these words before us, "Where is my hope?" Are they wrapped as in black drapery and plunged down into outer darkness, or are they unfurled and floating to the people as Immanuel's banner and the words inscribed "Lo, this is my God and my King," and rejoicing in the hope of a soon coming Savior, the Redeemer of earth, when it shall be said there is no more sickness, nor death, no more parting of dear friends, no more sad tears are shed, but the trump of God shall sound and the sleeping saints shall come forth and there shall be great rejoicing. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be one of that number, whether asleep or awake, that I may be ever on my guard and watching for the Master, whether it be day or midnight, for we know not when he will come, and therefore we are warned lest that time come on us unawares, and it would be a very sad thing if we had watched so long and at the last day we would be found off our guard and our lamps gone out. Christ says, "Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me. Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown." Therefore let us beware lest our hearts be overcharged with the cares of this life and we be taken unawares. Let us bear up under crosses a little longer and we shall gain our reward. Such is the prayer of one who has established his faith in Jesus, and the hope of meeting you in the kingdom where there will be no parting. Yours in hope.

Six Props to the Sabbath Removed.

Prop 1. "And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Mark ii. 27.

This [illegible] is supposed to teach much more than what is in it. [illegible] that the Sabbath was made for all mankind. [illegible] his disciples [illegible].

[illegible] David [illegible] of God and ate the shewbread which it was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests. "Or, have ye not read in the law how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless? But I say unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple." Now, if the law was made to subserve to David's necessities, then David was greater and better than the law, and it was made for him, and not he for it. And if the priests in the temple could violate the Sabbath, [illegible] their offering of two lambs as a burnt offering on the Sabbath days, then, which was the greater, the law of offering or the Sabbath day? And if the priests in the temple could violate the Sabbath and be blameless, much more can my disciples without [illegible] that they have done and be innocent. For in this place is one greater than the temple.

"And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." [illegible] as to say, "man is greater and better than the Sabbath, and it was made to subserve his necessities."

The blind Pharisees were constantly watching and accusing the Master and his disciples of Sabbath breaking. The Master nor his disciples never accuse them nor any one of that awful crime. Who do we emulate and imitate in this matter?

Prop. 2. "Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Mark ii. 28. A few words is all that is necessary on this point, as it is in connection with the above, and is a conclusion from the premises laid down by the Master in his masterly defense in behalf of his disciples. We feel safe in saying, there is no favor shown the Sabbath in this statement, as he was not pleading for the Sabbath, which fact changes the nature of the statement materially.

He was greater than the temple, and was Lord also (or ruler) of the Sabbath.

Prop 3. "And he came to Nazareth where he had been brought up; and as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke iv. 16.

It is the universal custom of Sabbath keepers to assert boldly, and positively, that the Master's custom was to observe the Sabbath. One able minister in a recent debate after quoting this Scripture, said "let it be observed, it was his custom to observe the Sabbath." Now I submit that his custom refers not to his observing the Sabbath at all, or it would have said so, but it refers to what he did, and what was that? he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and stood up for to read. His object evidently was to meet the people assembled and to read and preach the gospel to the poor, not the Sabbath, see verse 18. Now do you really believe that the Master would choose to meet and Sabbatize with a set of blind bigots who could not endure his teaching, but were filled with wrath and rose up and thrust him out of the city, and led him to the brow of the hill that they might cast him down headlong, and break his neck? See verses 29-30. I will venture the assertion that he never went there again to observe the Sabbath? Do you think you would? Hardly, my brother.

Prop 4. "And Paul as his manner was, went into unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures." Acts xvii. 2.

Paul's manner was like his Master's custom "to go into the synagogue on the Sabbath, to read, reason, and dispute with the Jews. Is this your "manner" and according to the commandment? But to say that his manner was to observe the Sabbath is far fetched to say the least. Please read the connections, see verse 17.

Paul's manner was to meet with the people on the Sabbath, because that was the custom, his "manner" was to reason and dispute with them on subjects far more important than Sabbath observance, which often brought down storms of opposition, which made it necessary for the brethren to send him away by night, but, oh, don't tell me his "manner" was to observe the Sabbath with such cruel folks. If I say your "manner" or "custom" is to meet with the people on Sunday, and reason with them out of the Scriptures, I say the truth, but if I infer from this premise that your "manner" is to observe the Sunday and tell it that way, then I tell more than the truth.

Prop 5. "And they returned and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment", Luke xxiii. 56. This is a record of what those good women did, they observed the Sabbath while Jesus was resting in the tomb; and they observed it according to the commandment. Who does that now? Those good women were sincere in resting on the Sabbath day, no doubt; so were they sincere in coming to the tomb to find their Lord, but he was gone all the same. Hardly a safe precedent. Old customs passed out slowly with the apostles even. It is not presumable that those good women had any idea that the law as a system was changed in one jot or tittle, but that it all remained intact, ceremonies and all.

Prop 6. "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Matt. xxiv. 20.

Our friends tell us that in this instruction the Sabbath was recognized and taught at least forty years this side the cross. Wild conclusions are cheap. While the more reasonable conclusion is this; the custom to regard the Sabbath day would prevail with that people not only forty years but through all time, and it was their custom based on their instruction to close the gates of Jerusalem during the Sabbath day. See Neh. xiii. and Jer. xvii. and this closing of the gates on the Sabbath day, like the winter, and the pregnancy, and the nursing mothers, would be a great impediment to their flight. And that we are correct in our conclusion the following will demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt. Was it a sin to flee on the Sabbath to save life? This must be so or it was simply a hindrance to their flight, and that the first cannot be true, as the Master himself did time and again slip out and away from the infuriated mob to save his life, and I am slow to believe that the Master taught one thing and practiced another. See Matt. xii. 14-15; Mark iii. 6-7; Luke iv. 29-30.

Now we will conclude by asking Sabbath brethren a few questions.

Could the priests in the temple violate the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth or tenth commandments, and be blameless?

Do you not make a difference yourself, when you admit that some will be saved who do not keep the Sabbath?

If the generally acknowledged day line be wrong, which seems evident, then is not Sabbath keeping very risky at best?

How can you consistently urge the claims of the Sabbath upon dying men and woman as a condition of salvation when the day line in the Pacific Ocean, is being hauled down and transplanted over in the land of Eden, where it evidently belongs?

Submitted in the love of truth.

"Peter followed afar off (Luke xxii. 54). To follow Jesus afar off will not do; we know how it turned out in Peter's case; he followed afar off. That was the first wrong step; then, he sat down amongst those who were the enemies of Christ; and afterwards, he denied Christ altogether."

Warning Words.

"My Son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.—Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of evil men." Prov. i. and iv.

The poorer, the more obscure, the less popular or fashionable the church or Christian, the more likely to be spiritual.

The more in accord with the world, the less with God— Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.

Persecution, misrepresentation, poverty, danger, and neglect, are the legacy of the Christian.

The servant is not greater than his master. As with Christ so with his followers.

Friend, do you want to know if you, in very deed, are a Christian? Let me say—whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and all who would live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution in some form. There seems no exception to this rule. Unless therefore you have been on the cross you are not of Christ and have no part in him. This is Scripture. 2 Tim. iii. 12 and the only way to avoid it, apparently, is through the aid of the noble science of Scripture interpretation, which is like the wondrous book of the wizard Michael Scott, which—

[illegible]

What does Christ predicate of Christians? They would be few in numbers, despised, poor, rejected, ridiculed, abused, and regarded as cranks.

Do our orthodox churches of today answer this description? What says the Bible?

"Blessed are ye when men shall speak of you as the great ——— church, and join you to be in the fashionable swim and stand well in society and have a good business introduction?" Well hardly, but "Blessed are ye, when men shall reproach you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

And how about our great religious lights, our fashionable preachers, the admired of men, the worshipped of women, the caressed of the great, the sleek, the well paid? or our mitred, lawnsleeved aristocratic servants of the lowly Nazarene?

Well the Scriptures say—"Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you, for so did their fathers to the false prophets."

Are we to understand this as an intimation that these men are also false prophets, or is there a Scriptural interpretation of this passage that can reverse the meaning, just as we are informed that the word death (thanatos) means only eternal life?

There seems to be something wrong and as we know the canons and customs of the churches are infallible, because all discussion is forbidden, and dissent is punished as heresy, the error evidently rests in the Scriptures, which we are told are full of blunders.

Yet somehow it seems incongruous to conceive of Christ as decked in purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, or with double storied mitre on head, priceless pastoral ring and staff, borne on the shoulders of his followers, to peddle certificates or pardon from sin, past, present and future. Nor can we on the other hand imagine him, in a long black garment of clerical cut, buttoned to the chin, absurd white choker and that indescribable look of self-appreciation that so often marks the machine-made college-graduated apostle of the day.

Yet we are taught to regard these men as representatives of Jesus, and his imitators, and we must perforce estimate these buffooneries as Scriptural or admit that our teachers are fallible, and if fallible on one point, why not on others?

Once admit fallibility and it may prove "the little rift within the lute" that leads the orthodox sheep to think and inquire for themselves, and perhaps doubt whether, when Scripture says God only hath immortality, it really means that all men possess it as well.

A writer in Zion's Watch Tower (a China missionary) suggests that there seems a lack of Scriptural authority for our spiritual guides hob-nobbing with satan and his motley crew at the Chicago Congress.

There does indeed. "What fellowship hath Righteousness with Unrighteousness, and what communion hath Light with Darkness?" 2 Cor. vi. 14. Scripture says we should not be unequally yoked with unbelievers, and that Christ has no concord with Belial or one that believeth with an infidel and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Wherefore come ye out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you, etc. Verses 15-17.

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them," Eph. v. 11, for "our fellowship is with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ." 1 John i. 3

Certainly the trumpet gives forth no uncertain sound, and we should be able to prepare ourselves on this point for the day of battle. But our orthodox guides say these are narrow ideas and now-a-days we should have broader aims.

This is another point where Christ seems to differ from the orthodox. He supported the narrow theory quite vehemently. "Broad is the way that leadeth to Destruction and narrow the way that leadeth to Eternal Life."

We are instructed moreover that these idolaters, atheists, demonmongers and followers of the false prophet, are good fellows and all right in short there is much (presumably lacking in Scripture) they can teach us. All we need is to meet them half way, or may be a little more, and all will be joy, harmony and good will.

Why didn't Elijah meet the prophets of Baal half way, or why didn't Moses or Abraham improve the counsels of God by the valuable ideas they might have gained by calling a congress and extending the right hand of fellowship to the Moabites or Sodomites?

If Paul had been a man of broader views what untold benefit he might have received by exchanging ideas and adopting some of the generous practices of Belshazzar and his disreputable pack. And who can estimate what Christianity has lost by the illiberality of Paul in refusing to engraft on his creed some of the broad and liberal teachings of the Pharisees who crucified his Master?

It is safe to affirm that no man who knows history and thinks or has experience of Roman Catholic and Mohammedan ideas could be so absurd as to suppose that any union between them and Christians is possible.

As for Hinduism, Shintooism and the rest of the pagan beliefs, had the self-constituted representatives of Christianity at Chicago had any knowledge of them, it is evident they would have avoided the ridicule they earned at the hands of the better informed.

Do these gentlemen not know (as they should before making themselves conspicuous) what Dr. Pentecost truly stated that, "in ten thousand temples in every part of India are attached from two to four hundred priestesses whose lives are not what they should be?"

Plainly speaking these women are official prostitutes, not merely tolerated, but controlled by the highest priests themselves. The Brahmins admit that this is a part of their system. It is an authorized institution of the Hindoo religion. There is money in it.

Officials in British India know this well and so do most missionaries.

All can see for themselves the carvings on the temples, (Hindoo or Bhuddist,) that would disgrace a brothel and can only be equalled by the paintings of the heathen temples of ancient Greece.

The oily and wily Bhuddist and Hindoo priests who attacked Christianity and criticised its missionaries did so, knowing well the ignorance of their hearers and must have despised and laughed at them in their hearts.

Unfortunately few people know what sin really can be, and what degradation it involves, or they would dread it more and our Christians at Chicago seem not of this class. This knowledge can only be obtained by personal research and experience—it would be impossible to adequately describe, and no one dare publish the facts as they are.

The writer has seen with his eyes, and heard with his ears and will say, that it has entered into the heart of few to conceive the bestialities that envelop paganism.

Abraham could not associate with the inhabitants of the Cities of the Plains on friendly terms. Neither can Christianity fraternize with heathenism. Lot tried it and lost all that he had, fell into like sin and was only saved from entire destruction by the direct intervention of God.

This Chicago Congress is only an additional proof of the ignorance, pride and unreliability of the men the world delights to honor, whether in politics or religion and of the really heathen principles of many so-called lights of Christianity.

One representative (complimented by the president, Dr. Barrows,) said, "The only way to unite is never to mention subjects on which we are irrevocably opposed." This solves the liquor question offhand and had Christ followed this golden rule, he would not have been crucified.

Another Reverend Doctor said, "I would that we might all confess that a sincere worship, anywhere and everywhere in the world is a true worship" (including of course the devil worship of some races) and "whatever worshipper bends before the Best he knows has access to the highest blessings of heaven." Do these men ever read the Scriptures? if so, how can they disseminate such blasphemous balderdash? "Thou shalt have no other God but me."

Comment, however, is needless. This was the general tone of the meeting and the speakers were not atheists and agnostics, but men of renown in the "orthodox church." Men like Dr. Briggs, darkening counsel by words without knowledge, telling us "God is true, he can not lie," but when the Infinite God speaks to finite man, must he speak words which are not error? or another "Christ is humanity as it is evolving under the power and grace of God." If the blind lead the blind no wonder both have fallen into the ditch.

The rule seems to be for a body of men with much spirituality as a basis to commence poor, feeble, and domineered over by the stronger sects. In time they increase and get money and influence and become "orthodox" on this basis. If they have luck to get allied to the State, they assume infallibility real or implied and make themselves a general nuisance and terror to mankind until falling into pride, vain-glory and worldliness they come to evil.

The orthodox churches have followed the beaten path, have had their time of usefulness, have retrograded, and now seem ripe to fall into the arms of the dragon, the beast and the false prophet.

In the multitude of counsellors is safety. Truth loves the light. Discussion is good. The church or preacher that binds its followers in narrow limits and fears enquiry and open, honest discussion decently conducted, lacks faith in its own dogmas, is fearful (Rev. xxi. 8) and probably unbelieving at heart. Have no fellowship with such, but come ye out from among them and be ye separate.

Divine authority says, "Search the Scriptures," "The truth shall make ye free." Blind orthodoxy says to its slaves, "Search no further—there is no need—our dogmas are infallible and contain the whole light of the gospel in a condensed and improved form. We have revised and corrected Moses and the prophets to suit the times, and have reproduced the teachings of Jesus in a more compendious form, with all modern alterations up to date. We urge you in Christian love to advance no further, or we will crucify you for the love of God as we did the Savior your Master long ago."

Preaching the Bible.

"They preach the Bible" is the too frequent conclusion of the young convert when he listens to those whose sermons have a little more of truth in them than have the sermons of the popular preachers of the day.

But to preach a little truth is not to "preach the Bible."

No man can get up and teach a lost and undone people that they can be pardoned at the mourner's bench, and "preach the Bible." The law of pardon is "baptism for the remission of sins;" outside of that law what is there of hope? No man can get up and say that "sprinkling or pouring" will answer in the place of baptism, and "preach the Bible." He is teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

And worship, offered in such a case, Jesus says is in vain; it amounts to nothing, it will not be accepted of God.

Just look at it as it must look to the Author of the Bible. God has made one law of forgiveness, has given us one baptism, and these teachers give us two more, so that those who want to evade the crucifying, humiliating law of the great Jehovah, can take their own way, and deceive themselves into thinking they they will be saved.

No man can get up and say that "man is by nature immortal," and "preach the Bible;" no man can say that "remembered friends are dead and gone to glory," and "preach the Bible;" whoever does so preach, helps to perpetuate the devil's lie,—that awful lie,—that has been the cause of all our sin, of all our misery; of all the diabolical demon worship of the world, of all misrule, of all poverty, of all drunkenness, and war and death,—that awful lie—that has been the father of Anti-Christ and of Mohammed, of inquisition and of stake, everywhere making rivers of blood to flow and opposing at all points the will and the purpose of God.

"Ye shall not surely die" is the foundation-stone upon which is built the ghost-stories of spiritualism and the purgatorial fires of the Catholic and Greek churches.—when it is proven false all error will fall to the ground, and "the kingdoms of men" will become the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, and the knowledge and glory of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

No man can "preach the Bible" and get up and say that there is an eternal hell, where wicked men will be tormented forever and ever.

This doctrine is but another offshoot of that same awful lie. The wicked are to be destroyed—they are to be blotted out, to be as chaff—to be burned as the fat of lambs—to consume away into smoke,—but are not to live in a furnace of fire through the endless ages of eternity.

I am but a weak woman, but I must "stand up for Jesus" by standing up for the truth of his words. I have been told to "stand fast," to "be not moved away from the hope of the gospel," to "be rooted and grounded in the truth," to build my house on the rock, and that "those who preach another gospel than that which Paul preached are to be accursed when the Lord comes," and again,—that those who "add to," or "take from the word of the Lord," will "have their names taken out of the Book of Life and out of the Holy City," and I dare not write otherwise than I have written.

In my baptism I entered into a covenant with God to enter into his vineyard and engage in his work, letting the light of the truth shine, that by the act of baptism I had professed to the world to believe. I cannot go back on that covenant. All my hopes for the future depend on the resurrection of the dead. Without a resurrection there can be no future life. My money, talents, time, voice and influence, must be thrown on the side of truth. I can give no support to the enemy. "Life only through Christ" is my watchword. I stand on that rock, though I stand alone.

Obituary.

Sister Sarah A. Hamlet, wife of Mr. John Hamlet, died Feb. 6, 1894, at their home in this city. Her maiden name was Sarah A. Roose, and she was born near Mansfield, O. April 11, 1827, and was therefore nearly 67 years old. She was married to John Hamlet in 1851. She was the mother of five children, four of whom are living, and with the husband are left to mourn for her. For many years she has lived in Plymouth, a quiet, unassuming life, but strong in her faith, and ready for her rest when death came. She has suffered for the last few years with Cancer which finally caused her death. The funeral was held Feb. 8, at the residence, after which she was buried in Oak Hill Cemetery, there to await the sound of the angel's trumpet, calling all the faithful ones to their reward. May we each be as worthy to enter as was Sister Hamlet.

James A. Sympson, died Jan. 29, 1894, of dropsy, aged 49 years, 5 months and 7 days.

He was born in Monroe County, Kentucky, Aug. 22, 1844. Here his early life was spent. At the age of sixteen he enlisted in the 9th Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and served his country faithfully for three years, taking part in some of the severest struggles of the war. After his discharge he removed to Montgomery Co., Ind., where he was married to Harriet Harris, to whom was born six children, five of whom with their mother survive him. I immersed him some 25 years ago. About the 1st of Jan., (the past month) he sent for the writer to come and pay him a visit, and hold communion with him and wife and son, the one I immersed last June. He said he wanted to partake of the emblems once more before he died. I visited him as requested. The writer, at the funeral spoke words of comfort, based on the promises of God. First showing from Paul in Rom. v. 12. that sin entered into the world, and death by sin, had there been no sin, there had been no death. Then I gave Job's testimony in Job xiv. 1-14. At the close I quoted from Paul in 1 Thess. 4. 13-18. Then he was laid away to await the sounding of the last trump. He was a pattern to his children and I hope they will obey soon. May the dear Lord bless and save them in his everlasting kingdom is my prayer.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 20.

1. And it came to pass on one of the days as he was teaching the royal-people in the temple and announcing the good news (preaching the gospel) the chief-priests and the scribes along with the elders withstood him;

2. And they spake saying unto him, Tell us in (in the use of) what official-power thou art doing these things, or who is the one who hath given unto thee this official-power.

3. And he answered and said unto them, I will ask you also a word and do ye tell me.

4. The baptismal rite of Joannes, was it of heaven or of men?

5. And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we should say of heaven, he will say, Why did ye not put faith in him?

6. And if we should say of men, the whole royal-people will stone us, For they put faith in the fact that Joannes was a prophet.

7. And they answered that they did not know whence (it was).

8. And Jesous said unto them, Neither am I telling you in (in the use of) what official-power I am doing (causing) these things.

9. And he began to speak unto the royal-people this parable: A man planted a vineyard, and let it out to husbandmen, and went away from home for long (lit sufficient) periods of time.

10. And in season (or at an appointed time) he sent unto the husbandmen a bond-servant, that they might give unto him from the fruit of the vineyard: and the husbandmen flayed him and sent him away empty.

11. And he repeated to send another bond-servant: and that one they flayed and dishonored and sent away empty;

12. And he repeated to send a third; and this one also they wounded and cast out.

13. And the lord of the vineyard said, what shall I do? I will send my Son, the Beloved. Surely they will regard him.

14. And when the husbandmen saw him they reasoned with one another saying, This is the heir-at-law. Let us kill him, that the inheritance may have become ours:

15. And they cast him out of the vineyard and slew him. What then will the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16. He will come and destroy these husbandmen and give the vineyard to others. And when they heard they said, May it not become so.

17. And looking on them he said, What then is this which hath been written, A stone which the builders rejected for value this hath become a head of a corner?

18. Any one who falleth upon this stone will have been broken into pieces; and upon whomsoever it shall fall it will pulverize (lit winnow) him.

19. And the chief-priests and scribes sought to lay their hands upon him in that hour, and they feared the royal-people. For they were aware that he had spoken this parable in respect to them.

20. And they watched covertly and suborned men, who pretended to be just (justified) themselves to lay hold of his word; so as to deliver him up to the authority and official-power of the leader.

21. And they asked him saying, Teacher, we know that thou speakest and teacheth uprightly, and dost not take a face (show partiality), but truly dost teach the way of God.

22. Is it a proper thing for us to give tribute to Kaisar or not?

23. But he saw through their subtlety and said unto them,

24. Show me a denarion: Whose image and inscription hath it? They answered and said, Kaisar's;

25. And he said unto them, Render then unto Kaisar the things that are Kaisar's, and unto God the things that are God's.

26. And they were not strong enough to lay hold of his oracular word (spoken word) in the presence of the royal-people; and they wondered at his answer and remained silent.

27. And certain ones of the Saddoucees who deny that there [illegible] resurrection asked him saying,

28. Teacher, Mouses wrote for us, that if one's brother die having a wife, and he be childless, his brother should take the wife and raise up seed out of her for his brother.

29. There were then seven brothers, and the first took a wife and died childless;

30. And the second took the wife and he died childless;

31. And the third took her likewise, and likewise also the seven;

32. And the woman died last.

33. Whose wife of these doth the woman become in the resurrection? For the seven had her as a wife.

34. And Jesous said unto them, The sons of this age marry and are given in marriage;

35. But those who have been accounted worthy to attain that age and the resurrection which is from among the dead, neither marry nor are they given in marriage.

36. Moreover neither can they die any more. For they are equal-angels (or messengers, no subordination as in marriage) and are sons of God, being sons of the resurrection.

37. And that the dead are awakened even Mouses indicated at the bramble-bush, when he saith that the Lord is the God of Habraam and the God of Isaak and the God of Jacob.

38. And he is not (a God (dispenser) of dead ones, but of living ones. For they all live unto him.

39. And certain ones of the scribes answered and said, Teacher, thou hast spoken well.

40. For they no longer dared to ask him anything.

41. And he said unto them, How do they say that the Christ is Daveid's Son?

42. And Daveid himself saith in a book of the psalms, The Lord hath said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand

43. Until I make thine enemies a footstool for thy feet.

44. Daveid (then) calleth him lord, and how is he his son?

45. And as all this royal-people were listening, he said unto the disciples,

46. Take heed of the scribes who purpose to walk in priestly-robes and like greetings in the market-places, and chief-seats in the synagogues and chief-couches at the suppers:

47. Who are devouring widows' households and with pretense offer long votive-prayers. They will receive a more exceeding verdict.

COMMENT.

"Withstood" instead of "came unto." R. V.

"Official-power" instead of "authority." R. V. Not the same thought by any means, as I have already explained several times.

"Word" instead of "question." R. V. An important difference here. It is God's word he is talking here, not a mere question of his own.

"Royal-people" instead of "people." R. V. The covenant-people meant the people of the king, God being the king—the word we get "laity" from.

"And went away from home" instead of "went into another country." R. V. It is a great comfort to know that God is away from home when he is away from this earth, as taught here, and in the apocalyptic vision of Joannes.

"For sufficient periods of time" instead of "a long time." R. V. Very suggestive to say the least.

"Flayed" instead of "beat." R. V. Literal and much more suggestive of the kind of beating inflicted.

"This" instead of "the same." R. V.

"Suborned men" instead of "spies." R. V.

"Who" instead of "which." R. V.

"Leader" instead of "governor." This is a common term among all the civilized nations of this day and does not mean what we mean by the term "governor."

"Teacher" instead of "Master" all through this chapter. Do you not see a design in this persistent perversion, gentle reader?

"Not strong enough" instead of "not able." R. V.

"Oracular-word" instead of "saying." R. V.

"As a wife" instead of "to wife," R. V. makes better English I think.

"This age" instead of "this world." R. V.

"That age" instead of "that world." R. V.

"Equal-angels" instead of "equal to the angels" R. V. which destroys the true signification of the passage.

"Bramble-bush" instead of "Bush." R. V. Not unimportant to the thoughtful inquirer.

"And" instead of "for," R. V., which gives an added statement instead of a conclusion.

"Priestly-robes" instead of "long robes," R. V. Every gentleman of this day wore a long robe, and would have attracted no particular attention. These wanted to be thought priests.

"Suppers" instead of "feasts." R. V.

"Couches" instead of "places." R. V.

"A more exceeding verdict" instead of "a greater condemnation." R. V. The word here is κρίμα, not κατάκριμα, and the two words are not used interchangeably. We may infer of course that this verdict will be condemnatory; but why not let the reader draw his own conclusion. Translation is one thing and interpretation is another.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are here with subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

EVANGELIST FUND.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed, prompted by a love of truth, and prayerfully desiring the salvation of our fellow beings, agree to pay into the hands of our Conference Treasurer L. B. Boggs, Argos, Indiana, the several sums herein pledged as free-will offerings to a fund to be devoted to sounding out the Word of reconciliation by the tongue of the earnest Evangelist. These contributions to be paid within one year from Nov. 18, 1893.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

S. C. OLIVER, Pres.
E. F. RANDOLPH, Sec'y.

Low Rates to the South.

On Feb. 8th, March 8th and April 9th, land seekers excursion tickets will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines to a large number of prominent points in Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia and Florida. Tickets will be good returning twenty days from date of sale and will be sold to all applicants at one fare for the round trip. For details please apply to nearest Pennsylvania Line Ticket Agent or address F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Christian Hymnal. The above is the title of a Hymn Book issued from THE RESTITUTION office, containing 1 6 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, printed on fine paper, from good clear type. Music on every page, followed by two to four sets of words that go to the music, making over 500 hymns. To this is added 42 pages of Hymns for Children to our Sunday Schools or at home. Price 35 cents each. 3 copies for $1.00; 6 copies for $2.00; 12 copies, $4.00. Special rates to congregations wishing larger quantities to place in churches, or to those who will act as agents and introduce the work in their neighborhoods.

A Letter to a Friend. A new edition of this popular work has been printed. It is not necessary to say a word about this work to the older readers, but to the new ones we say the subject treated of is the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the One Hope, One Faith, and One Baptism." It was written some years ago by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff, and it is truly "A letter to a Friend." Many editions have been printed and distributed until this little 32 page tract is acknowledged as the most effective missionary that can be handed out. Price 10 cts. each. Send and get a supply to distribute.

Future Probation. By Wm. G. Moncrieff. We have received an invoice of the new book of 148 pages, written by William Glen Moncrieff, subject, "Future Probation: Is That Awaiting Any of the Unrighteous?" Bro. Moncrieff is a writer well known to our readers, and of undoubted ability. This book is paper covers, and sells for 12 cts. each, and can be had at this office.

Poetry.

At the Turn of the Road.

Where the rough road ends and the valley sweet
Smiles bright with its calm and bloom,
We'll forget the thorns that have pierced the feet
And the nights with their grief and gloom;
And the sky will smile, and the stars will beam,
And we'll lay us down in the light to dream.

We shall lay us down in the bloom and light
With a prayer and a tear for rest,
As tired children who creep at night
To the love of a mother's breast,
And for all the grief of the stormy past,
Rest shall be sweeter at last—at last!

Sweeter because of the weary way
And the lonesome night and long,
While the darkness drifts to the perfect day
With its splendor of light and song—
The light that shall bless us and bless us and love us
And sprinkle the sweet of heaven above us!

—Frank L. Stanton.

Original.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 21.

1. And looking up he saw the rich casting their votive-gifts into the sacred-treasury.

2. And he saw a certain very poor widow casting there two lepta (mites)

3. And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, This poor (beggarly lit) widow hath cast more than they all.

4. For they all of their abundance have cast in among the votive-gifts (or lit into the votive-gifts) of God, but she of her lack hath cast in all the living that she had.

5. And as certain ones were saying of the temple that it had been adorned with beautiful stones and devoted-offerings, he said

6. Days will come when, of these things which ye are gazing at, there will not have been left a stone upon a stone that will not have been taken down.

7. And they asked him saying, Teacher, when therefore will these things be? And what the sign, when these things are destined to occur?

8. And he said, Look out, lest ye may have been led astray: For many will come in my name, saying, I am he, and the appointed time hath drawn nigh, Go not your way after them.

9. And whenever ye may hear of wars and revolutions be not dumbfounded. For these things must occur first; but not straightway is the consummation.

10. Then said he unto them, Nation will have arisen against nation and kingdom against kingdom.

11. And great earthquakes and pestilences and famines will there be in diverse places, and fearful and great signs will there be from heaven,

12. And before all these things they will lay their hands upon you and will persecute and deliver you up to synagogues and prisons, led away unto kings and leaders for my name's sake.

13. It will result in the way of testimony for you.

14. Set it therefore in your hearts not to premeditate the defense you are to make,

15. For I myself will give unto you a mouth and wisdom, which all who oppose you will not be able to withstand or gainsay.

16. And ye will have been delivered up even by parents and brothers and kindred and friends, and they will put some of you to death,

17. And ye will be hated by all for my name's sake.

18. And a hair of your head shall not perish.

19. In your patient-endurance maintain your souls.

20. And whenever ye shall have seen Hierousalem surrounded by military camps, then know the desolation thereof hath drawn nigh.

21. Then may those in Joudaia have fled unto the mountains; and may those in the midst thereof have withdrawn, and those in the provinces not have entered into her.

22. For these are days of requital that all the things that have been written may have been fulfilled.

23. Woe unto those who have in womb and those who are nursing in those days; For there will be great necessity upon the earth and wrath on this royal-people.

24. And they will fall in the mouth of the sword, and they will have been led away captive in among all the nations; And Hierousalem will be trodden down by nations until appointed times for nations shall have been fulfilled.

25. And there will be signs in sun and moon and stars and upon the earth constraint of nations in perplexity because of a sea's echo and leaping.

26. With men discouraged by reason of fear and expectations of the things that are coming upon the inhabited (earth); For the hosts (lit abilities of intelligent forces are meant, or forces merely of natural forces are meant) of heaven will have been shaken.

27. And then will they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with ability (possibly a host) and great glory.

28. And when these things begin to occur, take courage and lift up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh.

29. And he spake a parable unto them. Ye have seen the fig-tree and all the trees.

30. Whenever they have already put forth ye know of yourselves that the summer harvest is nigh.

31. In this wise also know ye, when these things have occurred, that the kingdom of God is nigh.

32. Verily I say unto you, this race (Israilitish race) shall not have passed away until they all have occurred.

33. The heavens and the earth (a shorter expression for the cosmos of the heavens and the earth) will pass away; but my words shall not pass away.

34. Take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be surfeited with debauchery and drunkenness and with the anxieties of your livelihood, and that day stand over you suddenly.

35. For like a snare as it were will it come upon all those who are sitting at ease upon the face of all the earth.

36. Be wakeful then in every period beseeching that ye may have been accounted worthy to escape all these things that are destined to occur and may stand in the presence of the Son of Man.

37. And he was teaching during the days in the temple and nights he went out and lay out of doors in the mountain called the Mount of the Olive-orchards.

38. And all the royal-people came at dawn unto him in the temple to listen to him.

COMMENT.

"Votive-gifts" instead of "gifts" merely. R. V.

"Two lepta" instead of "two mites." R. V. Why not give the thing just as it is? They did not have "mites" in those days as a denomination of money.

"Very poor" instead of "poor" merely. R. V.

"Beautiful stones" and "devoted offerings" instead of "goodly stones and offerings." R. V. These were not an essential part of the building but ornaments and furnishings of the interior. These were the stones he was prophesying would be "taken down." As devoted offerings they had been "set up" and were sacred. There are some of the foundation-stones of this temple still in place, and if the prophecy had related to these it would not have been fulfilled yet.

"Teacher" instead of "Master." R. V. of course.

"Consummation" instead of "end." R. V. This is too ambiguous a term to translate the idea here, and many have been led astray by this vague translation. It is the end of a period here being spoken of, not the end of the world of course.

"Leaders" instead of "governors." R. V.

"Defense" instead of "answer." R. V.

"Shall" instead of "will" and "will" instead of "shall" R. V. all along here.

"Maintain" instead of "win." R. V.

"Provinces" instead of "country." R. V.

"Requital" instead of "vengeance." R. V. God is not a God of vengeance.

"Discouraged" instead of "fainting" or "expiring." R. V.

"A sea's echo and leaping" instead of "the roaring of the sea and the billows." R. V.

"Coming upon the inhabited" instead of "coming on the world." R. V.

"And" instead of "but." R. V.

"Ye have seen the fig-tree, etc.," instead of "behold the fig-tree, etc." R. V.

"Whenever they have ready put forth" instead of "when they shoot forth." R. V.

"Summer-harvest" instead of "summer" merely. R. V. For the assertion of the kingdom of God on the earth is "the summer-harvest" in parable language.

"Race" instead of "generation." R. V.

"Until they have occurred" instead of "till all things be accomplished." R. V. It is very evident that the end of all things terrestrial are not meant here and the text does not warrant any such translation.

"The heavens"-not "heaven." R. V. It would be a very sad thing to have "heaven" itself pass away where all the saints expect to go, wouldn't it?

"Anxieties of your livelihood" instead of "cares of this life." R. V. We can get rid of anxieties or worry; but it is not desirable to be divested of cares."

"For like a snare as it were will it come upon, etc.," instead of dividing the two clauses as does the R. V., and attaching the comparison to the first clause instead of the second.

"Be wakeful then in every period" instead of "but watch ye at every season." R. V.

"That ye may have been accounted worthy" instead of "that ye may prevail" R. V.

"And lay out of doors" instead of "lodged." R. V.

This is not the distributive use of day and night here "every day and every night." It is less specific than this and as I have given it.

"And all the royal-people" instead of "all the people." R. V. The laity or the rank and file of the old covenant people who were in the habit of frequenting the temple, not the heathen of course.

The word here translated "olives" in the C. V. and R. V. means "olive-orchards" not the fruit called "olives," and this mountain was so-called in fact because its sides were covered with olive-orchards at this time in a high state of cultivation. There are no little points in God's word. Let us try and get at it just as it is therefore.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Our Relationship to the Apostasy.

It was my purpose, for a time at least, not to write any more upon the above topic, and would not have done so, had not Bro. Joblin's Reviewer in his criticisms on our brother's able articles entitled "The Seed of the Woman," so persistently allied me with him in his criticisms, and quoted from, and criticised statements in my articles in his reviews of Brother Joblin's excellent expositions, that in justice to myself, I felt that I must write this one at least.

In THE RESTITUTION of Jan. 10, "W. J." writes an article entitled, "Answer to Reviewer's No. 3," and in place of answering "Reviewer's No. 3," he immediately proceeds to review "W. H. W.," and says:

"I find in 'the record that God hath given of his Son,' that He and Father are 'ONE,' and that to see the Son is to see the Father. John x. 30; xi. 45; xiv. 9. But if in spite of that record and the danger of doubting it ((1 John v. 10) I were so puffed up with my little earthly arithmetic as to cry out 'One plus one equals two every time,' (W. H. W.), forgetting the axiom that to every human rule there is some exception; how could I expect to understand the great mystery as to how 'God was manifested in the flesh?' And to write 'Babylon' after every occurrence of mystery would be too absurd for any sane man."

There is a right and a wrong way in dividing the Word of Truth. Now I submit whether the right way to divide the Word of Truth is to quote a part of a sentence from one book, and attach it to a part of a sentence in an entirely different book, with a few connecting words and exhibit that to us as the way to divide God's Word. Yet this is the way "W. J." has divided the Word, in this instance, any one can satisfy himself by referring to the first part of the quotation in this article.

He quotes from 1 John v. 10, 11, the following words: "the record that God hath given of his Son," he then quotes some more from John x. 30, and attaches it to the above text, with some connecting words, and by this method he makes the following sentence: "I find in 'the record that God hath given of his Son,' that He and Father are One." But if we take the Word of God straight, just as we find it, we have the following as the record God gave of his Son: "And this is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "W. J." makes out by his division of the Word, "that he (Christ) and Father are One," in nature, the Bible "that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." So in the case of "W. J." the "record" is a unity of Father and Son, in nature, in the case of the Bible, the "record" is, that we have eternal life in the Son, two entirely different things presented as the record God gave of his Son. Any doctrine can be taught by taking a few words from one book and a few words from another book and forming a sentence of the two selections, but it is surely a false method in dividing the Word. Refer to the first part of this article in RESTITUTION of Jan. 10, and witness it for yourself.

I quote again from the same article: "I were so puffed up with my little earthly arithmetic as to cry out 'One plus one equals two every time' ('W. H. W.') forgetting the axiom that to every human rule there is some exception."

This "little earthly arithmetic," is indeed so small, that no one need be "puffed up" with that much knowledge. It is a simple lesson that is taught in our schools to every six year old child by object lessons, even before it has learned the alphabet. This is a rule to which there is no "exception." It is the base of all mathematical calculations both human and divine, as for instance: "six days shall work be done," "the tenth day of the seventh month," etc., "the fifteenth day of this seventh month," etc., is all reckoned by the addition of units. There is not a single case of a mathematical problem either in the Bible, or out of it, that can dispense with this rule, and successfully solve any problem. Hence, there can be no "exception," except it may be the retrograde principle of the apostasy, that it takes three gods to make one god, hence by the same principle, six gods would equal two gods, etc. "W. J." uses this same principle. We learn from him that the Father and the Son are two separate and distinct persons, and each of these persons is God, and yet there is but one God, hence these two Gods equal one God.

There is positively no exception to the rule that one plus one equal two, or that ten plus six equals sixteen, etc., etc. It is certainly not true that one plus one equals one, or that two plus one equals one. To sustain "W. J.'s" strange "heavenly mathematics," he certainly has to resort to novel methods. Listen: "Has not reviewer heard of e pluribus unum which means one composed of many?"

The American government is a combination of several States, but this federation forms but one government, and not two, just like a machine may be composed of several parts, and these several parts compose but one machine. A family may be composed of several members, and these members form but one family. No one would be foolish enough to assert that they formed two families. The unit adheres to the government, machine, and family, and not in the several elements which are necessary to form the government, family, and machine, and yet "W. J.'s" "heavenly mathematics," counts the elements which compose the objects spoken of in place of the object. Would "any sane man," suppose that because a machine may be composed of six parts, that therefore there must be six machines? It is one machine composed of six parts, and not one machine composed of 'six machines, same as the trinity believers have three Gods to make one God, and "W. J." has two Gods to make one God. According to "my little earthly arithmetic," it is on a par with asserting that six machines make one machine, in place of six parts making one machine. The phrase "e pluribus unum," (one composed of many,) is rather unfortunate for "W. J.'s" position when applied to God, seeing only one person can be God. "I am God, and there is none else." Isa. xlv. 22. "I" is a personal pronoun in the singular number, and is applicable only to one person, and never to either a dual or tripart God. Those gods are of human creation.

I now wish to call attention to a novel quotation as follows:

"When one of my reviewers comes to meeting in new cloths, do the people suppose him to be mere clothes? And does he not have to put on or get into the clothes before coming to meeting in them? The analogy though imperfect is sufficient to show how illogical it is to suppose that Christ was a mere man or mere flesh because He came 'in the flesh.' * * * Where has the Bible ever said that any other being 'came in the flesh?'"

I hardly think that if Bro. Joblin should put on a new suit of clothes and go to meeting in it, the brethren would think he was made of cloth, but would expect to find a real flesh and blood man inside of the clothing. So the teaching "W. J." evidently wishes to illustrate by his novel illustration is, that as the clothes could not be Bro. Joblin, but Bro. Joblin must be inside of the clothing. So the flesh could not be Christ, but the Christ must be inside of the flesh, like Bro. Joblin should be inside of his clothing.

"W. J." evidently thinks the expression "come in the flesh," is something that is peculiar to Jesus alone, when he says: "Where has the Bible ever said that any other being came in the flesh?"

It is simply astonishing that he should ask such a question, and make a point on the words "in the flesh," as though it meant the same as a man getting "into his clothes." Does not know that such expressions abound in the Scriptures, and are applied to mortal man? I will quote a sample: Phil. i. 22, 24. "If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor," etc., "Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." Now, was it necessary for Paul in order that he might "live in the flesh," or "abide in the flesh" that Paul himself must be a seperate and dispersonality from the flesh he abode in, and lived "in the flesh," like a man lives "in" a house, or "in" a suit of clothes? These expressions are just the same as those that speak of Christ being "in the flesh." If in the case of Christ the phrase "in the flesh," meant that he dwelt in the flesh, like a man does in a suit of clothes, it means the same with regard to Paul, for the language applied to Paul is of equal force.

He also tells us that Christ existed as the second person in the Divine nature before his birth of Mary. Such being the case, and he appeared among men "in" flesh, like a man appears among his fellows "in" a suit of clothes, and as the clothes was not the man, so likewise the flesh was not the Christ, any more than the clothes was the man. Now if this Christ which took his abode in a house of flesh possessed the divine nature, he could not die, yet Paul in 1 Cor. xv. says "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain." "And if Christ be not raised your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Now if Christ possessed the divine nature from his birth he could not possibly die according to the Scriptures, and if he could not die, he could not be raised from the dead according to the Scripture. "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

"W. J." has evidently felt the force of the Scripture which affirms that "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God," and seeks to evade it by playing on the word "in" when he says: "When one of my reviewers comes to meeting in new clothes, do the people suppose him to be mere clothes?" The thought is that his reviewer is not clothes, but is inside of the clothes, so likewise the flesh was not Christ but Christ was "in" the flesh. But this teaching leads him into a worse difficulty. He says that the Christ which was in this clothing of flesh, was the "second person in the Divine nature," before he put on this clothing of flesh, and hence, could not die, all that died was his flesh clothing, and this clothing was not the Christ, any more than his reviewer was cloth.

Now, the Scriptures just quoted above presents to us a Christ that "died for our sins according to the Scriptures," and "rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." Now to preach a Christ who possessed the "divine nature," both before and while he dwelt "in" a clothing of flesh, is to preach a Christ incapable of either death or resurrection. This is a conclusion "W. J." cannot possibly evade. The "divine nature," is life eternal, and he has repeatedly told us that he was the "second person in the divine nature" before his birth, and this being the case it was not possible for him to change his nature. Now Paul says: "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they which are also fallen asleep in Christ are perished." To preach a Christ possessing the "divine nature" before receiving it at his resurrection from the dead, is to preach a Christ incapable of saving those who trust him.

Beware of false doctrine!!

W. H. WILSON.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Hell.

It has been some time now since my name has been seen by your readers. I do not want to be forgotten by the readers of THE RESTITUTION. I wish I had something better to write about than the topic selected, but this word has been in my thoughts since last Sunday night.

I had been thinking that my church (the M. E.) had concluded to drop this horrible dogma, but I was mistaken. Our little man had the immortal worms, the unquenchable fire, the never dying souls, Dives and Lazarus, the impassable gulf, everlasting fire and smoke ascending forever and forever! All out in full force. I asked a brother near me, in a whisper, why our preacher looked so pleasant while dilating on Hell, (he looked and talked like an anxious saleslady showing the latest styles to a customer.) "O he don't believe himself that the worms will be immortalized and that the fire will keep burning forever. You know he has been trying to start a revival, and our people don't respond, so he is trying Hell as a motor." A clergyman here a few Sundays ago said from the pulpit, "I wish that every minister of the gospel for the next five years at least, would drop talking about the other world, and give their entire attention to this one. (He is an Episcopalian.) Our Lord had very little to say about the other world in his sermon on the mount, or anywhere."

All this nonsense about immortal worms, smoke from the pit, etc., is caused by our false conception of human nature, human destiny. My preacher evidently believes that all men are immortal by nature, born immortal. He has surely never read the Scripture which says, "Who only hath immortality," (referring to God,) and again, "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body, but the natural body is first, afterward the spiritual," (after resurrection.)

Future Events.

Christ is to come again, Acts i. 2; raise the dead, John vi. 54; and overthrow all the kingdoms of this world, Dan. viii. 18; 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3; the kingdom of God will be under heaven, Dan. vii. 27; Israel will be restored to their own land, Ezekiel xxxvii. 21, 22; Luke viii. 29; the heathen shall come to a knowledge of the Lord in that day, Ezekiel xxxix. 21, 29: Rev. xiv. 6, 7; the Babylon that now exists shall fall, Rev. xviii. 1-24; the present state of things, both political and ecclesiastical, shall vanish, and a new heavenly state of things exist, Rev. xxi. 1-4, 10.

"In our prayers to God, long words, nicely chosen sentences and phrases are not required of us; the more simple the language the better can we express our wishes, and the more frequent will our prayer be. Oratory is very well to practice before our fellow creatures, it is pleasing to the ear and carries great force with it, but God requires no such thing."

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

"GREAT men are not always wise, neither do the aged understand judgment." Job. xxxii. 7.

BROTHER Joblin writes that still another obedient one has been welcomed to the household of faith in Cleveland.

THE dispatch from the State Capital of Ohio, on the 10th, said, that the House Chaplain caused an excitement by striking out from the shoulder in his prayer, and praying right at them. What a farce!

WE were delighted to see that our old-time brother, E. Hoyt, is still on deck pointing his guns at the enemy. The old warriors have been falling so fast of late that we sometimes feel quite lonesome. Up and at them again, dear brother.

THE living and acting of every one of us, brethren, is a serious thing. Everything we do or say is recorded in the memory of our fellows, and inscribed on our faces and in our manners, and in God's book, and after death the judgment.

DAVID seems to have found the morning the best time for reflection and devotion for he says, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, oh Lord." What voice? Doubtless the voice of praise and prayer—the one by looking back, the other by looking forward.

THE power of reflection depends upon the nearness of the object to the mirror; and hence, if we want to be powerful reflectors of Christ we must walk close to him; no two will probably reflect with the same power, nor reflect the same traits: John, reflected love; Paul, zeal; Peter, courage; Dorcas, benevolence, others devotion, others again, meekness, and so on, according to their make-up.

WHEN national affairs are discussed in this country by large bodies of representative men it would seem from the amount of self congratulations and boastings that the whole country belonged to a mutual admiration society—Such progress, such growth, such possibilities, but they seldom speak of, because blind to, the fact that every species of crime is alarmingly on the increase; and seem to forget that it is righteousness which exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. Some one has beautifully compared our social system to a pyramid, with its broad base resting on the mass of the people, and its sides rising up through legislators and governors until they reach the apex in the chief Magistrate,—and has said that this is the most stable form of human government. But it must be admitted that there can be but little stability about it if the material be as [illegible] that the pyramid is built of. If the mass of the people be corrupt what is to keep the fabric from falling?

NO one can read the epistles to the seven churches without being struck with the perfect cognizance of the Captain of our Salvation, of the thoughts, deeds and actions of every soldier of the cross and crown. Oh, those searching words, "I know thy works." We do not realize the meaning of the words in Heb. vi. 6, "they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh;" or as the Diaglott, "having re-crucified, and are exposing to contempt the Son of God." There can be little room for doubt that the sufferings of our Lord have not ended yet. The head suffers with the body, and when we remember how his tears would flow when he dwelt upon the unbelief and wickedness of his own people and thought of the doom that awaited them, there can be no doubt that even upon the exalted throne of His Father it is a source of sorrow to him to see his sheep straying out of the fold. Oh, let us study not to grieve him; be careful not to re-open his wound, and be among those who will glorify him when he comes; never forgetting that he knows all about us,—the secrets of all hearts, and the spring of all actions.

IT was a long time after David was anointed before he was established on his throne. And Abraham only obtained the promise after he had patiently endured, and it is after we have suffered awhile that we shall be made perfect. And, so to speak, God's plan is to hold back till creative confidence and human expedients have spread a dark ground on which his glory can be seen to advantage.

IT doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Yea; we shall see his face; our apprehension of him will be clear; we shall partake of him; and it will be a ceaseless, uninterrupted state,—a perfect state. And whatever we have heard or read or thought of him before, we shall then, doubtless, exclaim with the queen of Sheba at the sight of Solomon. "The half was not told."

THE believer should never forget that he must live soberly, righteously and godly;—must walk in wisdom towards those that are without;—must adorn the doctrine of Christ our Savior in all things—eating, drinking, talking, trading—all things. The believer who has intelligently surrendered himself to him who has bought him knows all this, but his pure mind may need stirring up by way of remembrance. The beloved Paul tells the Corinthians that the things he preached and they believed will save them if they are kept in memory. 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2.

WE mentioned the fact some months ago that one of the United States Consuls to Turkey, had renounced Christianity, became a Mohammedan, and would come home and labor in his native country as a Moslem Missionary. The papers state that he is now creating a very favorable impression in Rochester, New York. It is singular indeed that an American could have seen the degradation of women, and the blighting, dwarfing, defiling effects of Islamism in Egypt, Asia Minor and Greece should think America could be lifted to a higher plane of existence by it; but so it is; anything but the truth of God will be eagerly siezed no matter what it costs; the Truth cannot be given away.

SAID Jesus, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, yea Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs." The question has been asked, "what Jesus meant by the words, More than these." Did he mean the fish, the boats, the nets, the appliances by which he had gained his subsistence? Or, did he point to the rest of the disciples, when he said, "Lovest thou me more than these?" We do not feel competent to decide; but we are inclined to think that it had reference to these means of subsistence, because if our Lord meant the rest of the disciples, it would imply that Peter knew the hearts of the others sufficient to compare them with his own and had to tell before them that he loved more than [illegible] If any one, having carefully considered this matter, can [illegible] any more light on the question we shall be glad to hear from him.

WE met with a paragraph the other day which said, "Atheism is a disease of towns," and went on to say, "that he who would say there is no God, has first to turn away from hill and vale verdant with waving woods or bright with waving corn, shut out the sun, the moon, the stars from converse with his soul, bury himself in a closet where the wooing face of nature is unseen, and her beating heart unheard; and there weave a chain of argument,—construct his family without a father, his universe without a purpose, and which no will controls, trace laws that lead to a necessity that own no law. Atheism is a disease of the towns and cities. Air and sunshine, sight of the living tribes whom the hand supplies, the music of the winds and waves, one burst of sympathy with the mirth, the melody, the awe that are around us—these are its cure. In nature God is felt. This truly ought to convince reasonable men of the existence of a God—as Paul says, they are without excuse.

WE give in this issue Bro. Jones' "Answer to Reviewers' No. 6," and also an article from Bro. W. H. Wilson in reply to mention of his articles. It has been the intention to keep out as far as possible all the writings of others on the "Pre-existence" question, and leave Bros. Jones and Joblin to produce all the arguments on both sides. Bro. Wilson was writing entirely independent and was criticised, hence given opportunity to defend himself. He does not wish to enter the field. We believe the large majority of our readers are willing to have this controversy brought to a close. Many have been interested in it, but they think that all the real arguments on both sides are presented, and further continuance will only be sharp bandying of words that will be unpleasant and conduce to personalities very soon, and so be positively injurious. In next issue we will give Bro. Joblin's article that has been on hand for two weeks, and we ask the brothers who have been engaged in this "discussion" to present in as short a space as possible any argument they may have in store not presented as yet, and then to please take up some other lines of work. We wish to give a reasonable chance for discussion, especially on subjects that will admit of positive Scriptural settlement. We know, of course, that each contestant fully believes he has presented enough evidence in support of his side to convince the world, but the only thing he has done is to establish those who were already believers in his side. The other side are as strong in their belief. Brethren, the sentiment expressed in the lines following are ours Let us all work together, and much will be accomplished. Let us publish abroad the good news of Jesus' work for us, and his soon coming, and when he comes and we live and see him, if we have any doubt then, let's ask him for settlement, but we hope the joy of that glad time will banish all doubts and fears we may have.

Go forth, ye heralds, in His name;
Sweetly the Gospel trumpet sound;
The glorious jubilee proclaim
Where'er the human race is found.

The joyful news to all impart,
And teach them where salvation lies;
With care bind up the wounded heart,
And wipe the tears from weeping eyes.

Be wise as serpents, as you go,
But harmless as the peaceful dove;
And let your heaven-taught conduct show
That you're commissioned from above.

Freely from Him ye do receive,
Freely, in love, to others give;
Thus they your doctrines will believe,
And, by the gospel they may live.

THERE is said to have been preserved in the city of Prague, a missal containing the ancient liturgy of the Hussites, one of whose illustrations represents Wicklif at the top of the page kindling a spark. Just below, Huss is portrayed blowing the spark into a flame. And finally, underneath Huss stands Luther brandishing a lighted torch. It is a just portrayal of the relations in which the three men stood historically to each other. Wicklif was the pioneer in the work for which Huss gave up his life, and Luther was put under the ban, the outcome of which has been to scatter the Word of God by millions in all quarters of the globe,—and if but few are saved by it the people are being uplifted in many ways so as to appreciate the mighty revolution when it comes.

Selected.

Opinions on Foreign Affairs.

The Times' Roman correspondent indignantly denied a short time ago that Italy had ever entered into negotiations at St. Petersburg in order to learn whether some sort of guarantee would be given to her, that she would not suffer should she secede from the Triple Alliance. The same correspondent now admits that he was wrong, and falls back upon the negotiations having been inaugurated by the Government of the Marquis Rudini, and Signor Crispi not having had anything to do with them. As the latter was not then in the Government, no one ever supposed that he had. The present Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, says the correspondent, is "in absolute agreement with his chief in his adherence to the Alliance and the English understanding as the bases of the foreign policy of Italy."

When Lord Salisbury was in power I several times asked whether there was any understanding between Great Britain and Italy in regard to joint action under any possible contingency. Lord Salisbury denied it, and Mr. Gladstone on one occasion urged me in the House of Commons to be satisfied with the denial, for if any sort of engagement had been given by Lord Salisbury, this would not be binding on the country; as not only had it not been submitted to Parliament, but its existence had been officially denied. On the present Government assuming office, I again asked whether there was any document in the Foreign Office showing, either directly or indirectly, that any understanding had been come to with Italy as to a joint course of action in the event of her finding herself involved in a war with France, owing to her being a party to the Triple Alliance. The reply was that no such document was in existence. For the Times' Roman correspondent, therefore, to pretend that such an understanding exists is practically to assert that Lord Salisbury and Lord Rosebery are liars.

The facts are, I believe, these: When Crispi renewed the Triple Alliance, he induced Lord Salisbury to express a pious opinion respecting England not desiring that the status quo should be altered in the Mediterranean. Being anxious to carry his point in the Italian Chambers, he caused his journals to translate this pious opinion into an assurance that, if Italy joined in a war to defend Alsace against a French attack, England would protect the Italian coast from any hostile operations on the part of France; but he never ventured to confirm this myth himself in the Chamber. Rudini floated between the Franco-Russian and the Austro-German alliance. Now that Crispi has returned to power, he has again started the myth of an understanding with England in his journals. Italy is bankrupt. Taxation has reached its extreme limit. The country has either to vastly reduce the military expenditure, to which she is pledged as a member of the Triple Alliance, or she has to go into liquidation. Only a very short time ago she endeavored to obtain a loan in Germany by the hint that, if not provided with money, she would withdraw from the Alliance, and at the same time she offered Russia to withdraw from it on conditions. The result is that no one counts on Italy. Were a European war to take place she would in all probability remain neutral, and on its close endeavor to obtain something for herself, by vowing that she had warmly sympathized with the victor.

Not, indeed, that I blame Italy for this. If she be wise, she will remain on friendly terms with all, allying herself with none. In this case, no one will attack her, and she will be able to reduce her military expenditure to a defensive basis. The King has already lost his popularity by insisting on an expenditure based upon the possibility of being able at once to defend his own country, and to send a corps d'armee to aid Germany in defending Alsace. If he does not withdraw from this untenable position, he will lose his throne. This is, however, a matter that concerns Italy. But she must clearly understand that if she goes to war with France in order to aid Germany, we shall not step in to protect her from the consequences of this folly.

When Prince Bismarck got up the Triple Alliance, he had a clear perception of what was to the advantage of his country. This was to secure allies in the event of France endeavoring to regain her lost provinces. The Triple Alliance replaced that of the three Emperors, and Italy assumed the place that had been assigned to Russia in the former. But Bismarck took care to keep on sufficiently good terms with Russia to hinder her from entering into an alliance with France. Count Caprivi did not understand this tortuous policy, and the consequence has been a Franco-Russian counter alliance. Thus Continental Europe is split up into two armed camps. Rudini, very wisely, as I think, sought to withdraw from either camp. Why the Times should regard this preference for Italy over other countries on the part of an Italian statesman as a proof of bad faith, I do not know. When I want to know what a country will do, I look to what is most advantageous to it, and, treaties or no treaties, I know that it will pursue this course, unless its statesmen are fools, or are actuated by personal resentments.

There are three causes which may lead to a European war: (1) The desire of France to reacquire her lost provinces, (2) the desire of Russia to obtain a direct maritime outlet, (3) the position of Egypt in regard to ourselves. I would have us leave France and Germany to settle the first without let or hindrance from us; I would not interfere with the Russian aspiration; and I would act upon our international pledges in regard to Egypt. I am an Imperialist in the sense that I would defend the Empire if attacked. I am not an Imperialist, if this means that we ought to meddle in other people's "spheres" or to assume a right to hinder annexations on the part of foreign countries because we deem that these do not meet with our approval.—London Truth.

Does Pardon Come Before Baptism?

Yes, in answer comes from many an honest heart. If we ask for the proof we are told by these sincere souls that they feel that their sins have all been pardoned, that the burden that weighed them down has been removed, and they now feel free from condemnation. This kind of proof proves too much, and therefore proves nothing. This same feeling of a burden rolled off is experienced by every adherent of all the false religions of the world. It matters not what the conditions are, or how absurd, ridiculous, or cruel they may be. To obey them brings the same result, to-wit: the burden removed, and the anger of the particular God sinned against appeased. Implicit faith must be associated with the conditions to be complied with in order to bring about the desired end. The devout and ignorant Romanist, by paying the priest a certain sum of money gets rid of his burden of guilt, and goes away a happy man. The Hindoo mother, by throwing her infant child into the Ganges to be devoured by crocodiles, obtains relief from her burden. The devotees of all religions experience a sense of guilt or feel that they have offended their Gods by some act or word, and seek to put themselves in favor with their respective deities by doing something to secure this end. They must have faith in their gods, and faith in the conditions to be complied with. The same kind of evidence relied on by the Christian (?) is equally good in the case of the heathen. So this kind of evidence amounts to nothing. It is not proof of pardon. But the Christian alleges, at this point, that faith and repentance accompanied by prayer and earnest pleadings, are the conditions of pardon, that these complied with the feeling of freedom from condemnation is experienced. To supplement this evidence this Scripture is quoted: "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Rom. viii. 16. This statement is construed to mean The Spirit beareth witness through or by means of our feelings. But this is a perversion of the text. "Our spirit" does not mean our feelings or emotions, but our minds or intellectual powers, for these only are capable of weighing and estimating the value of testimony. The emotions and passions can not do this. The rendering in the Diaglott is: "The Spirit itself testifies together with our spirit, that we are the children of God." In the apostolic church the extraordinary or supernatural manifestations of the Spirit were proof of sonship. I think the text in question has reference to these supernatural manifestations. Think of this, and dating at conversion, the word of the Spirit was pledged as proof of pardon and sonship, even in the days of the apostles; and the word of the Spirit must be the proof today. "For ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 26. "For as many of you as have baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Verse 27. Pardon was to be obtained in him, in whom was centered all saving power. Baptism is an act of faith, and puts the penitent believer into the Christ. It is the inducting act. Otherwise there is no sense in this statement, and no force and meaning in the preposition "into." Prior to baptism the believer is out of Christ. Faith and repentance are equally essential in the change from sinner to saint: but stop with these two steps and where does one find himself? Out of Christ surely, and disobedient to the word of the Lord. Is pardon found out of Christ and in a state of disobedience? To ask this question is to answer it.

I will now call the reader's attention to Acts ii. 38. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

I want the young readers of THE RESTITUTION to examine this text closely. It stands at the very threshold of the Christian system, at the beginning of this dispensation, was uttered under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is a command to be obeyed by all who wish to become Christians, and given in answer to an honest, earnest question. The repentance and baptism embodied in this text have reference to one and the same end, the remission of sins. These Jews believed Peter's preaching. They being pricked in their hearts, and the question they asked showed this. The two things commanded were to be done for, or in order to, the remission of sins. These done, pardon follows as surely as God has spoken. He who teaches that remission takes place prior to baptism and in answer to prayer and earnest pleading, makes void God's command, and puts those who heed the instructions where they can adduce no proof of pardon except their own fallible feelings. God is as good as his word. Appearances of fervor, devotion, love and piety are of no account when the word of the Lord is set at naught. When he commands certain things to be done these must be done, and commands them to be done in order to secure his favor, and he will surely grant it. If the favor is remission of sins he will freely pardon. Can you not believe the testimony of the Spirit on this point? If not you have no faith.

JOHN L. WINER.

From the Dakotas to the Coast.

On Friday night, Dec. 29, 1893, I boarded one of the wonderful chariots with their "flaming torches" of the Northern Pacific. Truly the fir trees were "terribly shaken" as our long train came thundering along laden with so many souls away from dear ones at home, so anxious for their safety.

On the plains "running like the lightnings." Up the ascent of the Rockies and the still more awe-inspiring Cascades, ascending so slowly and with seeming great caution around the many short curves, with the two great iron horses puffing and the chariots swaying and creaking. The passengers the meanwhile seemed oblivious to all danger, being so absorbed in contemplation of the wonders that met their vision. With the lofty fir trees and the clouds of heaven in many places far below them.

At the summit passing through two miles of tunnel, with a great lake over our heads. The descent being not quite so slow, yet with great caution, winding with such abrupt curves around the mountain side. Sometimes seeming to be going directly back from whence we came.

The gushing streams, mountain crags, and lofty firs, transported my mind away to that chosen land of God. The scene of such wonderful things of the past, and the still more wonderful things yet to be, when the mighty King from Zion's brow shall command all nations and "He maketh wars to cease to the ends of the earth." I thought of the beautiful words:

"O land of the Prophets and Fathers of old;
Could say you but half of the story unfold,
[illegible] write me a song that would bring to one time;
I would tell in my verse of that wonderful name."

Between the Cascade and coast range mountains lies the renowned Willamet Valley, into which we merged at the foot of the mountain. What a wonderful, radical change! from two feet of snow on the mountain, to spring-like green grass in the valley below.

This great valley is perhaps unsurpassed in fertility, and production of fruits, vegetables, and all cereals (save corn). The first year of failure is yet to be.

Arrived in Portland Monday night, the first day of the new year. Hastened at early dawn for the home of my daughter, ten miles out, where I much enjoyed my short visit. This was only five miles from Scholls Ferry, where there is a live congregation of the faith, numbering some fifty souls, with whom I enjoyed a pleasant visit. Delivered to the people there three discourses, whether or not to their edification or profit, I know not God knoweth. With preachers they are abundantly supplied, having four: Wm. Skeels (State Evangelist), W. W. Jaquith, Eddie Groat, and last but not least, Bro. Prosser, one of the able pioneers, but now from illness of a nervous character, not in active service, yet fully alive to the cause.

On Saturday, January 27, with daughter and her husband, went to the city of Portland, preparatory to my departure homeward. Remained there over Sunday. Saw the wonderful display of Oregon fruits which took the premium at the World's Fair in Chicago. Visited the beautiful "Lone Fir Cemetery" of East Portland, which contains the tombs where now sleeps my own dear Eva, and grandchild, Ethel, the idol of her mother. Called in the afternoon at the home of Judge Ward, formerly of Kentland, Ind., having a very enjoyable visit with himself and amiable wife. Leaving the city next day for home, stopping at Tacoma, Wash., a short time on business, arriving home on Saturday night, February 6th. Found all well and doing nicely, and the church prospering under the faithful watch care of Bro. Wm. Mills, with the judicious ministration of the word by Bros. E. C. Webster and Walker Perrine. For all which I was indeed thankful and much rejoiced in being permitted to greet them all again.

After the Love Feast.

Our love feast is now in a sense past, and was you there my brother, my sister? If not you missed a real genuine love feast. And why was you not there? look and see. And like the two disciples that went down to Emmaus, after hearing their risen Lord explain to them the Scriptures, and sat down to meat with them, and took bread and blessed it, and brake and gave to them, their eyes were opened and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight. Then they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked to us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures? So now, brethren, can we say that our hearts burned within us, and our whole being was enthused and electrified with divine spirit while the brethren were testifying to the grace of God! And now Bro. Dwiggins, for our good, comes in and refreshes our minds with a summary of the testimonies borne to the truth, to which I for one could but heartily respond—Amen, amen. And as some of the brethren that came in late were not counted, and others no doubt would like to have been in our social class meeting, but felt rather timid to arise and speak, or for some other reason was not there, and as the prophet says, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." I feel like Bro. Skeels' suggestion is a good one. Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him that endureth such contradiction of sinners against himself lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. Amen.

Poetry.

Two or Three.

There were only two or three of us
Who came to the place of prayer,
Came in the teeth of a driving storm,
But for that we did not care,
Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master Himself was present there
And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look in our leader's face,
So rapt, and glad, and free;
We felt his touch when our heads were bowed,
We heard his "Come to Me!"
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "Peace" was his token to every heart,
And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
From the weary shoulder fall;
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours for toil and strife
In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
To the little place of prayer,
Outside were struggle and pain and sin,
But the Lord Himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge he gave—
Wherever his loved ones be,
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
And our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers
And not like the crash of a storm;
"Twas a time of the dearest privilege
Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought how Jesus himself had come
To feed us with living bread.

Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

I will drop a few lines in your letter drawer. I love to see the names of dear ones scattered abroad giving their testimony for Jesus; for we know the time is short in which we have to work; for Christ will soon come in his glory to reward every man as his work shall be. With how much earnestness we ought to labor and strive to teach those who are out of Christ, the way of truth and life, and we, who have accepted Christ should so live as to set a good example before the world, so they will not say we are not Christians. Pure and undefiled religion is to visit the widows and fatherless in their affliction and keep yourself pure and unspotted from the world. I would love to see letters from many dear ones whose names are familiar to me. Occasionally we see one whom we know and it rejoices us. Pray for me, dear brethren and sisters that I may continue faithful and receive a crown of life that fadeth not away. Your sister in hope of Christ.

Editor Restitution:

Thinking some of the dear ones might like to hear from this part, I will write a few lines.

I am sorry to say our Church is not in as prosperous a condition religiously, as we were a few years ago. Bro. Prosser was then our main stand-by, and there was perfect unity and harmony among the brethren, but his health has been so poor for the last three years that he could not preach to us. I am afraid the church lacks its zeal and enthusiasm, its unity and harmony it once had. A luke-warmness is creeping in. Some are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, some returning back to their former course of living.

What does Peter say about these things? "For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning; for it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness than after they have known it to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them but it happened unto them, according to the true proverb, the dog has turned to his own vomit again, and the sow to her wallowing in the mire."

John says, "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome, because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world, they are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them."

Christ says, "If the world hate you, ye know it hated me before it hated you; if ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." What a blessed thought to know that Christ has chosen us out from the world. What ought we to care for the world or any of its allurements, so long as we know we belong to Christ? Our every thought and action ought then to be of Christ. If we feel that we are tempted to do wrong we ought to stop and ask, would Christ do that? When tempted to join in the pleasures of the world, first stop and ask did Christ join in worldly pleasure? Did Christ go to dances, play parties, and theaters? Did Christ ever figure in a game of euchre, or did he condemn all these things? Christ is our example. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect."

Dear brothers and sisters, please consider these thoughts carefully. We ought not to faint or grow weary in well-doing, seeing we have such a glorious promise in view. It will not be long. Though the world sneer at us, though trials and temptations beset us on every hand, the time will not be long ere our blessed and loving Savior will come in all his radiant splendor to gather his jewels home. To those dear ones who have recently made the start, I would say, press onward, the pleasures of this world are nothing, as compared with that glorious time, when the true followers of Christ will be robed in immortality. O be faithful, turn not back from the true and faithful teachings of Christ after you have once accepted them. "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." What a blessed thought. My earnest prayer is that we may live faithful, and ere long be blessed with Christ in his kingdom.

Dear Restitution:

We have read with interest and profit your pages, and especially have we enjoyed the few issues containing the "Love Feast," proposed by Bro. Dwiggins. It has been a long time since we had the privilege of hearing the Gospel of the Kingdom preached except through your pages. Yet, seldom have our names been seen among those of like precious faith. We are resolved however to write a few lines although too late for the Christmas number, yet such letters as we have had would be welcome at any season, and may be ours will be, as we know and are known by so many of your readers.

When Bros. Miller and Geiselman spoke of the good meetings we used to hold at Antioch and Argos, the dear faces mentioned touched tender cords with us for we have been there also, and so often have heard the glad testimonies from hearts overflowing with love for the Master. But, more sacred yet to our memories is to see dear Brother Chaplin at his accustomed place at the Lord's table, and while the waiters go round hear him say, "Eat ye all of it, for as oft as ye do this ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come again." Dear ones could this be realized once it would be a great pleasure to us. Be faithful to the end for our Savior has promised all that are faithful to his commandments to meet us there. "Verily, I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God." Mark xiv. 25. It depends on ourselves. Will we be there? We are determined by the grace of God to try and be faithful to the end and gain eternal life. We crave an interest in your prayers.

Your brother and sister, in Christ.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:

I have read with great interest all the letters in the two last numbers of The Restitution, and wish to say I have been greatly encouraged, and trust permanently strengthened by the feast, and if in any way my poor name will serve to edify the brethren in these last days of trial and doubting, I am willing to subscribe my awkward hand.

About thirteen years ago I enlisted in the righteous cause of Christ and his truth, and while the years pass by I do not regret that decision, and see no reason to desert. True, we have not always conquered but at times in some forgetful moment have been overcome and fell. We presume it is because of this keen sense of unworthiness that many as well as myself are not heard from more often, but thanks be to God through the richness and abundance of his grace we have been lifted up from all these wounded conditions and made to rejoice still in that glorious hope so soon to be realized. We sometimes pause to consider the past, and how useless we have seemingly been, a help to none and a hindrance to many, and might not the cause progress more rapidly if my poor name were erased from the roll of brotherhood. But how can we thus falter long when the race is almost run, the strife almost o'er, the long night of affliction and sorrow and woe is almost gone, and the bright joyous and eternal day of God in all its glory and splendor so soon to dawn upon us. The past and present are freighted with vice and trouble but it will all be over soon. In the future just ahead lies the unspeakable joy of peace and endless bliss. Thus feasting from God's Word all sufficient we resolve to journey on and meet our King, but brethren, we are weak and need your assistance. Remember we need and earnestly solicit your prayers and a few words of encouragement from each of you or at least your name, as one suggested in his letter, and to the brethren of this vicinity we will make a special appeal. For a number of years a few of us at your request have consented to act as superintendent or leaders of the organization here, and while we were aware of our insufficiency, yet we were willing with God's help to do what we could, and we were so glad when you all would come to the meetings, but how sad when one after another stops coming until the congregation would correspond in number to a set of hens teeth and the meetings must be abandoned. Why is it brothers are sisters you are discouraged? Have you trials or trouble or temptation or afflictions, so have all, so much the more needful then that we meet together for mutual good and edification. Oh brethren, do not faint but take courage. Do not forsake us at the assembling of the house of worship, but help us, if only by your presence. Hoping soon to meet you all, we are, your brother in Christ, waiting for the kingdom.

Dear Restitution:

Our family is one of the scattered ones in the backwoods of Oregon, and in the one respect, of poverty, like many of the dear ones. The Restitution is our only preacher, and the Bible our Christ. We are getting old and broken down—fifty-five this month.

Dear favored brothers and sisters remember the scattered ones who like us have none of the communion of saints to help them on. The "Feast" from the loved ones is looked for anxiously and with joy. The blessed hope of the gospel is ours.

We remain yours.

Editor Restitution:

I have just finished reading the "Love Feast" letters in our dear paper, and a feast it has been to me to hear from the dear ones in this way. I think Bro. Dwiggins just hit the right way, for each and every one can give their testimony for Christ and the good cause we are so much interested in.

What a glorious thought it is when we think of the time when all of God's family gets home to the kingdom, and we shall never part. Dear brothers and sisters is it not worth striving for? I for one prize the thought of entering the kingdom more than anything else. Let us keep on admonishing each other through the paper. There are many we could not hear from if it was not for this way. Let us write often and in that way we can help keep up our paper. Let us do all we can to help the Editor, for what would we do if it was not for The Restitution? It always comes brimful of such good food to help build us up, for many of us are isolated and have no way of hearing preaching. We were so situated for many years, but thanks be to God we have a brother now, D. M. Fidler, who will preach for us part of the time during the coming year. He is an able talker and a noble brother.

Dear ones, let us one and all try to do more for the cause than we have done before, for the time seems very precious. The time bespeaks our Elder Brother's nearness. Are we ready? If not, why not?

Methinks I hear our brother Editor asking for help to keep the dear paper going, and some dear ones asking for it, not being able to pay for it. I know that most of our brethren can do as much as I have done, pay for two extra papers, for this, dear ones, and see where our paper will be in a year. We believe the Lord is soon coming to set up his Kingdom on this earth and then what of this world's goods? We will have no use for them. Let us be wise and send the paper to some poor, wayfaring sinner, and try if possible to save one soul in so doing, and receive a crown of Life that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for all those that love his appearing. Often have I thought of my dear Sister Wince, and what she said when her house burned. She was so glad she had her treasure where it could not burn. Let us all strive to have our treasure there, that when the Lord comes we will not be left, is my prayer.

Your sister in the blessed hope.

Editor Restitution:

As my subscription is past due, I thought I would send my renewal. Please find money order inclosed for $3.25.

I like The Restitution very much, but I think it would be much better if we had more letters and short articles, instead of those long continued ones which the common reader loses all interest in.

We surely are living in perilous times, the world is filled with wickedness and crime. Surely the Lord will soon come, then as Peter says, "What manner of person ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness. Looking for, and hasting the day of God, (or earnestly desiring his presence.) It now is a matter of faith, but it will soon become a reality. Jesus will be here, the Kingdom of God will have come, then where will I be? Where will you be, dear reader? Solemn thought indeed.

The prophet says, "then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that thought upon his name, and they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts in that day when I make up my treasure."

As we cannot speak face to face with each other, we can speak through our paper (if the editor will permit) though we may be miles apart.

We are still waiting and striving to enter that rest. It has been about twenty-seven years since we (husband and I) started in the race. What our life has been God only knows, but as we near the end our faith grows brighter and brighter, and by the help of God we are determined to strive on to the end, and we can say with Paul, "We reckon that the suffering of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Then we would say to those of like precious faith let us put forth every effort, that we may be worthy to stand before the Son of Man when he comes and hear him say, "I have chosen you my own, come enter into the joy of the Lord."

Yours waiting for glory and honor.

Dear Restitution:

I have enjoyed the Social meetings through the paper and I hope all the writers will remember the sentiments there presented and live up to them, as talk dont do much good if the mind and works are not in harmony.

I had intended to send in my mite, but I thought I would give way to give the isolated brethren a chance. So, brethren, you have said so many good things that I can add nothing only I would suggest that every writer and those that did not write make a resolution that during this year, '94, each of us will lay by him or her, from 25 cts to $1.00 and let us next Christmas present to the Editor of The Restitution a new printing press, as I understand they have to get their printing done outside. Let us see if faith and works go together. See whether you will prove a priest or a good Samaritan. Box up all your excuses and set a seal on them and get this present. Where there is a will there is a way. Let some one else agitate this question if this don't find its way to the waste basket. Question. What is the reason that the church has lost her healing power? It seems to me that she ought to have that gift now as well as in times gone by. 2nd. Is it essential to fast now, or is not? It seems from the record that Daniel fasted, so did Paul. Why not now or do you think that by a departure from these rules we have lost the power of healing the sick? Would like Brothers Wilson, Moyer or Joblin to write on this subject.

Yours hoping to meet the Bridegroom when he cometh.

Dear Restitution:

As I see that my time has expired I will renew my subscription. I look for your weekly visits with much joy as it is the only preaching we have in this vicinity.

There are plenty of churches but they do not seem to understand the Bible. When they preach that we have natural immortality it throws all wrong, and they do not understand. They are blind.

What a blessing it is to hear from the dear ones scattered abroad that understand the Scriptures and know that we get eternal life by patient continuance in well doing. May we continue to hear from the dear ones.

Editor Restitution:

It is with much pleasure that I write these few lines. It has been about seven years since I heard what is called "soul-sleeper" doctrine, and today the blessed hope and promises come up before me, and with faith in God's blessed Word that he will reward each and every one that strives to do his will my path is lit up, and as the Psalmist of old said, "They are a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path." Let us all consecrate our lives anew to the Lord and live nearer to him day by day, ever looking forward to the time when Jesus will come and gather all his faithful ones home and give them sweet, heavenly rest. Oh that rest that awaits the children of God, where pain and sickness, sorrow and death never come. It thrills my soul with joy to read letters from the brothers and sisters scattered abroad, and then I think of the time when we shall be gathered together in the Kingdom of our Lord, and ever be with him. And now may the love and communion of the Holy Spirit abide now, and evermore, with you all, is my prayer. Amen.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I very much regard the visits of The Restitution for there are none of like precious faith with us, and its visits are refreshing. There are many very able writers for the paper. Men having their hearts warmed by the love of God.

I would like to ask Bro. W. H. Wilson if any part of Rev. xi. has been fulfilled? This request is made for sake of truth and the love of it. This is with much love to all.

Dear brothers and sisters:

Let us be wise unto salvation, redeeming the time as the days grow evil, that God's Word tells us will be in the last days. Let us be able to say at the end of the coming year that we have lived more holy and devoted to God than ever before. God's Word tells us to grow in grace and knowledge of the Word of Truth that is given to guide us.

Paul said, "be instant in season, and out of season. Reprove, rebuke, exhort with long suffering and doctrine, for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." Have we not reached that time? We certainly have. Let us renew our courage, faith, and hope in our God we serve. Do we realize the responsibility resting upon us? If not, why not? Let us wake up knowing that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. I ask an interest in the prayers of the household of faith, and that God's blessing may rest upon all his children.

Your brother of the one faith and hope of the Gospel.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

What a privilege to admonish one another through The Restitution. What strength and courage it brings.

We are all surrounded with the many and various temptations, and so strong is the current that we need to grasp the helping hand. I am glad The Restitution flooded with short letters from those striving for victory, fell into my hands. It encourages us to hear from the isolated ones, to know that their faith is strong in the promises of Jehovah.

I am still striving to walk in the way marked out. I want to be among the redeemed, but, will I be one of the number watching and ready? Solemn thought.

Dear Restitution:

I expect my letter will not belong to the "Love Feast," but I want you to know that I enjoyed it so much. Was so thankful to see so many dear names that I wanted to see. To them all I would say, be faithful, and pray for me, for I feel very unworthy and humble.

I love the weekly visits of The Restitution. It is all the preaching we have here, and we watch its coming as we would a dear friend. We send money order for $2.00 to renew our subscription to pay for six months for another and also three trial subscribers. I tried to get a new name and had the promise of one but they failed to send the money. Bread cast upon the waters will be seen after many days.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

Mrs. John Allard.

Iowa.

To all the beloved ones, greeting:

I seat myself to join in the "Love Feast" and also to send $1.50 to pay for our beloved paper, The Restitution, for another year.

Wife and I still feel that we are the Lord's people and are striving day by day to let our light so shine that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify our Father in heaven.

I have been proclaiming the Gospel of the Kingdom of late years. I am now holding a series of meetings seven mile from here by invitation from the Disciple Church, and a good interest is manifested. We are quite isolated from the brethren, but feel strong in the Lord and encouraged to press on towards the mark of the prize. We ask an interest in all your prayers, that we may ever be found faithful to our trust. In a short way I want to review our beloved paper, The Restitution, for the last year and will refer to the able brethren and sisters who have contributed to its columns.

I have been very much edified and instructed in reading Bro. Gardner's translations. I Appreciate Bro. Joblin's articles on the Christ of the Bible. I have held these views for many years. May our God bless him is my prayer. Bros. Niles, W. H. Wilson, Wagoner, Elton, and many others and would say to all, continue to edify us as you have been doing. Bro. Elton's articles on "What constitutes a Christian" were good ones. Will Bro. W. H. Wilson give his views on "The Bride the Lamb's wife."

Your brother, waiting the return of the King.

G. W. & N. W. Smith.

Kansas.

Dear Household of Faith:

I am truly glad of Bro. Dwiggins suggestion, for it has been indeed a "Love Feast" to my poor, lonely heart, for my life has been sad since my dear companion fell asleep, but the reunion is near.

How I love to read the letters from east, west, north, and south. It is 48 years since I enlisted in the Savior's army, and I have fought many fierce battles with the world, the flesh and enemy, but, praise the Blessed Name, he has upheld me in all my trials and afflictions, which have been many, and I have come off conqueror through him that loved me. I stand in awe and wonder at the wonderful love of God, and often exclaim, Who could not love God? Who could not trust him? Who can be so unthankful as to spurn offered mercy when it is given without money, and without price? Who can be so blind as not to see what they will gain to obey, and what they will lose to reject?

Dear brothers and sisters who can talk, sound the alarm louder. There are many faithful ones who gladly respond to the Lord's call, and I am glad to know there are those who are able to give into the Lord's treasury, to carry on the work. I wish I could, but if I can bring but one head of wheat to the garner, I will feel that I have not lived in vain.

How sweet are the words of those aged sisters, Mother Woodward, and E. Plummer. They are truly pillars that have stood the storms so long. I well know how to lean on Him who will never leave or forsake. My daily prayer is that I may be trusting and waiting with my lamp trimmed and burning when Jesus comes. Yours waiting for the kingdom.

Mrs. Mary R. Campbell.

The Water of Life.

"Ho every one that thirsteth. Come ye to the Waters." Isa. lv. 1.

God says of Israel, "They have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters." Jer. ii. 13.

Solomon says, "Council in the heart of man is like deep water, but a man of understanding will draw it out." Prov. xx. 5.

Jesus said, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John iv. 14.

Beautiful, wonderful promise. Let us pray as did the woman of Samaria, "Give us of this water that we thirst not."

Bread is that which sustains life. Jesus the Life Giver is the true bread that came down from heaven, "in him was life." He said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." Jesus is the Word of God, and as such (in a deeper way, so far as I can see) came down from heaven. The Word of God is what we must eat and drink to give us life. "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood ye have no life in you."

Oh sweet indeed is that bread that came down from heaven for us. "Yea, sweeter than honey in the honey comb." Shall we have any desire to return to the flesh pots of Egypt? May our Father forbid. Cool and pure is the living water that flows from the smitten rock. Shall we complain of thirst now, or murmur, or fear to follow wherever he leads? Oh, no, let us not dare to think of such a thing, but press on 'till he says, rest.

Let us pray that we may have in us fountains of living water and that we may draw out of them and give cups of cold water freely to those perishing around us.

With these thoughts I close, hoping they will help some one. I add a few lines from an old hymn.

"The Spirit and the Bride say come,
Freely, freely freely,
And he that is thirsty let him come,
And drink of the water of life.
The fountain of life is flowing,
Is flowing for you and me."

Love to all, from one hoping in the truth.

Alice Adams.

Where Were They?

Col. Copeland delivered a masterly defense of the Bible and its teachings at Luce's hall on Monday evening, to an audience of about fifty persons. When "Bob" Ingersoll, the noted infidel, ridiculed the Bible and denounced it as a worthless sham, Powers' opera house was well filled to hear him. In speaking of the small attendance at Col. Copeland's lecture, The Times pertinently remarks:

"The church people and those who would naturally be expected to enjoy hearing Ingersoll's statements and logic refuted, were conspicuous by their absence last night. The fact is worthy of note, as one which tends to prove a thing or two,—a thing or two so self-suggestive as to need no mention now at our hands.—Grand Rapids.

[illegible] your Nets.

[illegible] like the deep,
The awful depths of a world's despair!
Hearts that are breaking and eyes that weep,
Sorrow and ruin and death are there.
And the sea is wide, and the pitiless tide
Bears on its bosom away,
Beauty and youth in relentless ruth
To its dark abyss for aye—for aye.
But the Master's voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for Me!
He stands in our midst on our wreck-strewn strand
And sweet and royal is His command
His pleading call
Is to each—to all;
And wherever the royal call is heard,
There hang the nets of the royal Word.
Trust not to the nets and not to your skill,
Trust to the royal Master's will!
Let down your nets each day, each hour,
For the word of a King is a word of power.
And the King's own voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for Me!

Answer to Reviewer's No. 6.

It is a mistake to cry out "kinks" and "wrong translations," because this or that portion of Scripture was not written to suit our theory. More likely the "kinks" are in the theory, and not in the translation. This reminds me of the old preacher who is said to have been greatly pestered trying to shew away a fly from his text, when behold! it was a painted fly, not on the text at all, but on his own spectacles, painted there by some silly wag.

Reviewer says "the first creation—the old system of things—ends in failure and final overthrow." But my Bible teaches that "the creation itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God:" as the Revised Version says. Or that "the creation itself will be emancipated from the slavery of corruption, into the freedom of the glory of the children of God;" as the Diaglott says. Rom. viii. 21. Also that "the earth abideth for ever," and was "created not in vain," but is destined to "be filled with the glory of Jehovah." "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen." Eccles. i. 4; Isa. xlv. 18; Num. xiv. 21; Rom. xi. 36. Does all this look like "failure and final overthrow?"

While speaking of the Diaglott—does my reviewer know that it calls Jesus Christ "our GREAT God and Savior?" Titus ii. 12. Does he dare to say there are any "kinks" in this passage?

Reviewer gets himself into a terrible tangle about the word "form." Now brother, why did you not consult the lexicons and concordances on that word? The lexicon shows that morphee (the word here translated "form") denotes "external appearance,"—such as may be changed without any change of personal essence or identity. And the Greek concordance shows that morphee occurs but three times in the New Testament, namely, twice in Phil. ii. 6, 7, and once in Mark xvi. 12 where we read that our Lord "appeared to them in another form (morphee)." Does reviewer think that means "another Jesus," and not the same who was crucified, and rose from the dead, and was mistaken by Mary for "the gardener?"

From morphee ("form") is derived the verb translated "transfigured," "transformed," "changed." This verb occurs four times, but in neither instance denotes a loss of personal identity. He that came down from the mountain was the same that had just worn the glories of transfiguration, when the "fashion" of His countenance was altered. Matt. xvii; 1-9; Mark ix. 2; Rom. xii. 2; 2 Cor. iii. 18; Luke ix. 29

Perhaps reviewer might have discovered all this for himself if he had consulted the lexicons. I am not surprised, however, if he feel shy of them after their overwhelming decision against him in reference to the word Logos.

I wonder that reviewer does not complain of "kinks" or "tampering" in the Diaglott's version of Phil. ii. 6, 7, for certainly that is also against him, inasmuch as it shows that our Savior first had the form of God, but "divested" (i. e. stripped) himself of it, and took "a bond-man's form." And so it was AFTER He "divested himself" that He was "in condition as a man," though reviewer seems (if I mistake not) to say it was before!

Why did not reviewer tell us what was "the form of God?"

Since he has failed to do so, I will state that, so far as I can understand, it was that external appearance, that glory which He "had with the Father before the world was," and which He resumed at his ascension, and in which he will appear again soon. Jno. xvii. 5; Matt. xvi. 27. And so in Phil. ii. 5-7, four features or stages of unparalleled condescension are set before us as an amazing lesson of humility and self-denial. Being originally in the form of God i. e., invested with the glorious eternal manifestations of the divine nature, and not deeming that glory with the Father any act of robbery, yet He (1st) "divested himself" of that native external glory, taking the form of a servant—not of an angelic servant as Gabriel or Michael, nor as one of "the princes of this age," but (2nd) of a bond-servant in the likeness of men. And in addition to that He (3rd) still further "humbled himself," becoming obedient unto death, and that not a peaceful natural death, but (4th) "even the death of the cross," with all the violence, pain, and reproach attending such a death.

Mere-manism would so pervert the text as to destroy this unspeakably sublime lesson of humility and self-denial.

Reviewer seems to think me "bound" to answer some of his questions. But first let me ask why has he not condescended to answer my two questions propounded in RESTITUTION of Dec. 6th, namely, "Whether he regards Christ as an object of worship, and also whether he thinks Christ was a mere man, or not?" I have been anxiously awaiting his answer, but have been kept in suspense about two months.

Also in RESTITUTION of Nov. 1st, why does reviewer in speaking of Christ say "his foundation was in the dust?" I suppose he was not intentionally applying to Christ the words which Eliphaz applied to those who "die without wisdom" and "perish for ever?" Job iv. 19, 20, 21. Was he quoting Job vi., or not?

In defence of the faith,

WILEY JONES.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren. If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

WE will supply friends who wish tracts to distribute with "Pearls" and 4 page tracts at 40 cts per pound, postpaid. This makes about 600 pages.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Announcement.

The second quarterly conference of the Church of God for Southern Kansas will be held at Attica, Harper county, Kansas, commencing on Friday night, February 16, 1894, and will hold over the third Sunday. Business meeting will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. All should be present at this meeting. All are invited to this gathering. Come and let us have a good time. Gentile times have about run out, and the time for the saints to take the kingdom is near at hand—perhaps nearer than we are aware of. Then it behooves us to do all we can, and it must be done soon.

Now brethren and sisters, let us arrange to be at this meeting. We need your presence, your council advice and encouragement, that we may all be strengthened in the blessed cause.

Place of meeting will be at our church in Attica, about ten rods north of depot. I will again say all are invited and expected to be present at this meeting. Come with hearts filled with love for the truth.

S. C. OLIVER, Pres.
E. E. RANDOLPH, Sec'y.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 28, 1894. NO 8.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

And cloud a bright young life is won,
From which it can ne'er rise again.

Only a word may be a ray
Of sunshine in some dismal room,
And help to brighten many a day,
Which would be spent in hours of gloom.

Only a word, but in it lies
The power to change full many a fate.
How little those realize
In but one word what may await?

Only a word may lead the way
From clouds of darkness to the light,
May help some weary one to pray,
And guide them to the path of right.

The Past, Present and Future Glory of Jesus Christ.

The following interpretation of the 5th verse of John xvii. is from the pen of an esteemed brother in the faith, whom I have not seen for nearly if not quite 25 years. His name is withheld for the reason that I have taken the liberty of transcribing his exposition from a private letter. But thinking that those who have an appetite for spiritual food might relish the thoughts submitted, I have assumed the responsibility of making public what the writer might hesitate to see printed. Not, however, of because of any timidity on his part in avowing his honest convictions of truth, but simply that in a private letter he had not presented as much testimony, or amplified the question, and touched the details as fully as he might desire for the general reader. I welcome every effort that helps to give us clearness of perception in things divine. Life is too short—our probationary career too brief, to miss any opportunity that is helpful. He that will find must seek. he that welcomes the opening of the door to wisdom's home is not too proud to knock. Wisdom's children are teachable.

JOHN XVII. 5.

I take it that verse 1 of this chapter is the key to the construction and interpretation of verse 5. Read 1st verse close and critically.

"Father the hour is come." Hour a short space of time—a season. The time in the divine purpose had come for the fulfillment of some prophetic utterance which Jesus knew about perfectly. The hour is come, glorify thy Son - not the world glory of the age to come, but a glorification at the time then present represented by the phrase "the hour is come." Mark the statement of the next sentence and its dependence upon that which precedes it. So that the "Son may glorify thee."

You see that the glorification of the Father by the Son sometime in the future depends upon the glorification of the Son by the Father in this hour—or space of time in which the glorification of the Son took place. Jesus prayed for that which he knew he would receive according to the record. Consult Luke xxiii. 69; see Diaglott. From this time the Son of Man will sit on the right hand of the power of God. Compare with Psa. xvi. 11, "In thy presence is fulness of joy, at thy right hand are pleasures for an age." Compare Heb. xii. 2, "For the joy set before him he endured the cross, . . . and sat down on the right hand of the throne of God." Turn to Psa. cx. 1, "Utterance of Jehovah to my Lord, Sit enthroned at my right hand until I make thy enemies a stool for thy feet." Compare many passages with Acts iii. 21. Until times of restitution. As to the glory of the world to come it is his by inheritance, by solemn covenant and oath of God. Not so the glory prayed for—there is nothing like it. It stands alone and above all other place of honor. It is in itself unique—nothing like it, or to be compared with it, in all the divine revealments. No one hath ascended into heaven, except the one from heaven descended. The one who ascendeth is the one who descendeth first into the lower parts of the earth. See John and Eph.; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Heb. i. 3.

The glory of the world to come in which the Father will be glorified throughout the earth is the fruit or product of the sacerdotal service in the true tabernacle heaven itself in behalf of his people on the part of the glorified Jesus constituted a Priest for the age according to the order of Melchisedek. He is there to represent a little company who have faith in his ability and goodness to arrange matters at headquarters for the future divine government. Having official power over all flesh, he will give his friends on his return official political positions in harmony with the arrangements made in heaven.

Mark the force of the copulative (and) joining verse 5 with the preceding verse 4. "And now" in view of the statement of verse 4. "And now, O Father glorify me with the glory I had with thee." The glory here is a particular glory which he had before he utters the prayer, and which he did not have at the time he prayed—a glory unprecedented. The sentence "which I had with thee" refers to Jesus himself personally, he being the subject of the sentence. To say this was all in the mind and purpose of God may be granted but this verse is not the place to find such a record. Philological law and usage warrant the assertion that Jesus had the glory prayed for, and desired to be invested with the same at the right hand of the Father in heaven hundreds of years before the world glory of the age to come could be experienced.

The place of glorification is at the Father's right hand, as says prophets and apostles. Therefore he prays glorify me along side of near thy own self. He entered into heaven itself—there to be present in the presence of God, on our account. Heb. ix. 24, compared with verse 12 also with chap. x. The time which Jesus dwells in heaven at the right hand of God spans the period of that glorification for which he prayed. He prayed to be glorified before something mentioned—thus, before that (glory understood) of the world to be. We must admit that Jesus had a glory before he prayed, and prays for a like, and perhaps the same glory in the presence of his Father in heaven, and to continue there until the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets. The term world here does not mean the universe, or the universal creation of which Moses gives an account. It does mean a constitution of things at that time in the future and yet "to be," as a clear rendering of the original demonstrates. It is a world yet future of which Jesus is the head, foretold by the prophets as a new heaven and a new earth in which Jehovah's name will be fully glorified.

The preconception of all translators and interpreters hath blinded their minds to the fact of the futurity of this world mentioned in the text before us. For the usage I contend for see Rom. iv. 11, mark the future aspect of the context; see also verse 13 and verse 16 "might be sure to all the seed."

I emphasize the sentence "I had with thee" because of the effort to transfer the thought of the statement from the person Jesus to that which was in the mind of God in relation to him before the worlds were made. Or in other words the divine purpose in relation to the glory of the Son Jesus Christ in the epoch of the "regeneration." The Father actually manifested Jesus with his own glory, previous to the time styled by Jesus in his prayer "the hour is come."

"Then the face of the son, and his garments became white as the light." Mark ix. 2 3; Luke ix. 29. Compare with Rev. i. 14 15, 18; then read particularly 2 Pet. i. 16 19. It was not from having followed cunningly devised fables that Peter and John made known the honor and glory the Father had bestowed upon the Lord Jesus. But on the contrary they affirmed that they were eye witnesses of the facts which they declare. For says Peter, "We did not follow cunningly devised fables when we made known to you the official power and presence of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of His Majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory when a voice was borne to him from the majestic glory, ... and this voice from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount;" and this too in confirmation of prophecy.

Jesus elected three competent witnesses as the law required so that the matter of the scene on the mount might be fully established. The apostle adds "therefore we have the prophetic word more sure." The prophetic utterances were confirmed by a visible and audible manifestation. The witnesses say We saw, we heard. John, (1 Jno. i. 2,) one of the witnesses, affirms, "What we have heard and what we have seen with our eyes, what we have attentively gazed upon, and our hands felt of the word of life and the life was manifested; and what we have seen, we also testify, and declare to you the eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested to us, what we have seen and heard we declare to you so that you also may be partners along with us, and certainly our partnership is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." Compare John vii. 39 with Acts iii. 13. These testimonies are adduced to the point, at issue, to show the fact of Jesus' glorification on the holy mount, and for which he prayed to be invested on the right hand of the throne of God in heaven. He will remain in heaven until the time arrives for the inauguration of that new order of things pertaining to the kingdom and age to come. His return to the earth has for its primary and chief object the glorification of the Father through the administration of justice and righteousness in all the world.

For this world Jesus died as he himself affirms, John vi. 51; and the Baptist said, "Behold the lamb of God who bears the sin of the world." The completion of the ceremonial of the great day of atonement is indicated here. Heb. ix. and x.; consult also John xi. 47 52, emphasize verse 51. If any Jew understood the significance of the ceremonial of the day of expiation the chief priest would. Hence the statement "that one man should die for the people and not the whole nation perish." Mark what follows: "And this he said not from himself but being high priest that year he prophesied that Jesus was about to die for the nation, and not for the nation only, but that he might also gather into one the children of God that were scattered abroad." Because it hath been appointed to the men (the high priest on the day of atonement, see context) once to die, and after this the verdict, "So also (notice the particle of comparison here) the Christ having been once offered to bear away the sins of the many will appear a second time unto salvation." In view of the foregoing testimonies collected and their harmonious bearing upon the subject, we are prepared for the construction and interpretation of John xvii. 5. He prayed to be glorified in the presence, or at the side of the Father. The prophecies affirm that the right hand side is the side. The evangelists say the same, and the apostolic writings agree. He prays for the glory he had on the mount of transfiguration, and that this glory be given him before the world glory of the age to come, all of which he now possesses in heaven where "fulness of joy is experienced, and pleasures for an age enjoyed." The fulness of joy at God's right hand is the pleasure of immortal existence with all that it involves. This he claimed as a personal reward, "I have glorified thee upon the earth, having furnished the work thou gavest me to do," and in view of this "now O Father glorify me at the side of thy ownself, before that of the world to be, with the glory I had with thee" on the mount. The experience of Jesus on the mount never faded from his memory. the scene was never forgotten by the three apostles who witnessed it. It was the manifestation of eternal life—the glory of a deathless nature.

GEO. MOYER.

Did Jesus Eat the Passover?

This question as to whether Jesus ate the passover involves many other questions and a few words in relation to it may help others to see their way more clearly.

Matthew tells us that Jesus instructed the disciples to go and prepare the passover. He also told them to tell the owner of the house "I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples." xxvi. 18. "And they made ready the passover." Verse 19. "Now when the even was come he sat down with the twelve." Verse 20. "And as they did eat." Verse 21. This proof seems conclusive that they ate the passover. By reference to Mark xiv. 12, we find that the first day of unleavened bread they killed the passover. This first day of unleavened bread is just what Matthew is speaking of. Matt. xxvi. 17. Mark also tells us that the disciples made ready the passover. Mark xiv. 16. He also tells us that in the evening Jesus came to the room which the disciples had prepared for the passover and that they sat down and "did eat."

Luke adds to the testimony of Matthew and Mark in many particulars.

1. He tells us the disciples sent to prepare the passover were Peter and John. Luke xxii. 8.

2. He tells us that the room where they made ready the passover was called the guest chamber, thus agreeing with Mark.

3. He tells us that the passover will be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

4. That the great desire of Jesus was to eat the passover before he should suffer. Verse 15.

The only objection which can be urged against this position that Jesus did eat the passover is the statement of John (xviii. 28) that the Jews would not go into the hall of judgment for if they did they would be defiled and could not eat the passover.

But in answer to this it is sufficient to say that the whole feast was often called "the passover." The whole seven days which followed the eating of the lamb is called the "days of unleavened bread," and these days are in turn called "the passover." Luke xxii. 1. John undoubtedly had reference to the days of unleavened bread in John xviii. 28, for it would be hardly consistent with inspiration to contradict itself thus. It is only when our theory is at stake that we make the Bible contradict itself.

Some have tried to make it appear that the supper Jesus is thus described as partaking of was at Bethany. But a candid look at the facts will in a moment dispel this error.

1. The supper at Bethany was six days before the passover. John x. 1.

2. The supper where Jesus instituted the communion and also the one where he washed the disciples's feet was on the first day of the feast of the passover. Luke xxii. 7-20.

3. Jesus left Bethany and came to Jerusalem before the supper spoken of as the passover. See John xii. 12 and the whole chapter and the next or xiii. 1 17.

Jesus ate the passover the first day of unleavened bread and died the same day, being upon Wednesday. The day was reckoned from evening to evening.

1. Jesus was arrested Tuesday evening (our time) but the beginning of Wednesday on Tuesday evening.

2. He was taken to Annas and Caiaphas the same night (beginning of Wednesday) and up all night.

3. Wednesday morning sentenced by Pilate and led away and crucified, died and was buried before the day closed, or just at its close.

4. Was in the grave all of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and all of the three nights, Wednesday night, Thursday night and Friday night, (three days and three nights,) and arose at the close of Saturday and at the beginning of Sunday the first of the week—the time of the first fruits from the dead. I do not mean to say that Jesus arose Sunday "morning" but at the beginning of Sunday or where the seventh day merges into the first day, which according to Jewish time was our Saturday evening.

I am aware that the whole Catholic church fix Friday as the day of crucifixion, and Totten, Page and Guinness fix Thursday as the day. Yet there must be some mistake in the astronomical data, for the prophet Daniel declares that when the sacrifices which typify the death of the Christ shall cease, that it shall be the middle of the week. Christ actually died near noon (about 3 o'clock) on the middle of the week, literally and chronologically. See Dan. ix. 37; Matt. xxvii. 45, 50. If Jesus arose at the beginning of Sunday and was three days and three nights in the heart of the earth he was crucified on Wednesday. Matt. xii. 38 40.

A. J. EYCHANER.

Dear Restitution:

In looking about us we learn that crime and calamities are on the increase. During the year that is just closed there has been a greater variety of calamities and crime than in any previous time. The robbing of railroad trains occurs almost weekly. Murders are committed by the score for no other purpose than to enable the perpetrators to rob their victims. There is a spirit of lawlessness abroad, not only among the criminal classes, but among the masses. As proof of this I need only refer to the large number of supposed criminals who have been lynched. These murderous proceedings have not been confined to the lynching of negroes in the south, but they have occurred in nearly all parts of the country. In our own state of Illinois a number of persons have been sent into eternity without being given any time for preparation or an opportunity to defend themselves against the crime with which they have been charged. It is a terrible thing to have your own defense, drag you away from your house surrounded at midnight by a howling mob, who charge you with a crime, of which you are innocent, and without giving an opportunity of being heard in your own defense, drag you from your home and family and hang you to the nearest tree. It is too horrible to contemplate, yet horrible as it is we are compelled to admit that it is being done week after week in this free country of ours. Say not that crime is on the decrease, and that the world is growing better.

I need not go into details to establish the fact that we are passing through a time of great public calamities. It is sufficient to call attention to the fact that there are not less than seventy-five thousand people in this city, Chicago, who are as much pinched by the famine which now prevails in this and all other large cities and manufacturing towns in this country, as were the Egyptians at the time that Joseph had charge of public affairs in that country. People are not suffering for food because of any scarcity in the supply, or because of the high price of food products. There is an abundance of food and it is cheap. Wheat has not been as cheap in fifty years as it is now. The trouble grows out of a stagnation in business. The cause of the stagnation is a lack of confidence in the affairs of men. The time which the prophet foresaw, when he said "mens' hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke xxi. 26, has come.

Business will revive, and men now out of employment will be given work, but the revival will not be permanent. We are in the last days of this dispensation. "When ye see these things come to pass know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke xxi. 31. There are two things which Our Heavenly Father will accomplish before Christ takes David's throne.

1st. The nations of Europe have been and are to-day maintaining their existence by the strength of their armies and navies. They are beating their plow shares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears." Joel iii. 10. The war spirit must be broken. The manner in which this will be accomplished is set forth in the prophecies contained in Ezekiel xxxvii. and xxxviii., and xiv. of Zechariah.

2nd. There is a feeling abroad that persons engaged in different kinds of business can obtain what they call "their rights," by combination. The farmers in some parts of the country are combining in their grange organizations and demanding that the general government shall furnish them with cheap money. Laboring men combine in their labor unions, and undertake thereby to secure more pay for less hours of work. The owners of coal mines combine for the purpose of keeping coal at a high price. Railroad companies combine to keep up the price of freight and passenger fares, and so it goes all around the ring. This feeling that we will accomplish our purpose in some way and over-reach our neighbor by hook or crook, must and will be broken. God will compel us to recognize the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men whether we will or not.

I have drawn a feeble picture of the present outlook from the standpoint of a man of the world. The reality is much worse than the picture. What is the outlook from the Christian's standpoint? It is glorious beyond description.

R. S. DUGGINS.

Timely Exhortation

Let orthodoxy consider for a moment this most solemnly impressive scene:

An earnest Jew visits Jesus by night. By way of greeting he testifies his belief in his divine mission; and signifies his desire to know more perfectly his doctrines. There is no more solemn scene in the New Testament than this:—Two men in earnest conversation; one a learned Jew, the best product of a corrupted system; the other, the divinely appointed King and future Ruler of a restored world. One is eagerly seeking truth; the other is seeking those who seek it. Can you imagine circumstances of greater solemnity? Can you think of a situation in which words would be more carefully or thoughtfully used? Don't you think that if there were times when Jesus was more careful what he said than at others this was one of those times?

Now, listen to what he says:—"Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." What shall we say to this clear, pointed utterance of Jesus? Why, the answer is plain: we have already determined that the circumstances called for thoughtful, well considered words; and since Jesus was the most thoughtful of men, we must conclude that he meant just what he said. Now, mark this: Jesus here makes the water birth (baptism) essential to an entrance to his kingdom—nothing could be plainer. But orthodoxy says, "It can't be possible that Jesus intended to make such a simple thing a condition." To this we say, He who graciously offers eternal life to a dying world may impose any condition; and baptism is no more peculiar as a condition, than belief.

Do you believe that Jesus ever used meaningless, trifling language? Orthodoxy does; but do you? Remember, salvation is an individual matter. In that great and notable day churches and theologians cannot plead for you—the situation then, as now, will be intensely personal. What excuse will you offer? Would you "live in the likeness of his resurrection?" Then you must "be planted in the likeness of his death."

The Lake of Fire and Brimstone.

"Whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. xx. 15.

Now it is a fact that the wicked will be burned up root and branch. (Mal. iv. 1.) and they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet. Isa. lxvi. 23, 24. When the righteous go forth from sabbath to sabbath to look upon the carcasses of those sinners they will be slain and cast into the crematory, and the ashes will be thrown out and trampled under foot, for the crematory will be in the Valley of Gehenna, and the ashes will be washed by the rains down into the marshes of the Divine, or the lake that was made of fire and brimstone when Sodom was destroyed, and this will be in the days of Christ, and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake.

This lake is the only one in ancient or modern history, sacred or profane that was ever made of fire and brimstone.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

WE will supply friends who wish tracts to distribute with "Pearls" and 4 page tracts at 40 cts per pound, postpaid. This makes about 800 pages.

The Reviewer Reviewed.
No. 7.

In resuming our investigations we notice the question as to whether Socinians permeated with the leaven of the Pharisees would express themselves as does Paul in Phil. ii. 6. We really do not know, and have no time to find out.

As to the "mere man," and "meremanism," we remark that it is about time to show HOW believing Jesus was the only begotten Son of God constitutes one a believer in a mere man, or has a tendency to Josephiteism. Let us hear at once how both God and Joseph were fathers of Jesus? Does it mean that God was the Father of the Christ who did not die, Joseph the father of the Christ who did? We hold that a "mere man" is a man begotten by man, and if there be a tendency to Josephiteism in the views of either we think it is with those who have a divine Christ who did not die because he could not, and another, or part of another who was not divine and did die; he was therefore a mere man and nothing else if the claim be true that the Son of God must of necessity partake of his father's nature, which is divine. Oh, but we pity from our heart those who have a mere man for their Savior.

Once more an attempt is made to fortify the position taken that the Word represents Christ in a pre-existent state. He never says Jesus pre-existed, and we have shown, we think, conclusively, that it was Jesus who was Christ, and that there was no Christ till Jesus was baptized. If this be not tenable why is it not attacked? If it be, why then he is merely arguing for the pre-existence of what in his writings he justly styles a "title:" the person on whom it was finally bestowed was Jesus, begotten of God - made of a woman. In answer to the claim that he existed before human nature, and made human nature as part of the all things, and was with God from the beginning, necessitates the monstrous conclusion that the Son was as old as his Father. It says the Word was God, not the Son, and we believe it. Reviewer believes it was the Son, and he was the God who made all things. Our Lord himself shall answer these points. In John xvii. 3, in prayer to his Father he says, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the ONLY TRUE GOD, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." And as to his having made all things, hear him again in Mark xiii. 19. "For in these days shall be affliction such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be." There are indications, however, that the Eternal One employed agents in his creative work. We read in the 104th Psalm that he maketh his messengers spirits; and in the 103rd Psalm we read Jehovah hath prepared his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all. Bless Jehovah ye his messengers, that excel in strength, that do his commandments, harkening unto the voice of his Word [in harmony with Psa. xxxiii. 6, "By the Word of Jehovah were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. . . He spake and it was done, he commanded and it stood fast."] Bless ye Jehovah all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his that do his pleasure." Now, the learned tell us that Melchizedec and Abraham knew the Alane Good One as Ail Elyon, Most High Ail, or power, which teaches by implication that there were Ailim of inferior rank, station and power,—and 2,470 times in the Old Testament called Elohim, plural of Eloahh, and improperly rendered Lord and God. In the first and second chapters of Genesis we find there Elohim, or messengers who excel in strength doing what Reviewer claims was done by one person, a pre-existent Son of God who afterward tabernacled in a body born of a woman. We find them saying to each other, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" and presently we read that the elohim did form man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. It is as true that the elohim formed him as that he was formed at all; and hence it is not true that a pre-existent Christ made all things. The elohim made him in their own likeness, as can be proven by their visits to Abraham and Lot and others. God has not stultified himself 4000 years later by saying that an Eternal Son made all things. Jesus evidently knew nothing of that arrangement; he says of the creation that God created it,—and we have just seen that his agents were his messengers who excel in strength and do his commandments.

It is further sought to sustain the point assumed by the masculine pronoun him. Just think of it being necessary to prove a sublime and fundamental truth by the gender of a pronoun. Of course, if the "Word" is the name of a person who was with God from the beginning and made all things, the pronoun must be masculine. But if the Spirit in John uses the word logos in its proper and literal sense, then the pronoun must be in the neuter gender - it.

But we are now directed to Rev. xix. 13 for proof that the word logos in John i. 1 means the pre-existent Son of God who made all things. The facts are that among the awful events clustering around the marriage of the Lamb, is the riding forth of Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and that he will have a name that no one but himself knows—"The Word of God." This information comes from Jesus to John after his ascension to heaven, and was revealed to Him by God. It was future, is still future, and yet is referred to as proof that it had been his name before the creation of the world. But mark well the name. It is not simply Word,- not God the Word, --not the Word who was a God equal with the Father, but the name, when the time comes, will be "The Word of God," amen. But our readers will notice in addition to this, that it is not a pre-existent person who survived the death of the Son of God, who will by and by be called "The Word of God." it is the Lamb who was slain who will be thus named. v. 7, 9.

In addition to this we are directed to the 8th of Proverbs where some one says "Jehovah possessed me in the beginning of his way before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was, etc. etc. . . . when he appointed the foundations of the earth, then I was by him as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight." etc. This is supposed to be identical with the Word of God in John i. 1 with the masculine pronoun. But this will not stand. This speaker of Proverbs viii. is the wisdom of God personified as perhaps the Word of God is in John i. 1, but unfortunately for pre-existence it is in the feminine gender; so that if the masculine pronoun of John i. 1 proves a son, the feminine of Proverbs 8: proves a daughter, thus making a third person of the divine nature, and furnishes material for the Trinity, three eternal persons in one Godhead. But all the same Jesus says the Father is the only living and true God, and Paul says, "To us there is but one God."

The initial assumption that the Word was the Son who made all things being taken for granted, the false conclusion comes with all the appearance of irresistable logic, but if the initial fallacy is pierced, the whole argument falls to pieces like a rope of sand. The words of the Spirit refutes the assumption. It says the Word was God, and we believe it. Pre-existence must have it the Son of God, who was also a God, which we do not believe.

Next, "But if we have no interest in or concern with the pre-existent Word, which in the beginning was with God, then we are of all men most miserable, and have neither part nor lot with Christ." We do believe, and have said that the Word was with God, and every Word of God is pure,—but we do not believe that the expression of Jehovah's inward thought was a person.

The fact that God had only one begotten Son, who was delivered up to the death of the cross would prove that the supposed pre-existent son was a created son like the elohim or messengers and of no interest to us as a Savior.

Jameison, Fausset and Brown, who do not know the first principles of the Gospel, and who, indeed, teach another Gospel are appealed to for a definition of the Hebrew word olam. Does the writer appeal to them for definitions of the words, nephesh, ruah, pneuma, psuchee, athanasia, hades and others, upon the misuse of which the system of the apostacy is built. These men do not know better than to say that partial eternal life is in the interval between death and Christ's second advent, and that the wages of sin is the conscious sense of the hopeless loss of all blissful existence. Have we been making so stupendous a blunder for 40 years in setting aside theological definitions, that we have to go back to them? We think not, and we demand more than the exigencies of pre-existence for a reason to do so before we retrace our steps, or allow such a precedent to pass unchallenged. Now let us examine this endorsed definition of olam which is that it is "the strongest assertion of infinite duration of which the Hebrew language is capable. In answer to this we say that Ahlam in Chaldee, and olahm in Hebrew are represented in Greek by aion, and they mean, not infinite duration at all, but a hidden period, and that an extension beyond that hidden was indicated in this way:—Ahlam or olam waed, that is olam and beyond; so say the learned. The passage in which this occurs is Micah v. 2, "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting. The careful reader will see that the words "from of old," limits the time to earth and man. Secondly, that it would be ridiculous to couple the phrase "From of old" to or with everlasting, to express infinite duration. 3dly, We learn from the prophet how he uses the word olam, for in chapter ii. 9 he uses it in reference to the children of the women of God's people, wrongly rendered for ever, and still clearer in chapter vii. v. 20, for we read, "Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob and the mercy to Abraham which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from – [From what time? from everlasting? Did he sware to Abraham before there was any Abraham? No, the next words settle that. They say:] from the days of old." The same word, olam that is rendered everlasting in chapter v. 2. 4thly, These theologians who do not know the truth make both Father and Son who proceeded from him equally eternal. Is not this monstrous? If begotten, begotten without a mother; if created, then not the begotten one, and has never been offered as the object of our faith. 5thly, There are no less than six supplied words in Micah v. 2. We ask any reasonable intelligent person if the translators were competent to supply those words if they were ignorant of God's purpose? By God's favor we do know the outlines of that purpose, and as the called according to that purpose, have, at least as much right as they to supply what will harmonize God's revealed will. The translators believed the horrid Athenians creed, and therefore supplied the words "have been," have been from of old, from everlasting, to favor the doctrine of the Trinity. We, instead, supply the word "predicted," and then, with Dr. Young's translation, it reads as follows: "His comings forth are (predicted) of old, from the days of antiquity;" ah, from the very infancy of the race. Those anxious to know the truth will sift this matter thoroughly,—and all such will say this passage is no proof of pre-existence.

Young's translation has been dismissed. He compiled a concordance. The writer of course did not know that the same Dr. Young was one of the greatest philogists of this generation. His root books of the Hebrew, Chaldee, Samaritan, Syriac, Greek and Latin languages, and his Paradigms of the verbs in Hebrew, Chaldee, Samaritan and Syriac,—his grammatical analysis of the Hebrew, Chaldee and Greek Scriptures, consisting of the original texts unabridged, the parsing of every word, with all its prefixes and affixes, and a literal translation, and his Hexaglot Pentateuch with the corresponding Samaritan text, the Chaldee Targum, the Syriac Peshito and the Arabic, and his Rabbinical vocabulary, and his Hebrew and Chaldee vocabulary, consisting of every word in the Old Testament, whether noun, verb or participle, the verbs with their conjugation and the nouns with their genders, and his Hebrew tenses, and his Gujerati grammar and exercises besides some 35 other works in Gaelic, Spanish, Dutch, German, Italian, Latin and Portuguese should certainly entitle him to a little respect, especially as he was a learned bookseller and printer, and not a clergyman at all. He was a textual critic, not a theologian.

This brings us to another supposed stronghold of pre-existence, John viii. 58. Having had several lessons on grammar and knowing that this verse is supposed to teach pre-existence, we ask if it ought not to say, Before Abraham was, I was? The interests of Truth demand an answer here. No one can deny that it would then teach the existence of Jesus before Abraham. We straitly deny that it teaches that as it does read. Besides, it was Jesus born of Mary who uttered these words, and we know that he was Abraham's seed. Remembering this, we quote Young's translation of this passage: "Jesus said to them, verily, verily, I say to you, Before Abraham's coming, I am."

It is a serious matter to say that his existence before Abraham in the past was the doctrine of Christ's own lips, when he really says nothing approaching such, and the warning intended for us, we think, applies to him. "Every one who goes beyond and does not abide in the doctrine of the Anointed One, has not God;" but as he certainly does not go beyond wilfully, we pray, "Father forgive him, he knows not what he does." But just the same he goes beyond, and we want to make him feel kind and grateful to us by showing him how greatly he is mistaken. Well, it says, "I am;" and I am does not mean, I was. The first thing to do is to ascertain from the Lord Himself what he means when he says "ego eimi." And by taking the excellent advice given in Reviewer's "Key Words," may we not soon hope to see eye to eye. He says in the preface "Words are the vehicles of thought, the signs of ideas, and the expressions of doctrines. Hence the more accurately will we understand the doctrine which that word is employed to express. Now, we learn the meanings of a word from the uses and applications made of it, and therefore a concordance that shows every occurrence and application of a Scriptural word is a superior kind of Bible dictionary that enables us, to a great extent, to lay aside erring lexicons and commentatries and determine the meanings of a word from that high source—the uses made of it by the Holy Spirit," and then gives examples.

We accept this excellent advice, and go to work. We find that our Lord used the simple phrase ego eimi I am, fifteen times, and we proceed to show our readers how he uses them—what use he makes of them.

Matt. xiv. 27, "ego eimi," "It is I."

Mark vi. 50, "ego eimi," "It is I."

Mark xiv. 62, "ego eimi," "I am."

Luke xxi. 8, "ego eimi," "I am (Christ or he)."

Luke xxii. 70, "ego eimi," "I am."

John iv. 26. "ego eimi," "I am (he)."

John vi. 20, "ego eimi," "It is I."

John viii. 24, "ego eimi," "I am (he).

John viii. 28, "ego eimi," "I am (he)."

John xviii. 5, 6, 8, "ego eimi," "I am (he).

John xiii. 19, "ego eimi," "I am (he).

John viii. 58, "ego eimi," "I am."

We trust our readers will refer to every one of these passages and see for themselves that its use by the Holy Spirit is established. It is PRESENT TENSE ABSOLUTELY, every time. "I am" does not mean I was, and cannot be made to mean to it, lawfully.

But there is another word in dispute, it is genesthai. This, too, is supposed to mean was;—supposed to mean before Abraham was born, or brought forth. We impugn no motives, nor question any one's sincerity, but propose to proceed just as we did with ego eimi,—ascertain by the Spirit's use of the word whether it is related to an event past or future.

In Matt. xxiv. 6 predicting troubles for them in the future he says: "For all these things genesthai—must come to pass but the end is not yet." Future events.

In Mark i. 17, Jesus says:—"Come ye after me and I will make you -genesthai,—to become fishers of men." A future event. In Mark x. 43 Jesus says, "And whosoever of you—genesthai—will be great among you, shall be your minister. Future.

In Mark x. 44 Jesus says, "And whosoever of you will be -genesthai -the chiefest, shall be servant of all. Future.

In Mark xiii. 7 Jesus says, "For such things -genesthai- must needs be, but the end is not yet." Future.

In Luke xxi. 9 Jesus says, "For these things must first come to pass"—genesthai. Future.

In Luke xxi. 7 Jesus is asked, "When these things shall—genesthai come to pass?" Future.

Luke xxi. 28 Jesus says, "When these things begin to genesthai - come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Future.

In Luke xxi. 36 Jesus says, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall genesthai—come to pass." Future.

In John i. 12, we read that to "as many as received him, to them gave he power to genesthai—become sons of God." Future.

In John xiii. 19 Jesus says, "Now I tell you before it -genesthai come to pass, ye may believe that I am he." Future.

In John xiv. 29, Jesus says, "And now I have told you before it genesthai come to pass, that when it come to pass ye might believe." Future.

Here are twelve places where the word genesthai is quoted from the lips of our Lord and every time it relates to the future. See also Acts i. 22; Acts iv. 28, 30; Acts x. 40; Acts xx. 16; Acts xxvi. 28, 29; Rom. iv. 18; Rom. iv. 4; Rev. i. 1; Rev. i. 19. Here are eleven more instances of its use, and every one is proven by the context to relate to the future. There may be others—have not time to look further, except to the passage in question John viii. 58, the only instance where it is rendered was. The translators believed in the Trinity and this means that they were in utter darkness as to God's purpose in regard to man and earth; had no idea that Abraham would be indebted to his Seed the Anointed Jesus for future life, and therefore nothing else could be expected of them but what they did,—render genesthai, was. That was consistent with their faith, but not faithful to the original.

To say that Jesus intended to say he existed before Abraham was born, is to charge him with gross ignorance, or deception. This will not do at any price. We have proven what he meant by ego eimi, and if he had wanted to speak of Abraham's beginning that would have required the word huparcho,—and if he wished to speak of his existence in the past, instead of genesthai, Aorist I, infinitive middle which he did use, he could have said, egineto, imperfect indicative middle—"was existing." This is what is claimed he meant, but it is what he did not say, and this is proof that the translators make him say it.

Then Rotherham the translator's testimony is offered to prove that the aorist always expresses past time. Is this a safe course to pursue? Have we not been trying for forty or fifty years to get our readers to go to standard lexicons that have no affinity for theology for definitions of words, and to Anthon and Crosby and other standard grammarians for Greek grammar who have no axes to grind? What excuse is there for this back-step. We want the answer, for we have a right to it. If theologians cannot be trusted to define words relating to man's nature, and his destiny and the Gospel of the kingdom, and the conditions of pardon, is it not astounding that we should be directed to them as authority on this profound and confessedly difficult subject?

And we have no hesitancy in saying if Rotherham says the aorist always expresses past time, his grammer is as faulty as his theology. We believe scores of our readers are watching to see this egregious error corrected. It should never have been given currency to when the truth in the premises is so accessible as it is in this country. To show that Greek Grammer is in harmony with Jesus' use of Aorist infinitive of ginomai—to come about, to come to pass, we quote from section 566 of Crosby's Grammar the fact that the aorist includes all the indefinite and complete tenses. In section 575, second paragraph, it says "The aorist in the Indicative is properly a past tense. This is Infinitive— . . . . . . but, for want of the Present indefinite, it is often used achronically, (i. e. not relating to time.) In section 581 it says a future action, in view of its nearness, its certainty, its rapidity, or its connection with another action maybe conceived of as now doing, or even as already done, and may be expressed by Present, Aorist or Perfect. This is sufficient to warn our readers against going to theologians for grammar and also vindicate our Lord's grammar.

Young's, Smith's and Nesbits translations were not treated with respect. They were charged with wresting the Scriptures. Both Smith and Nesbit are scholars—more, they are brethren who believe all Reviewer believes except Pre-existence and a plurality of persons in the Godhead. Dr. George Campbell and Rotherham believe nothing in common with him except Pre-existence. Campbell and Rotherham have given honest translations—so it is said, but how it is known they are honest was not told—but Brn. Smith and Nesbit are wresters of the Scriptures. This needs no comment. Nesbit is the author of "Easy lessons in Greek," "The Spirit's Thesauros;" and has successfully met Alexander Jamieson the champion of orthodoxy in Scotland in public debate in the Socratean method, (direct questioning and answering before the public) and is Editor of the Investigator. And Reviewer owes it to our readers as well as to these two brethren that he make good his charges against their translations by examining John viii. 58 every word, case, noun, mood and tense of this passage, and show how it teaches the existence of Jesus before Abraham, so that all can see who has done the wresting; as well as the answer of these men, for we believe them both honest and able, and devout.

On Christmas Day we handed a Greek Testament to Bro. Jessie N. Shrouds an Attorney at Law, No. 5 Euclid Ave., and asked him for a translation of John viii. 58. He took a pencil and wrote after a close examination, "Jesus said to them: Truly indeed I say to you, before Abraham shal have been brought forth, I am"—so that, by Jesus' use of the Aorist here we are asked to look at Abraham as arrived at that point when he enters upon his reward; and it is because Jesus already lives that Abraham is brought forth.

In the love of the Truth submitted.

Dear Restitution:

We are delighted with the "Love Feast," also Bro. Joblin's articles showing the origin of our Redeemer according to the Word and Spirit of God. Practical suggestions by H. T. Baker, is, we hope, a timely warning and admonition.

Bro. Wm. P. Ryland is improving slowly, and the brethren there say in word and deed that the good work of holding aloft the banner of King Immanuel must go on. Amen. "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose himself or be cast away." Our time to work for the Master is very short, so, let us embrace every opportunity to compel them to come in. How? By the Word of God, which is the propeling power. Let us so live that others may see our good works and be constrained to glorify our Father in heaven.

Yours in Israel's hope.

London's debt was increased last year by £1,200,000, and now amounts to £30,011,000. The revenue of the city for the last fiscal year was £1,623,000.

ITEMS.

Until 1840 Europe produced 80 per cent of the world's wheat; now only 50 per cent.

The peace footing of the Russian army calls for the service of 170,000 horses.

The Suez Canal is eighty-eight miles long and reduces the distance from England to India nearly 4,000 miles for ships.

The tenth census of Great Britain, taken April 6, 1891, the details of which have just been published, shows that in the ten years from 1881 the population increased 3,025,836, which is a slower rate of progress than during any decennial period in the century. The rate of increase was 11.65 per cent, against 18 per cent in 1821, the highest. The decline is attributed chiefly to emigration, no less than 1,572,717 persons leaving the country during the decade.

There was again a serious falling off in the French shipping trade during last year, although the decrease was smaller than during 1892. Last year there was a total decrease of 188,393 tons as compared with 1892, but the decrease of French tonage was 611,442 tons, and vessels under foreign flags increased 422,759 tons. The French Government has adopted an extensive system of bounties to native builders and owners, but yet native shipping continues to decrease, and foreign shipping to gain in the French carrying trade.

Great indignation is felt among the sculptors and art dealers of Warsaw over a recent rescript of the police of that city. The guardians of the peace, in obedience to orders from St. Petersburg, visited all the stores and studios, and destroyed all the busts of the Polish heroes, Thaddeus Kosciusko and Josef Poniatowski, which they could find. All sculptors in the city were obliged to send a written communication to the city officials promising not to make busts or statues of the two men in the future. This is one way Russia has adopted of trying to suppress the Polish national spirit. It is not probable, however, that it will accomplish its purpose.

Chemists say Turkish tobacco contains prussic acid and Cuban tobacco has another alkaloid called collidine, one-twentieth of a drop of which will kill a frog, giving the creature all the symptoms of paralysis. Experiments have proven that three drops of the liquor that accumulates in the bowl of the pipe will kill a rabbit in nine minutes. A drop of pure nicotine inserted near the conjunctiva of any small animal will kill it almostly instantly; eight drops will kill a horse, giving him frightful convulsions. If one drop of the stuff would give a man convulsions one day it would take two the next, four on the third day, etc., which shows how readily the system adapts itself to poison.

Announcement.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, will be held at the Fairview School-house in Furnas Co., three miles southeast of Holbrook, commencing Friday evening March 16, 1894, and hold over the following Sunday. Business meeting promptly at 2 o'clock on Saturday.

Important business will come up at this time for consideration, and we sincerely urge all brethren to be present at this meeting.

The Church of God Tract Association will also meet at this time.

We take pleasure in announcing to the brethren that a unity of the work in the state has been practically completey, but in order to finish up said business a conference will be held at Bassett, Rock Co., March 23rd to 25th, 1894.

The State Evangelist will meet the brethren at Bassett and it is expected that an interesting and profitable meeting will result.

Come brethren, show your interest in the work by attending these meetings.

If eternal life is worth anything it is worth an effort to secure it. Therefore, dear brothrers and sisters, let us be firm and steadfast, ready for the coming of the Master, and for every good word and work.

Christ's Sympathy.

If Jesus came on earth again,
And walked and talked in field and street,
Who would not lay his human pain
Low at those heavenly feet?

And leave the loom, and leave the lute,
And leave the volume on the shelf,
To follow Him unquestioning, mute,
If 'twere the Lord himself?

How many a brow with care o'erworn,
How many a heart with grief o'erladen,
How many a man with woe forlorn,
How many a mourning maiden,

Would leave the baffling earthly prize,
Which fails the earthly weak endeavor,
To gaze into those holy eyes,
And drink content forever!

His sheep along the cool, the shade,
By the still watercourse He leads;
His lambs upon His breast are laid;
His hungry ones He feeds.

And I, where'er He went, would go,
Nor question where the paths might lead;
Enough to know that here below
I walked with God, indeed!

If it be thus, O Lord of mine,
In absence is thy love forgot?
And must I, where I walk, repine,
Because I see Thee not?

If this be thus, if this be thus,
Since our poor prayers yet reach thee, Lord;
Since we are weak, once more to us
Reveal the living Word!

O, nearer to me, in the dark
Of life's low hours, one moment stand;
And give me keener eyes to mark
The moving of thy hand.

The Coming of the Lord.

To the apostolic church the return of the Lord was the blessed hope of the Gospel. (Titus ii. 13) toward which every faithful believer gazed with intense longing. For one not to sigh and pray for his coming was regarded as the first step in apostasy. The falling away from the true faith which finally resulted in the great Roman apostasy, began by putting the Lord's coming far away; when the bishops commenced to regard themselves as Christ's vicegerents on earth, and meditated universal sovereignty in the church, making the whole world their diocese. The little churches which spurned the authority of the Roman hierarchy, and rejected their corrupt practices, false and idolatrous worship, and much of the false doctrine promulgated by the apostasy, still held on to the doctrine of Christ's personal pre-millennial coming. They may have held, undoubtedly did hold much of error, but they cherished the blessed hope of the Lord's coming to destroy antichrist, who was endeavoring by fire and sword to extinguish the last vestige of true faith that remained in the world. The hope of the Lord's speedy return was held during the purest times of the church. In proportion as the church became worldly it lost sight of the hope so fondly cherished by apostles and early martyrs. It ceased to be regarded as a motive of pure living. In apostolic days, and the times immediately succeeding these, going to heaven at death was unknown, at least not believed; so there was no confusion of the faith, no dividing of hope, and no looking to different events for the promised reward. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also. John xiv. 3. These words, addressed by our Lord to his sorrowing disciples, were echoed and reechoed by inspired apostles; sounded abroad by faithful evangelists, and held in sacred remembrance by the church. Jesus and his apostles laid the sure foundation of this hope in unambiguous statements; and white-robed angels said to the disciples as they gazed heavenward at their ascending Lord till his form diminished to a mere speck in the sky, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 11. These words mean what they say, mean a personal coming. Nothing else will satisfy the heartfelt desire of the true church. He must come to this sin-cursed earth, and to his sorrowing disciples. This is to be the theater of his future action, as surely as prophets have spoken. The throne of David and the kingdom of Israel were here and are by divine right his. His feet must again press the brow of Olivet. Zech. xiv. The Old Testament abounds in prophetic descriptions of his presence and reign here. The church is here; the vast majority of its members sleeping in the dust of the earth, and a little living remnant awaiting his return. He is coming to raise in incorruption, power and glory these sleeping ones and change the living, endowing all with his divine nature, crowning and blessing them. He is coming to share with his church the glory, the honor and dignity of his future reign on the throne of his father David, and over the house of Jacob. Luke i. 32.

His coming has long been deferred. Centuries have swept by and still he remains away; but is this a sufficient reason for turning scoffer and saying: "Where is the promise of his coming?" 2 Peter iii. 4. Or to put yourself in the attitude of the evil servant saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." Matt. xxiv. 48. To the question of scoffers come the answer. "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." 2 Peter iii. 10. The evil servant will be taken by surprise. His Lord will come in a day when he looketh not for him. Matt. xxiv. 50. At the present time it is the solemn duty of the church to proclaim the advent near, even at the door. Not to do this is to imperil our own salvation; to relapse into sinful indifference to the great theme and all important themes which cluster about it, and thus take sides with the popular scoffing churches of the day. Not to proclaim it near, is not to proclaim it at all in the light in which it is set forth in the epistles to the churches in Paul's day; nor in the light in which divine revelation places the present generation of believers. Long chains of prophecy have been translated into history. Signs in the heavens have flashed before our vision warning us of the Lord's coming. Even when these were to begin to come to pass Jesus said, "Lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh." What is now our relation, in point of time, to his coming, when the powers of the heavens are being shaken before our wondering eyes? Scoffers will soon cease to scoff and turn to crying for rocks and mountains to fall on them to hide them from his august presence.

John L. Wince.

To Whom It May Concern.

I would not count among my list of friends one who would needlessly tread upon a worm. I am here as a learner, a child among you making notes. Divine silence is but divine impartiality. Divine justice treats all alike Divine mercy selects out a few keeping them from the prosperity of fools which destroys. Prov. i. 32. All should honor the God of heaven by believing his word and not dishonor him by framing a lot of lies to suit their own fancy.

What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Jer. xxiii. 28. When ye make a dinner or a supper call not the rich but the poor for they cannot recompense thee: but you shall be recompensed. When? When you die and go to heaven? You know better, for the Scripture says it is at the resurrection of the just; yet you are singing and talking of heaven all the time. I know a heavenly kingdom is promised and we are taught to pray that it may come. Matt. vi. 10. But that is not for dead people. It is for a resurrected or changed people by the power of God. John xi.; Luke xxiv.; 1 Cor. xv.; 1 Thess. iv. This you must believe and preach, or suffer. Take your choice. I have told you, and told you in time. Not one word do most people utter about the resurrection or about the coming again of our Lord and King during their meetings.—But its all heaven, heaven, heaven, and that for people just laid in their graves. Now this is all wrong and you will find it so. It is at the resurrection of the just that people are to be rewarded, Luke xiv. 14, and not till then; all your singing to the contrary notwithstanding. At the coming of the Lord the dead will be raised up and the living changed. 1 Cor. xv.; 1 Thess. iv.

Then is the time of reward and not at death to any dead being whatever. The time of this ignorance God hath been winking at; but now commandeth men everywhere to repent and turn and do their first works; or the candlestick is gone from its place and the light ceases. Acts xvii. 30; Rom. ii. 5.

This Gentile people are just as much in the dark as to the day of their visitation as the Jews ever were and will yet meet as severe judgments. It is written—Unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth—but do obey unrighteousness: indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil; of the Jew first and also of the Gentile. Rom. ii. 8-9.

The Jews have had judgments heavy upon them for their unbelief and God will yet wound the head of all his enemies and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses. Psa. lxviii. 21.

In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture; and he poureth out of the same: and the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out and drink them. Psa. lxxv. 8.

The chief or highest wickedness is soul immortality, for Paul was counted a babbler and a setter forth of strange gods in his day; because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection; not Jesus and an immortal soul; not Jesus and an immortal spirit; not Jesus and go to heaven when you die; but Jesus and get right straight up out of the ground when the time comes. Acts xvii. 18.

We must fight the good fight of faith, not the bad one of folly. We must stand upon the promises in fact, not in name only. Rom. iii. 1.

The Abrahamic beggar clothed in rags and lying at the gate, will yet come in ahead of the sumptuously fed. Luke xvi.; Rom. xi.

Obituary.

Charles Palmer, of Plymouth, Ind., died at his home in this city Friday, Feb. 16, 1894, after an illness of several months. From the Plymouth Democrat of Feb. 22 we copy the following, as showing the esteem in which he was held by its Editor who has from boyhood known Mr. Palmer.

"Mr. Palmer was born in Cayuga county, New York, Nov. 10, 1814. In the year 1836 he came west and settled in LaPorte county, where he was married at Kingsbury, in September 1840, to Miss Maria Walbridge. In the fall of 1841 he moved to Plymouth where he resided up to the time of his death. He was the father of four children, three of whom are living: Mrs. Harriett Lindsey, John W. and Charles W. Palmer, all of whom reside in Chicago. His wife died in 1887, and in 1892 he was again married to Mrs. Cynthia Reynolds, of Laporte county, who survives him.

Mr. Palmer was well and favorably known to all the old residents of the county, and leaves behind him a record from beginning to end, in every way, pure and unspotted before the world. He was engaged, during nearly the whole of his long and honorable career as a merchant and business man in Plymouth, and it cannot be truthfully said of him that he ever cheated a man out of a cent, or that he was ever guilty of a dishonorable action. He marked his goods plainly and sold them at one price to everybody. He was a plain matter of fact man, and sometimes even blunt. But his integrity, his honesty of purpose, and his upright walk in life made him a conspicuous character in the community, one worthy of emulation. He never used tobacco or liquors in any shape, and was never guilty of profanity, and although not a member of any church organization, his everyday walk and conversation was that of a perfect gentleman, and as near perfection as it is possible for human beings to attain.

Brief services were conducted at the house by Rev. I. Rothenberger, and the last of Charles Palmer was followed to Oak Hill Cemetery by a very large concourse of his old friends and neighbors."

Mr. Palmer was at one time connected with the publication of this paper, having been elected one of the Board of Directors at the meeting held Dec. 26, 1876. He was then chosen Vice President, in which capacity he served until the end of 1882. He was well known to many of our readers, who will be pained to learn of his death.

Died at his home in Nashville, Miami Co., Ohio, Bro. William Eller, on Jan., 28th. A. D. 1894. Deceased was born on July 19th. A. D. 1810, hence was 74 years, 6 months, and 2 days old.

He leaves a wife, three daughters, and one son to mourn his loss. In his death Sister Eller is bereft of a kind husband; the children of a loving indulgent father; the church of a consistent, zealous member. He was a quiet, inoffensive citizen.

Over a quarter of a century ago he heard "the Gospel of Christ" proclaimed by our beloved Brother Wagoner, as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16.

Bro. Wagoner not only proclaimed "good tidings" see Isa. lxi. 1. and Luke vi. 18. but he taught Brother Eller, and other what the "glad tidings" was about, viz., "the kingdom of God." See Matt. iv. 23; ix. 35; xxiv. 14; Mark i. 14; Luke iv. 43; viii. 1; ix. 2; ii. 2, 6, 11; Acts i. 3; viii. 5, 12; xix. 8; xx. 25; xxviii. 30, 31.

Bro. Eller seemed to hear the Master saying,—"Have faith in God." Mark xi. 22. He aspired to an heirship in this future "kingdom" which "the God of heaven" shall yet "set up," "under the whole heaven." James ii. 5; Dan. ii. 44; vii. 13, 14, 27.

He complied with the terms of heirship. Gal. iii. 16, 26-29, and together with others was "planted together in the likeness of Christ's death, that they might be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. vi. 5; Psa. xvii. 15; Phil. iii. 20 21; 1 Cor. xv. 48, 49; 1 John iii. 1, 2. He longed and prayed for the time when heirship will give place to possession, or inheritance. Jas. ii. 5; Dan. vii. 18, 27; Matt. xiii. 40-43; xxv. 31, 34; Luke vii. 32. For the coming kingdom, he like Joseph of Arimathea, "waited." Mark xv. 43. For it he prayed. Matt. vi. 10.

Another event of thrilling importance, to which Bro. Eller looked forward, with joyful hope, and without which, his expectation of a glorious kingdom would never be realized, was the appearing of the immortal King. 2 Tim. iv. 2; Matt. xxv. 31.

In Bro. Eller's faith the appearing and kingdom can no more be separated in God's plan of salvation, than can Jesus and the resurrection, Acts xvii. 16-18, 32; 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; 1 Cor. xv. 21-23. The coming of the Lord, Jas. v. 7, 8, was Bro. Eller's hope, joy, and crown of rejoicing. 1 Thess. ii. 19. He expected to be rewarded then. Matt. xvi. 26; xxv. 31-34; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8; 1 Peter v. 4; Rev. xxii. 12, with eternal life. Dan. xii. 2; Matt. xxv. 46; xix. 27-29; Mark x. 28-30; John xvii. 2, 3; Rom. ii. 6, 7; vi. 21, 23; 1 John v. 9-12; 1 Cor. xv. 51-55.

He was a man of deep convictions, of unswerving loyalty to the truth, through which he was sanctified and made free. John viii. 32; xvii. 17.

The members of the household of faith, Gal. vi. 10, will long remember with what earnestness and zeal he used to speak in our social meetings; for the earnestness was born of conviction, and the zeal was according to knowledge. He will yet be recompensed in the earth, at the resurrection of the just. Prov. xi. 31; Luke xiv. 14. When Christ, who is our life shall appear and share with us the "inheritance" the leading characteristics of which will be incorruptibility, purity, and fadeless beauty. Col. iii. 4; 1 Peter i. 3-9.

In Bro. Eller's decease, we "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him, (from the dead,) Heb. xiii. 20. "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord (the class that shall never die, but be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye to incorruptibility, see John xi. 21-26; 1 Cor. xv. 51-55,) shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself (this same Jesus, Acts i. 9-11.) shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. 13-18. Death will yet be swallowed up in victory, Isa. xxv. 8; 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55; 2 Tim. i. 10; Rev. i. 18, and be no more, Rev. xxi. 4; 1 Cor. 26; Hosea xiii. 14. God's dead men will yet live. They shall awake and sing for God hath spoken it, and he will make it good. Isa. xxvi. 19; Num. xxiii. 19; Prov. xxx. 6; Rom. iii. 3, 4; Acts xxvi. 8. Our brother shall rise again, at the last day, nevermore to die. Luke xx. 36; John vi. 39, 40; vi. 23-25 xiv. 19. Nevermore to say. "I am sick." Isa. xxxiii. 20-24.

Let this blessed prospect strengthen faith, encourage hope, promote humility, fortify patience, mitigate sorrow, incite watchfulness, impel obedience, inspire prayer, increase holiness, and awaken joy.

"Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning." Psa. xxx. 5; Isa. xxxv. 10; li. 3, 11; lxi. 2, 3; John xvi. 22.

"No longer may the weary eye
Behold the form so fondly loved,
In vain we strive to check the sigh,
Death has one thus [illegible] far removed
Unto the land where silence reigns,
Where sleep the vanished of our race.
Nor can we [illegible] visions
That hold them in their resting place.

Life's spirit is the viewless air,
Imparted first by power divine
Each living creature claims a share,
And holds it in a mortal shrine.
Till nature, we must of her [illegible]
Gives back again this viewless air
That visited the mortal dust.
Life's principle, which all things share.

This principle assumes no form;
Nor comes to us from worlds unseen,
Nor speaks to us in calmer strains,
Nor tells what may, or not, have been.
The dead rest calmly in the grave;
Life's spirit on them acts no more.
Nor can we from death's power save;
They rest upon that dreamless shore.

The Christ of God alone hath broke
The chain that binds in death's estate,
To life immortal he awoke,
And opened wide the golden gate
That leads into a future life,
If we accept him as our guide,
Subduing sin and self and strife;
Walking with him whate'er betide.

Faith in his name—his power to save,
In God's appointed chosen way,
Alone can bring us from the grave
Into a future endless day."

Amount paid into treasury at conference at Clarksville June 13, $152.90. Amount received since conference $141.60. Total, $391.59 Amount paid out to date, $253.00 Amount in treasury $138.59.

About one half of the amount subscribed is yet unpaid. Send to A. J. Eychaner, Treas., Gladbrook, Iowa.

Mrs. A. J. Eychaner, Cor. Sec.

Dear Restitution:

Since my last report to those of like precious faith, I visited the brethren at Argos, Ind. Was with them over the Second and Third Sundays in this month, (Feb.) I preached thirteen discourses. Although there were two other meetings going on we had a fair turnout, and good attention, and excellent meetings. We had three social meetings of good interest. There are several in the church that seem determined to work for the dear Lord and his cause. The Lord willing, I will return and hold another meeting in March, commencing on Saturday night before the second Sunday, and continue over two Sundays, if all is favorable.

Sow seed. Send The Restitution to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Curiosities of the Bible.

The Prince of Granada, heir to the throne of Spain, condemned to solitary confinement, by three years careful study obtained the following facts:

The Bible contains 3,586,489 letters; 773,692 words; 31,173 verses; 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The word "and" occurs 46,277 times; the word "Lord" 1,855 times; the word "reverend" but once—in the 8th verse of the 121st Psalm.

The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters in the alphabet but j.

The middle verse in the Bible is the 8th of 118th Psalm.

The longest is the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther.

The shortest verse is the 35th of the 11th chapter of St. John.

The 19th chapter of Kings and the 11th of Isaiah are alike.

The 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st verses of the 107th Psalm end alike.

There are no names or words of more than six syllables.

Acts 26th is the finest chapter to read.

Isaiah 60th, 1st verse, is for new converts.

Matthew 6th is for vain, conceited persons.

The 22nd Psalm is the most beautiful chapter.

The four most inspiring promises are found in John xiv. 2; vi. 37; Matt. xi. 29; Psalms.

EVANGELIST FUND.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed, prompted by a love of truth, and prayerfully desiring the salvation of our fellow beings, agree to pay into the hands of our Conference Treasurer L. B. Boggs, Argos, Indiana, the several sums herein pledged as free-will offerings to a fund to be devoted to sounding out the Word of reconciliation by the tongue of the earnest Evangelist. These contributions to be paid within one year from Nov. 18, 1893.

J. L. Wince	$20.00

California and the Mid-Winter Fair.

A more favorable opportunity than the present to visit California will probably never be offered. The rates for excursion tickets, via the North-Western Line, are the lowest ever made, and, aside from the delightful semi-tropical climate of California, the Mid-Winter Fair at San Francisco, which is now in the full tide of success, is a most potent attraction to the tourist and pleasure-seeker. The trip from Chicago to California is made via the North-Western Line in the marvelously short time of 3½ days. Palace Drawing Room Sleeping Cars leave Chicago daily, and run through without change, and all meals en route are served in dining cars. Daily Tourist Sleeping Car Service is also maintained by this line between Chicago and San Francisco and Los Angeles, and every Thursday the party is personally conducted by an experienced excursion manager. Completely equipped berths in tourist sleepers are furnished at a cost of only $6.00 each from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, thus enabling passengers to make the journey in a most comfortable and economical manner. The North-Western Line has issued a number of illustrated pamphlets descriptive of the Mid-Winter Fair, and also containing detailed information concerning rates, routes, etc., copies of which will be mailed free upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill., if you mention this publication.

Please Read and

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

[illegible] CHAP. 22.

[illegible] the feast of the un[illegible] which is called Pascha [illegible] drawing nigh.

2. And the chief-priests and the scribes were seeking how to destroy him: for they were afraid of the royal-people (the laity).

3. And Satan entered into Joudas, he being of the number of the twelve.

4. And he went and talked with the chief-priests and military-leaders as to how he might betray him.

5. And they were rejoiced and proposed to give him money:

6. And he agreed, and was seeking a favorable opportunity to betray him to them without a crowd.

7. And the day of the Pascha arrived on which it was befitting to sacrifice the Pascha.

8. And he sent Petros and Joannes, saying, Go your way and make ready the Pascha, that we may eat.

9. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we make ready?

10. And he said unto them. Lo, when ye have entered into the city a man will meet you carrying an earthen vessel, follow him into the household into which he is going his way.

11. And ye shall say unto the master of the household. The teacher saith unto thee, where is the inn where I may eat the Pascha with my disciples?

12. And he will show you a great upper room furnished. There make ready.

13. And they went and found even as he had said unto them; and they made ready the Pascha.

14. And when the hour arrived (lit. become) he reclined he and the apostles with him.

15. And he said unto them, I have had a longing desire to eat this Pascha with you before I suffer.

16. For I say unto you, I shall not eat it until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17. And accepting the cup he offered thanksgiving and said, Take this and share it with one another:

18. For I say unto you, I shall not from now on drink from the product of the vine until the kingdom of God shall have come.

19. And taking a loaf of bread he gave thanks and broke it and gave unto them, saying. This is my body that is being given for you; This do in remembrance of me.

20. And likewise the cup after they had supped, saying. This cup is the new covenant in my blood (in the use of) which is being shed for you, (or poured out, lit).

21. Moreover, lo, the hand of the one who is betraying me is with me upon the table.

22. And the Son of Man is going his way according to that which hath been defined; but woe unto that man through whom he is being betrayed.

23. And they began to question themselves as to who indeed of them was the one destined to do this.

24. And there occurred a friendly strife among them, as to who of them seemed to be the greater.

25. And he said unto them, The kings of the nations lord it over them, and those of them who exercise official power are called benefactors.

26. But not so yet. On the other hand let the greater among you become as it were the younger; and the leader as it were the servile worker (the deacon lit).

27. For which is the greater, the one who reclineth or the one who serveth? Is not the one who reclineth? But I am in your midst as the one who serveth?

28. And ye it is who have continued through with me in my trials;

29. And I am covenanting with you a kingdom even as my Father covenanted with me.

30. That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit upon thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

31. And the Lord said Simon, [illegible] lo Satan hath sought to sift you (plural) like the wheat as it were;

32. But I have supplicated for thee that thy faith may fail not; [illegible]

33. And he said unto him, Lord, with thee I am ready to go my way to prison and to death.

34. And he said, I say unto thee Petros, alektor (the Roman signal trumpet) will not sound to-day until thou shalt thrice utterly deny that thou knowest me.

35. And he said unto them, When I sent you away without purse and pouch and sandals, did ye lack anything? And they said, nothing.

36. And he said unto them, But now the one who hath a purse let him take it, likewise also a pouch; and the one who hath not, let him sell his outer-garment and procure a sword.

37. For I say unto you that this which hath been written must still be fulfilled in me, namely, And he was accounted with transgressors. Yea the word concerning me hath an end (completion).

38. And they said, Lo here are two swords; And he said unto them, It is sufficient.

39. And going out he went his way as was his custom to the Mount of the olive-orchards: and his disciples followed him,

40. And arrived at the place he said unto them, Engage in votive-prayer lest ye enter into trial (or temptation).

41. And he withdrew from them about a stone's throw, and kneeling he engaged in votive-prayer,

42. Saying, Father, if thou wilt, remove this cup from me: nevertheless let not my will but thine come to pass.

43. And an angel from heaven appeared unto him strengthening him within.

44. And getting to be in an agony of strife he offered votive-prayer more continuously. And his sweat became as it were drops of blood descending upon the ground.

45. And rising from his votive-prayer, and coming to his disciples, he found them sleeping by reason of their grief.

46. And he said unto them, Why are ye lying down to sleep? Arise, engage in votive-prayer, that ye may not have entered into trial (or temptation).

47. While he was yet talking, to a mixed multitude and the one of the twelve called Joudas was coming on before them, and he drew nigh to Jesous to greet him (might be a kiss or any other form of expressing friendship) as a friend.

48. But Jesous said, Joudas, art thou betraying the Son of Man with a friendly greeting?

49. And those about him saw what was going to be, they said. Lord shall we smite with sword?

50. And a certain one of them smote the bond-servant of the chief-priest and cut off his right ear (in one of the other gospels it is the "lobe" of the right ear).

51. And Jesous answered and said, Permit ye (or ye are permitted) as far as this. And touching the lobe of the ear he healed him.

52. And Jesous said unto the chief-priests and military leaders of the temple and elders, Have ye come with swords and clubs as though against a robber?

53. When I was with you day after day in the temple, ye did not stretch forth your hands against me. But this is the hour and official-power of the darkness.

54. And seizing they led him into the house of the chief-priest; and Petros followed afar off.

55. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the court and were seated together, Petros sat in their midst.

56. And a certain house-maid saw him seated by the light, and looking at him attentively said, This one was also with him.

57. And he denied him saying, Woman I know him not.

58. And after a little another (a man) saw him and said the same thing. And Petros said, Man, I am not he.

59. And when about an hour had intervened, a certain other asseverated saying, of a truth this one also was with him. For he is also a Galilaian.

60. And Petros said, Man, I know not what thou art saying. And straightway while he was yet speaking alektor sounded.

61. And the Lord turning looked on Petros. And Petros was reminded of the word of the Lord, how he [illegible] sound to-day thou wilt utterly deny me thrice.

62. And Petros went out and lamented bitterly.

63. And the men who were holding him in constraint mocked him as they flayed him.

64. And concerning him they smote his face and questioned him repeatedly saying, Prophesy who it is that smote thee.

65. And blaspheming they said many other things to him.

66. And when it had become day the presbytery of the royal-people were gathered together, both chief-priests and scribes, and they led him away to their synedrion, saying, If thou art the Christ, tell us.

67. And he said unto them, If I should tell you, ye would not put faith in it.

68. And if I should ask (question) ye will not have answered.

69. But hereafter the Son of Man will be seated at the right hand of God's ability (or host).

70. And they all said, Thou, art thou then the Son of God, and he said unto them, ye yourselves are saying that I am.

71. And they said, What further need have we of testimony, For we ourselves have heard it from his own mouth.

COMMENT.

"Proposed" instead of "covenanted" R. V. It takes at least two to make a covenant, and the following clause here shows that it was "a proposal" as it says he "consented" or "agreed" to it.

"Master of the household" instead of "goodman" R. V.

"The Teacher" instead of "Master" R. V.

"Inn" instead of "guest-chamber" R. V.

"Reclined" instead of "sat down" R. V.

"Shall" instead of "will" R. V. Prophesy not purpose here expressed. "The Lord's supper" is a type not yet in reality fulfilled—a type of the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

"The cup" instead of "a cup" R. V.

"Shall" again instead of "will" for the same reason.

"A loaf of bread" instead of "bread" merely R. V.

"Which is being given for you" instead of "is given" R. V. which changes the time of the action of the verb.

"Which is being poured out (or shed)" R. V. for the same reason. It had not actually been shed at this time.

"Who is betraying me" instead of "who betrayeth me" R. V. for a similar reason.

"Moreover" instead of "but" R. V. An additional statement instead of an adversative one.

"And" instead of "for" R. V. A continued statement, not a conclusion.

"Was destined" instead of "should" R. V. showing that the disciples accepted the doctrine of predestination and believed it.

"A friendly strife" instead of "contention" R. V.

"Official-power" instead of "authority" R. V.

"Leader" instead of "chief" R. V.

"Trials" instead of "temptations" R. V.

"Am covenanting" instead of "appoint" and "hath covenanted" instead of "hath appointed" R. V. This is a very important difference it seems to me, and agrees with all the foregoing prophecies of the Old Covenant Scriptures.

"That ye may sit" instead of "And ye shall sit" R. V. Same construction as "eat and drink"—and is part of the "new covenant."

"And the Lord said" omitted in the R. V. but in the best text.

"Sift you." The "you" is plural here showing that the address was through Simon to all of them and not to Simon alone.

"Alektor" instead of "the cock" R. V. The Roman watch-trumpet, which blew at this hour regularly.

"Utterly deny" instead of "deny" simply R. V.

"Engage in votive-prayer" instead of "pray" merely R. V. Christ himself here also offered votive-prayer.

"Come to pass" instead of "be done" R. V.

"Strengthening him within" instead of "strengthening him" merely R. V.

"An agony of strife" instead of "agony" merely R. V. For as we use the word "agony" the state is [illegible] suffering, whereas the idea here is of active resistance, the spiritually sustained will contending with the flesh and overcoming it.

"More continuously" instead of "more earnestly" R. V.

"Great" not in the text as given in the R. V.

Notice the difference between the two words here for "lying down to sleep" and "sleeping" as the R. V. makes no distinction in its translation.

"Chief-priest" instead of "high-priest" R. V. There was a "great" priest, but no "high" one.

"Permit" or "allow" instead of "suffer" R. V. on account of its ambiguity of meaning.

"Clubs" like a policeman's club instead of "staves" R. V.

"Official power" instead of "power" merely R. V.

"Lamented" instead of "wept" R. V. Such men as Peter do not show their grief by weeping generally. Then is another word for "weep" in the Greek.

"Blaspheming" instead of "reviling" R. V.

"Hereafter" instead of "from henceforth" R. V.

"Testimony" instead of "witnesses" R. V.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 7, 1894. NO. 9.

The Restitution

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as king of kings, [illegible] of the [illegible] the resurrection of the dead; the [illegible] of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked: eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

The Day of Satisfaction.

When I shall wake on that fair morn of morns,
After whose dawning never night returns,
And with whose glory day eternal burns,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall see thy glory face to face,
When in thine arms thou wilt thy child embrace,
When thou shalt open all thy stores of grace,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall meet with those whom I have loved,
Clasp in my arms the long-removed,
And find how faithful thou hast proved
I shall be satisfied.

When this vile body shall arise again,
Purged by thy power from every taint and stain,
Delivered from all weakness and all pain,
I shall be satisfied.

When I gaze upon the face of him
Who for me died, with eye no longer dim,
And praise him in the everlasting hymn,
I shall be satisfied.

When I shall call to mind the long, long past,
With clouds and storms and shadows overcast,
And know that I am saved and blest at last,
I shall be satisfied.

When every enemy shall disappear,
The unbelief, the darkness, and the fear,
When thou shalt smooth the brow and wipe the tear,
I shall be satisfied.

When every vanity shall pass away,
And all be real, all without decay,
In that sweet dawning of the cloudless day,
I shall be satisfied.

—Horatius Bonar, D. D.

From Brother Woodruff's Scrap-Book.

The tongue is another organ of the human frame very wonderful both in its structure and use. It is the organ of speech and the word is often used for speech itself. It is in many respects more wonderful than other members of the human body not excepting even the eye. The organ of speech is the most marvelous in power, the most various in adaptation, the most complete embodiment and revelation of the indwelling mind. The combinations of motion and position of which the tongue is capable are as countless as the varieties of tones and voices among men. There are more than a thousand millions of human voices in the world, no two are so much alike as to be taken the one for the other. The power of this faculty of speech is even more various and wonderful than the living organism by which it is brought into play. The inspired Psalmist calls it his glory, and the Apostle James says, "The tongue is a world in itself." The reader is referred to James iii. It has been said of Martin Luther that his words were half battles. And words from other lips than Luthers have won greater victories than war. "A word spoken in season how good it is." Truth sits enthroned upon the tongue which speaks right words, and through the portals of the lips it sends forth messengers of light and blessing to humanity. There are living words of power today that came from the lips of those who have been for thousands of years lying silent in the grave.

No talent is more to be desired than the power to send forth words of truth and love, (two of the most powerful things) to travel where you cannot go, and to live when you are gone. The tongue may scatter words as freely as leaves fall in autumn, and they may be making impressions that may outlive all time—impressions that may be read for generations to come. The good words of truth live and give life to the world.

The Bible descriptions of the tongue are not very flattering to the natural man—according to James "it is a world of iniquity" "it defileth the whole body." It is untameable except through the grace of God.

How much evil, how much sorrow and bitterness has been caused by the uncontrolled tongue. Solomon says, "there is a time to keep silent as well as a time to speak." "A man of understanding holdeth his peace." "He that hath knowledge spareth his words." "Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace is counted wise," and "he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding."

In seeking for the life to come, "What man is he that desireth life and loveth many days that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil and thy lips from speaking guile." "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearer." "Pleasant words is as an honey comb both sweet to the soul, and health to the bones." "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger." May our tongues prove a power for good instead of evil.

Paul may have been the Prince, and Jesus was the King of preachers. No voice ever fell on human ear like his Henry Clay's voice was called a "Band of music." Daniel Webster's voice was called a "trumpet." But never man spake like this Man."

It is a comforting thought that every follower of Christ is held up by the prayers of Christ.

Christ welded his preaching and praying into practising. His whole life was a sermon read by the world; he went about doing good. The world needs today just what it needed in that day, plain preaching, praying, and practising.

The "New Covenant" is another name for the mystery of the Gospel—for the proclamation of which Paul was an ambassador in bonds. He was fitted by God to be minister of the New Covenant. "For the Law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." "Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." His name is a name of salvation, "For there is no other name under heaven, etc." "To him gave all the prophets witness that through him etc." "Repent and be baptized, etc."

The giving of the law was attended with manifestations of God's glory notwithstanding it was as Paul says, "the ministration of condemnation or in other words, death" engraven on stones. Moses came down from this mount of glory with his face so dazzling with glory that the children of Israel could not look on it more than we can the sun. Moses had to put a vail on his face in order that the Sons of Israel might bear the sight of that glory which passeth away. Their minds are still blinded, for to this day the same vail remaineth over the reading of the Old Covenant, it not being revealed to them that this vail is done away in Christ.

Paul was a minister through whom they believed, see 2 Cor. [illegible] 18-20; Eph. iii. 6, 7, 9; Col. i. 26-29; 1 Tim. i. 11, 12.

Obadiah and Jeremiah were cotemporaneous.

Israel had no greater enemy than the Edomites—who were proud of their worldly wisdom and imagined themselves quite secure in their dwellings among the Rocks. Hence they are often spoken of by the Prophets as a type of the earthly powers that oppose God and his Kingdom. At the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar they had proclaimed their malicious joy at the sufferings of their brethren, who carried with them to Babylon the recollection of their insults and cruelties, see Psa. cxxxvii. Such wickedness could not pass unpunished, and Obadiah was commanded to announce to the Edomites their ruin, and to give for a reason for it—not so much their pride and presumptuous confidence in their own strength and wisdom, as their enmity to God.

The Prophet goes on to declare that Edom should be as though it had never been, and should be swallowed up forever, while Israel should rise again from the present fall- should repossess not only her own land, but also Philistia and Edom, and should finally rejoice in the holy reign of the promised Messiah.

Nahum the 7th of the minor prophets— prophesied 713 years before Christ in the time of Hezekiah. The name signifies "Comparative Penitence." It displays the mercy of God towards his people, and his justice towards his enemies. The Prophet announces to "Nineveh" and through her to all worldly powers which set themselves against the people of God that their ruin is certain - because Jehovah is a jealous and avenging God. The Book of "Nahum" should be compared to that of "Jonah." The remission of God's judgments being illustrated in the one; the executing of them in the other.

"Nineveh"—the destruction of which is foretold by the Prophet, was at the time the Capital of a great and flourishing Empire. It was a city of vast extent and population and was the centre of the principal commerce of the world. It was a bloody city, full of lies and robbery. It plundered the neighboring nations, and is compared by the Prophet to a family of lions, which fill their hole with prey, and their dens with ravin. At the same time it was strongly fortified. Its collosal wall a hundred feet high, with their 1500 towers, bidding defiance to all enemies, yet, so totally was it destroyed that in the 2nd century after Christ not a vestige remained of it and its very site has been a matter of doubt and uncertainty. The Book is surpassed by none in sublimity of description. It opens with a solemn description of the attributes and operations of Jehovah. In chapter 2 it depicts in timely colors the siege and capture of "Nineveh," and the consternation of the inhabitants. Chapter 3 describes the after ruin of the city, and the various causes contributing to it. The Burden is the destruction of Nineveh and of the Assyrian Empire.

Hickory Grove Sermons.

No. 6.

A series of discourses delivered by A. J. Eychaner in the Gospel tent at Hickory Grove, Sept. 9-25, 1893.

There is no subject so many featured and covers so wide a range as the one before us. The text chosen at the beginning of these meetings is still our motto, and will be so long as we speak upon the nature and destiny of man. "He that hath the Son hath the life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life." 1 Jno. v. 12.

The gift of eternal life is represented in the Scriptures as a kind of gratuity—something that cannot be earned, but given because of obedience. It will be specially awarded to the followers of Jesus—not because they have earned it but rather as I think because the nature of the kingdom and the position to which they are called necessitates that the body of the Christ must be as immortal as its Head. Jesus has already been endowed with the power of an endless life - made immortal, and so will his disciples be when born of the Spirit being raised to die no more.

To attain this position in nature it is necessary that we be found in Christ at his coming. The promise of the incorruptible nature pertains only to those who by a patient continuance in well doing seek for this precious gift. How few there are who stop to consider the inestimable value of this offered gift. It is probable that Paul referred to this when he exclaimed "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift." 2 Cor. ix. 15, because he tells us in another place that "The gift of God is eternal life." To live always in the present state would not be desirable but when God's kingdom will have come, and eternal joys and glories fill our world, and when Jesus will be with us again, then eternal life will be a precious inheritance and its value beyond estimate. Herein we may also see the wisdom of God in guarding the tree of life after Adam had become a sinner. To have lived forever in sin would have been an evil unutterably sad and a condition that God could not for a moment entertain. The whole purpose of God would have failed, and Satan triumphed if man did not "surely die" as God had said he should after he sinned. God therefore guarded the source of life by cherubim and their flaming swords. Since that fatal day when Adam was driven from the garden, has man been mortal inheriting the death sentence of sin. Jesus came as the Lion of the tribe of Judah and loosed the seals of death from the book of life, and its pages have been opened so that by obedience to him we secure the privilege of having our names written in the book. Those who will not come to Christ (the author of eternal life or through whom it is given) can never receive the gift.

This brings us to one more feature of this many sided subject, viz.

THE DESTINY OF THE WICKED.

This is not a pleasant theme, I would much rather dwell upon the blessings of eternal life—the glories of earth redeemed, the kingdom set up, no more war but peace among the nations, even that blessed time so long foretold by pro- [illegible] edge of the glory of God shall fill our entire world; but it is perhaps a duty sometimes to pause in the contemplation of promised glory, and tell the wicked man his doom and warn him to flee from the wrath to come. During the 30 years of my public preaching I have never spoken upon the destiny of the wicked but once and then by request. Three times only during all those years have I entered upon a public discussion in which the destiny of the wicked entered as a special issue. Yet this theme is one that legitimately grows out of the text before us and we owe no apology for introducing it here this evening. If the sinner has not the life spoken of in the text he is not immortal in any sense of the word. His destiny therefore is terminable. It will avail nothing to try to suspend the dogma of eternal torture upon doubtful interpretations and passages, for it is swept from the Bible. "He that hath not the Son God hath not the life," stands like a rock more enduring than Adamant and more immovable than Gibraltar. The spray of a troubled theology only washes it brighter and makes it sparkle a veritable gem in the sunlight of eternal truth.

To arrive at this subject quickly and directly we wish first to answer the question, What is a sinner or a wicked man? In Jno. iii. 4 we read "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law, for sin is a transgression of the law." If now sin is a transgression of the law, the man who thus sins certainly is a sinner. Again at the fifth chapter and seventeenth verse we read "All unrighteousness is sin." An unrighteous act is one where the person acts against law, or contrary to the law, therefore a sinner is a transgressor of the law which he knows and understands. We are told in Rom. iv. 15. "Where there is no law there is no transgression." A person cannot transgress where there is no law, that is to say the law may be broken, but while the person is ignorant of the law the transgression is overlooked. Or as Paul states it in Rom. v. 13 "Sin is not imputed when there is no law." A person must therefore have a knowledge of the law before he can sin against that law so as to incur its penalty.

Taking it for granted by all here tonight that the sinner will be punished let us pass to the nature and duration of that punishment and we inquire First- What is that punishment? and Second—How long will it last?

If you will permit me I will try to answer the second question first, and my answer will be very brief. There are two or three passages that bear directly upon this point and to these I now invite your attention. In Matt. xxv. 46 we read "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." I have emphasized the words "everlasting" and "punishment" because they answer the question, How long shall the punishment last? It is worthy of note, that the words everlasting and eternal in this verse are the same in the Greek and signify age lasting. Again in 2 Thess. i. 9, the punishment is said to be "everlasting," or age lasting. The word is again found in Psa. xcii. 7 as setting forth the duration of the punishment. In these texts then the duration of the punishment is positively said to be "everlasting punishment"—"everlasting" and "forever." These then should settle the question of duration whether we regard these words as referring to definite or indefinite time. We can all agree that the words cover at least an age or that the punishment is age lasting.

But the real issue lies in the [illegible] much concerned in regard to the duration of the punishment as we are in regard to its nature. What is the penalty the wicked man is destined to receive as the reward of his deeds. Let Paul answer, "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. Now if the sinner is immortal this penalty can never be inflicted. You see then the pertinency of our text "He that hath not the Son hath not the life." The eternal nature is not his and hence when his sin is visited upon him he dies. Let us notice the texts cited from Thess. i. 9 more carefully and we shall discover that the punishment is "destruction" and this word "destruction" cannot by any theological jugglery or sleight of hand be made to mean "preservation." "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power."

Here you will observe the punishment is destruction and it is as to duration "everlasting." Now if death is really the punishment that punishment will last just as long as they are dead. To give them life again is to release them from the punishment God has threatened, and if they have immortality God can never punish them with death. Look once more at the text from Psa. xcii. 7. Destruction is there pointed out. "They shall be destroyed forever." There can be no eternal duration of the sinner here, on the other hand it is just the opposite. It is eternal destruction of the sinner. He is forever destroyed. Can the sinner be destroyed—this is the real issue, and does the Bible agree with our text that he has no eternal life? Speaking of the wicked (Phil. iii. 19) Paul says, "whose end is destruction."

I will refer to the following texts. Examine them when you can spare the time and I think they will help you to arrive at the truth in regard to the true destiny of the wicked.

Matt. iii. 12, Wicked burned up as chaff.

Matt. xiii. 40, 42. Wicked burned up as tares.

Malachi iv. 1, Wicked burned up like stubble and nothing left—neither root nor branch.

Psa. lxxiii. 19, Cast down into destruction—utterly consumed.

Psa. xxxvii. 2, Cut down as grass—wither as a green herb.

Psa. xxxvii. 9. Evil doers shall be cut off.

Psa. xxxvii. 10, Yet a little while and the wicked shall not be.

Psa. xxxvii. 20, The wicked shall perish.

Psa. xxxvii. 20, They shall consume away into smoke.

Psa. xxxvii. 22. They that are cursed of Him shall be cut off.

Psa. xxxvii. 28, The seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

Psa. xxxvii. 36, He passed away and lo he was not.

Psa. xxxvii. 38, The transgressors shall be destroyed together.

Psa. cxlv. 20, All the wicked will he destroy.

Prov. xxi. 15, Destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

Prov. xxi. 16, Shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

Matt. vii. 13, Destruction—many go in thereat.

Phil. iii. 19, Whose end is destruction.

Psa. xxi. 9, The fire shall devour them.

Rev. xx. 8, 9, Fire . . . devoured them.

Isa. i. 28, Sinner and transgressor, destroyed, consumed.

Job vi. 18, They go to nothing and perish.

Psa. civ. 35, Consumed out of the earth and be no more.

Ezek. xviii. 4, 20, The soul that sinneth it shall die.

Rom. vi. 23, The wages of sin is

James i. 15, Sin when finished brings death.

These texts are sufficient to show the true nature of the punishment of the wicked. There are other texts which speak of being cast into that fire which is said to be everlasting fire, but we are told also why the chaff is cast into this fire and why the tares are cast into this fire and it is in full harmony with all the Scriptures too, for the reason is that "He will burn up the chaff," not preserve it.

Our text in the light of these 28 Scriptures stands out clearer than ever declaring that eternal life is the peculiar inheritance of the righteous—due as we are informed by Paul, at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead, (1 Cor. xv. 53-55) and that the sad end of the finally wicked must be that they will perish forever.

It is our especial privilege through faith in, and obedience to the gospel to escape the fate which sin brings and to stand justified before the Judge when the last account is rendered. Shall we not then go forth with new courage, feeling that this promise is dearer than ever "He that hath the Son hath the life." The eternal life is in Jesus. When he shall appear as the chief shepherd we shall be like him, and then too shall receive the crown of glory that fades not away. We may pass through death yet the promise is sure, Because I live ye shall live also.

"If I in thy likeness O Lord may awake,
And shine a pure image of thee,
Then I shall be satisfied when I shall break,
The fetters of death and be free.
I know this stained tablet must first be made white,
To let thy bright features be drawn.
I know I must pass through the darkness of night,
To witness the coming of dawn."

"Yes, I shall be satisfied when I can cast
The shadows of nature all by;
When this dreary scene from my vision shall pass,
And there is an unclouded sky.
I feel that bright morning is now drawing near,
When earth's fairest features will fade.
'Tis then in thy likeness O, let me appear
In glory and beauty arrayed."

"Preaching does no Good."

"All the preaching that has been done here has done no good," was the discouraging expression of one of the members of a little church not long ago, and we have all been tempted at times to say the same thing. But our dear Heavenly Father ordained preaching. He gave command that we should "occupy" until Jesus comes. He did not say how many would be converted. He gave no promise that crowds of men and women would come flocking into the church. Our business was to "go and work in the vineyard." We were to set up a light where it would not be hid. The little church assembling weekly, or monthly, constitutes such a light. It stands as a witness, condemning those who reject the Word of the Lord. Not many will be saved in these perilous times; but some good will be accomplished by the soldier who stands faithfully at the post of duty. Count up the number who have already been called out to witness with us to a nearing advent. Are they worth nothing? O eternity! A life—for eternity,—let that be your answer, my disheartened brother. We who meet together are strengthened by the preaching that we hear. It is God's order. In obedience to Him is our safety.

The Secret of Happiness.

One of my neighbors in town and church is an old lady whose dress is of no period of fashion. I [illegible] many dollars. Her step is as light as a girl's, her manner bright and cheery, and her otherwise homely face spreads the glow of a heart at peace with God.

Like many others, her life was spent in a struggle for daily bread, and scarcely was this pressure removed before she was called upon to mourn the loss of first one, then another beloved member of her family, until she had outlived every relative.

Her home is plain, almost bare of the luxuries considered as indispensable to comfort, yet there is no one from whom I so much enjoy a visit as this solitary woman, ever so warm in greeting, so cheerfully companionable.

"There is so much heart-ease about you," I once said to her, "that it refreshes me to meet you. Why, you are the youngest and happiest person I have seen today!"

"O, yes," she replied smilingly. "I have stopped growing old, for each day brings me nearer the possession of endless youth in my better home. And how can I be so sad in this beautiful world where my heavenly Father has placed me?"

"Still you had your full share of trials and sorrows."

"Yes, I have surely passed through the valley of Baca, but by the grace of God I have been able to make it a well."

"But, my friend," she continued, "I have been very happy only since I ceased to strain after what was beyond my reach, and resolved no longer to hug to my bosom my griefs and disappointments, but take them all to God, and leave them with Him, content to be what He wishes, and only that."—The Christian Weekly.

Jesus of Nazareth had no worldly wealth when he began his public ministry, and acquired none during his progress. The garments he wore constituted his entire estate at the time of his death; and this was distributed among the soldiers who conducted his crucifixion. John xix. 23. 24.

THE most painful experience we have in the fight of and for faith is with those who blindly lead the people. Scores upon scores have we interested in the truth of God, and just as we have begun to hope they would count the cost and become Israelites indeed, the ministers have heard of the change that was coming over them, and employed ridicule and every other weapon but the Bible, to switch them off the track. We are feeling sore as we write because three parties had arranged for us to meet their spiritual guides and defend the positions these members of their flock have lately taken; but have just been notified that they had "concluded not to discuss these matters." Of course this is consistent with the system they belong to, and it is their duty to watch their flock as they have agreed to; but they are the enemies of the truth all the same. We trust the weakness of their case, as shown by their cowardice, will have the desired end. •

We eat and drink and assimulate because they are necessities of our nature; but it is the function of one department of the mind sustained by aliment, to manifest these great moral traits—faith, love and obedience to God. Feed it with plenty of appropriate food and it grows—starve it and it dies. •

IN at least half a dozen of Paul's Epistles we find him asking an interest in the prayers of the faithful; and it is not asked as a sort of stereotyped wind up to an address, or an epistle, but like this: "Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me. It will be seen that he did not leave it all to them—he was bound to do his part of the praying—not saying of prayers. And it is worthy of note that the burden of his prayers, and that of the brotherhood were not Word may have free course and be glorified; and that utterance (or as Diaglott,—eloquence) may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds; that therein I may speak boldly as I ought to speak. Brethren and sisters never forget that Heralds of the Gospel have a special claim upon your prayers. •

TRULY the times we live in are apostate. By that we mean the departure from the faith once delivered to the saints is almost universal; and of course the practice of the saints as laid out for them has correspondingly depreciated. A godly life cannot be sustained without faith in God. Nothing but faith will enable men and women to row against wind and tide all the time, and deny themselves gratifications indulged by others on every hand, and which their own flesh craves. And while we would not for a moment detract from the benefits accruing to society from the religious organizations of the day; we cannot be blind to the fact that the faith of apostates is felt to be very unsatisfying, and requires to be supplemented by all sorts of expedients which gratify the flesh. This shows the lack of renovating power in their system; it does not renew the mind, or expel the old man, although, it arouse the religious faculty. These reflections come of the announcement that a Military organization is about to be formed among members of the Y. M. C. A. so-called. O, what obtuseness of moral feeling in reference to the crimes of Military life! The young soldier is taught as his first duty to obey his superior right or wrong:—take human life at the bidding of another, and make himself a passive instrument in hands, perhaps, reeking with blood. This is only a note by the way, to tell us what o'clock it is. There is another. Large hand-bills in all directions tell us that a Humorist and Impersonator will appear this evening in one of the largest churches of this city—tickets twenty-five cents. Have Plays in a Church.

Church of the Messiah, Michigan avenue and 23d street, is provided with a pulpit and a stage.

It is the only church in the city which has a thoroughly organized company of amateur actors and a well-equipped theatre within the same building in which divine services are held. But the congregation is as broad-minded as it is fashionable, and for ten years its members have taken the lead in amateur theatricals and in rendering society plays.

More than one member of the Messiah Amateur company has left the church for the professional stage and the present director of the company, Mr. Arthur Van Inwagen, was for two years Mr. E. S. Willard's stage manager, having He is a young man, not over twenty-five, and his family, which is one of the most aristocratic on the south side, expresses a hope that he may not again venture upon the professional stage.

Of this season's players Miss June Collins is by far the most competent actress. She is a beautiful young woman, somewhat the style of Georgia Cayvan, whom she much resembles in face and action. Miss Collins is one of the best-known amateur actresses in Chicago, and on more than one occasion managers have made her tempting offers to enter the ranks of the professionals. Last season she did play with Charles Frohman's stock company for a short period, but soon left to resume her place in society. Now, when she can be persuaded to speak of her professional career, it is to declare that she has shown her friends and dearest foes that she is an actress and a good one—that is all she cares for.

Miss Daphne Loomis, daughter of Mr. E. J. Loomis, a retired member of the board of trade, is a winsome little woman, scarce out of her teens, and even at rehearsal it is hard to believe that this graceful little creature on the stage is not pretty Maud Adams. Very little coaching would place Miss Loomis in the front rank among amateurs. Already she is more finished in her work than many professionals whose pictures are familiar to the public. This is her first season in the company.

Mr. Van Inwagen is rehearsing his players day and night. It is very interesting to watch the rehearsals. There is a strictness that is not amateurish and a sociability which is not professional. The stage is almost as large as the Schiller theater and the several sets of scenery are quite attractive. There is seating capacity for an audience of 400 and as the seats for Thursday and Friday have already been sold out the play will be repeated next week.

The dramatic club consists of the grown members of the Fraternity of the Messiah. Ten years ago a large box was used as a stage, and even this caused comment; but six years ago, when the present stage was built and real scenery put in, there was almost a disruption; but the Rev. W. W. Fenn, who had taken Robert Collier's place, stood by the young people and the theatricals continued. There are still some members of the church who object to theatrical performances in the sacred edifice, but hitherto the plays have been virtuous little pieces and it can be imagined how ruthlessly Grundy's naughty farce-comedy has been pruned for the present production. Even as it now stands, however, some of the actors fear that it will not meet with unqualified approval, although it will fill the house again and again.

In one scene Miss Hall, who takes the part of an adventuress, has to smoke a cigarette. She is supposed to do it deftly, but last night at rehearsal she managed to fill her lungs with the smoke and the action of the play was stopped until she recovered from a fit of strangulation. Surely no adventuress, in or out of a play, ever held a cigarette as tightly in her fingers as does Miss Hall. Mr. J. Van Inwagen, Jr., is a good foil on Miss Hall's acting, and although it is his first season with the company he plays the "drunken" scene with a naturalness that shows careful study, and bids fair to deceive the members of the Church of the Messiah and their fashionable friends.

There is much good material in the Fraternity of the Messiah and the church is certainly doing its share toward elevating the stage, and now it has set the fashion, St. Paul's University church is preparing to have a stage erected in its annex and some other religious bodies, it is said, contemplate the same project.

The above is clipped from the Chicago Daily News, and is certainly indicative of the "perilous times" in which we live.

Alas! is this the Church of the Messiah?" Has the church of the meek and lowly Messiah become "broad-minded," enough to travel the "broadway?" "Fashionable," enough to embrace the "Fashion of this world (which) passeth away?" "Aristocratic enough to be "lifted up with pride, (and thus) fall into Has the "Church of the Messiah," so forgotten her calling and mission, that she has become a school in which the humble followers of the lowly Jesus are trained to become actors and managers for the professional stage? Is it becoming for followers of Jesus who should be patterns of sobriety, to "play the drunken scene with a naturalness that shows careful study, and bids fair to deceive the members of the Church of the Messiah and their fashionable friends?"

Alas! is it becoming that "women professing godliness with good works," to play the "adventuress," and imitate the abandoned women of the world in smoking one of those vile cigarettes, that the members of the "Church of the Messiah," may be amused? Is such conduct becoming women professing respectability, aside from women professing godliness, yet this woman ranks among the most refined ladies of fashionable society, and a member of the so-called "Church of the Messiah."

Think of a church calling itself "Church of the Messiah," building a play stage almost the size of the Schiller theater, inside of a church dedicated to the service of God, in which farces and plays may be introduced that are decidedly destructive of godliness.

Alas! would these members of the "Church of the Messiah," stand drilling night and day in the study of God's Holy Word, and how to live a pure and holy life? Yet we read: "Mr. Van Inwagen is rehearsing his players day and night," to amuse his fellow brethren and sisters with plays which at one time almost caused "disruption," until the "Rev. W. W. Fenn," "stood by the young people and the theatricals continued."

We also learn that St. Paul's church, and other religious bodies contemplate building theater stages in their churches. Paul says: "in the last days perilous times shall come," and when they did come, then would be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Neither Paul nor the Messiah would feel at home in these churches called after their names.

The conduct of the "Church of the Messiah," is doubtless more in harmony with principles of the coming "Anti-Messiah," whose church it really is. The true Messiah certainly could never endorse such a church as belonging to him.

Alas! we have fallen upon strange times, here we have churches reveling in fashion, luxury, and worldly pleasure, while untold thousands upon thousands of people are on the verge of starvation for something to eat, and at the same time there is plenty of provision in the land, crops have been abundant, but these poor people can neither get provisions or work. "Watch!" We may hourly expect the angelic reapers to gather in the first fruits.

War's Black Cloud over Europe.

War in Europe is inevitable, and even he who prophesies as he runs need not hesitate to predict it as not far distant. Any little thing may bring it about. An emeute in Central Africa may have the seismic effect of whistling "Croppies, Lie Down!" at Donnybrook fair. There is no disposition on the part of men who study the situation—men like De Blowitz, St. Cere, Hugues Le Roux—to see in it anything but war. There are two distinct forces making for open war; the financiers on the one hand and the taxpayers on the other. The European governments are between the deep sea of popular discontent and the peril of financiers. The cost of the enormous military establishments is so great that there is only the alternative of war or national bankruptcy. Russia, Austria, Hungary, Germany and France might be able to carry for some time yet the burden of the military budgets, but even in these cases the difficulty is only shifted. There comes in the danger of the growing power of socialism and the anarchistic parties. For these internal disorders the only remedy that European statesmen discover is the blood-letting of a general war.

The very causes that make war inevitable will make it a long and fierce struggle—a war in Europe and Asia that shall do away with any need of Malthusian precepts for scores of generations.

Where will the next war break out? Lord Salisbury said, you may remember, "The next war is Russia's war." There is good reason for accepting this statement. Whether fantassins swarm over the Rhine, or Cossacks ride amuck in Austrian lands, it will be no other thing than Russia's gaining ground in the East or winning water in the South. It is the rising of the Great Bear.

But before one can answer with any degree of probability the question where the next war will break out, it is necessary to look into the jarring interests that make for war. But mark this, when the war is on, and you are asked, "What is the cause of all this uproar?" do not forget the answer is, "The Dardanelles."

In the first place, France; it is not difficult to understand the interest France has in the coming struggle. The clamor for revenge on Germany is noisy enough, the popular cry for the recovery of the lost provinces is loud enough to deceive one who takes politics lightly into the belief that these are the strongest influences in French affairs. But the really potent factor is the French ambition for expansion and conquest in the East. It was this that brought about the Franco-Russian alliance. The mechanics of Toulon and the men of Paris cheered the officers of the Russian fleet in a sort of enthusiastic hatred for Germany, but the presence of the fleet in Gallic waters meant the reopening of the eternal Eastern question. The first intentions of France are against Siam, British India, the Orient.

And Russia? It was the will of Peter the Great and the dream of Catherine to secure a water-way to the south land and the countries of the golden East. It is a racial ambition. Russia has no port from which to launch her iron-clads. The north is closed half the year by ice, the south is closed all the year by paper and ink treaties. Through Turkish waters alone Russia can find her way to Europandemonium. Whether she makes war eastward toward Herat or southward over the Balkans, over black rivers and salt seas, down to the plaster palaces of Stamboul and the barren fronts of the Dardanelles, her object is still the same. Her interest lies in the East.

This is old sound logic. Possession of the Dardanelles means not only the balance of power in Europe, but the control of Asia as well. Men who studied the field long ago reached the same conclusion. Roman and Greek emperors sent enormous armies into Asia Minor. They paid no heed to the rich, unreaped fields of Europe. And they were deep thinkers. Even then Turkey was the key to European aspirations. To-day this truth is italicized. Not only does Constantinople rule the intercourse between the Black Sea and the outward world through the Mediterranean, besides that of Asia Minor as far as the Euphrates, but it means the sovereignty of the greater East—for the nation that holds in fee the straits of the Dardanelles shall be lord of the Suez Canal and the highway to India. The possessors of Constantinople command the Black Sea, and from a military viewpoint turn the flank of Austria-Hungary, Germany and the rest of the petty countries along the Danube.

It is the interest of England, Germany, Austria and Italy to keep inviolate these little straits which divide Europe and Asia. It is the interest of Russia, as it is her racial ambition, to cut a way through them. France again finds her interests in the East.

England is the power which stands chiefly in the way of the realization of the Franco-Russian ambitions, and England will bear the brunt of the struggle. This is fairly well understood in Great Britain, and within the last few weeks there has been forced from the unwilling Liberal government a heavy increase of the naval force.

As I have said, the first bellicose fire-cracker may explode anywhere, but the trend of the war, I believe, will be over the Balkans.

Asia, then, is the fee of the coming war, and there is no fantasy in the prediction that the struggle will follow the line of least resistance, which is through the domains of the "sick man" of Europe, Turkey.

The sending of a Russian fleet to the Mediterranean has invariably been the prelude to a war against Turkey. There is no reason for believing the omen will fail. Well-informed writers predict that the presence of Russian fleets in the Mediterranean and the Black Sea today means that the forcing of the Dardanelles is an affair to be looked for in the near future. This much is certain. During the last year or two the fleet in the Euxine has been put in war trim. Ships are being built with war haste at Nicolaieff, Sebastopol and all the ports on the Black Sea.

One thing needed—a naval station on the French Mediterranean coast—France is willing to lend her ally. The importance of this acquisition to Russia speaks for itself. The advantage to France would be derived from the support of Russian armies in any international complications which should array against her the powers of the Triple Alliance. And, again, in event of a war between France and England, the presence of a Russian fleet in Mediterranean waters would be of capital importance to the republic.

In every way this move has strengthened the force of the Dual Alliance. This seems to be well understood in Germany. Berlin is waiting without any undue excitement for the unsurmisable event which is to bring on war. There remains in official circles something of Prince Bismarck's indifference to the Eastern question. He declared he would not sacrifice one Pomeranian grenadier to save Constantinople. Germany showed no concern over the Russo-Franc fetes.

It is noteworthy, too, that the same view prevailed in Italy. And since that time nothing has occurred—not even the "Italian riots" in France—to indicate the imminence of anything like a crisis in the international relations of France and Russia with Germany and Italy. It is evident that Caprivi and Crispi give the same interpretation to the signs of the times.

England alone has shown perturbation. The sending of an English fleet to Spezzia was Lord Rosebery's answer to the presence of a Russian fleet in the Mediterranean. The tranquility in Berlin and Rome and the undisguised anxiety in London and Vienna are indices of the direction and purport of the coming war.

There is one incident, slight in itself, which adds strong confirmation to the view I have taken of what is inadequately called the "European situation." This is the participation of Servia in the theatrical welcome France gave to the Russian sailors. It means that the breach between Austria and Servia is completed and that this fretful kingdom has become a military outpost of Russia, established between Bulgaria and Vienna.

The alliance of France and Russia is anti-English rather than anti-German. It is in their common hostility to England that France and Russian interests find the best field for combined operations. There are already instances of this, on the one side, in the Pamirs and the opening of the Dardanelles, on the other in the defeat of the British mission to Morocco, the ousting of British enterprise from Syria, the Rhine and the Alps to the Balkans decrease of British influence in Egypt, the blow to British prestige in Siam, and the development of French preponderance in the Mediterranean. In Egypt alone has England been able to make any effective resistance to French progress. In fact she may well let Austria out of the Triple Alliance, finding it unwise to attempt to buttress up this rotten obstacle against Russia's way to the south.

Italy alone has more to gain than to lose by an immediate resort to war. To be sure, an unsuccessful war might bring down the house of Savoy or lead to the parcellation of the peninsula, but in the opposite event, which at Rome is deemed more probable, the dynasty would be rehabilitated in popular esteem, and, in the end, the fiscal burdens would be lightened. Hatred of France and popular discontent are growing rapidly, and there is some probability that Italy, in her desperate and reckless condition, may declare war at any moment. This would, as I have tried to show, merely precipitate the larger war which makes for France and Russia in the east.

It is worthy of note that the impression in Rome is that the Vatican will really welcome a crisis in Italian affairs, and its influence is said to be for a war in which it has little to lose and great possibilities to gain in the reconstruction of the government by any agency.

This, then, is the state of affairs. And while Russia is steaming her warships through the straits and the French eagle is cock-a-hoop. I can read in the coming war nothing but a menace to England and Austria: for Russia, the command of the Dardanelles and a highway to India; for France, supremacy in Siam and Eygpt.

These straits are so narrow that with a rifle, you know, you can bring down, nine times out of ten, a blue crane flapping up from the reeds on the opposite bank. But give the white Czar command of them and English supremacy in the east is at an end. Keeping this fact in mind, it is not unreasonable to predict that the next war will be fought over that part of the world.—Vance Thompson.

Situated on Lake Winnebago, on the Wisconsin Central Lines, is a delightful place to spend a summer vacation. There is good boating and fishing and the hotels furnish good accommodations at very reasonable rates. 'Tis here that the famous "Roberts Resort" is located, overlooking the lake and containing all conveniences necessary to make an "outing" healthful and enjoyable.

Located along this popular route are numerous other summer resorts, and those contemplating a summer outing will do well to drop a line to Jas. C. Pond, Gen'l. Passr. Agt., Milwaukee, Wis., and receive free copy of guide book, giving information as to rates, hotel accommodations, etc.

Bro. Underwood:

So many have written for The Restitution during the past few weeks, and as the invitation to others is yet extended, I feel disposed to write a short address to the household.

We certainly ought to be thankful that in this time of perils and national troubles, so many of us are permitted to live and have the ability to write words of encouragement to each other; and especially so as the times indicate so clearly that the coming of the Lord is so near at hand.

The worldly wise men are beginning to realize that some great events are in the near future. What that event is they do not know. The nations are making the necessary preparation as they think to hold their positions and continue when the great conflict comes.

All seem to realize that it is beyond the intelligence and power of man to bring quiet and peace to the world again without resort to the sword. The great financial problem of the world, is shaking the nations at present, bringing as its legitimate fruit distress everywhere. The wage-earners and producers are first to feel the pressure, but the time for the rich men to "howl and weep" will just as surely come upon that class as upon the poor and dependents who have been toiling.

What hope is there from a human standpoint of adjusting the differences and restoring confidence among the children of men so as to establish harmony and the enacting of just laws of government?

There can be but one well grounded hope for the believer and that is the promise and oath of Almighty God, that he will send His Son to build up the throne of David to all generations; establish righteousness and peace, causing the nations to "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." What a blessed promise. May we all live in this time of trouble realizing that rulers now in power over us will soon be displaced by the coming of Christ, who, with the immortalized saints will become the rulers of the world for a thousand years.

Now brethren, if we believe this, what part can we take with the present rulers?

Have we the right to rush into the political arena and have our minds overcharged with these things, knowing that, in their closing up there will "be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation, even to that same time."

Of course we want to live in the world, but we need not be numbered as a part of it. Christ said, "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world will hate you."

We are truly living in a grand and awful time. We can see the things of the earth change on every hand. And while we can witness these things we should remember that the allurements to draw us away from our position of watching are on every hand ready to capture us.

Is it not high time that the watchman should be engaged in giving meat in due season, rather than spending their precious time on abstract questions, which do not seem to be of an edifying character? Our paper should be kept so clean that when we pass it to a neighbor to read we are not afraid he will say: "Your people are debating on matters of faith, therefore I will wait until they settle the question."

When reading the letters of brethren and sisters with whom I have so often met to worship, and learn that they are still alive to the cause it does me good; but there is a degree of sadness which comes unbidden, and that is, that we are so far separated that we will probably never again in this world talk face to face. Brethren and sisters remember us in our humble home in the northwest corner of the United States. To go back twenty five years in memory in my history as to whose faces were seen in the congregations at Plymouth, Argos, Antioch, and before that at Pisgah and other places. To visit those places now how many seats where loved ones were seen would now be occupied by others. Most of those who were regular attendants have died and will be seen no more until the resurrection. My wife and I are enjoying very good health. I was 73 last August and she is 66. We are thankful that our lives have been preserved.

There is a little congregation of us here. We are rejoicing that the signs indicate the nearness of the kingdom. Would be glad to remain to the coming of the Lord and thus escape death, but if the enemy overtakes us it will be but for a short time.

When warmer weather comes I may go farther from home and hold some meetings. In the cold weather it is not prudent for me to do so. I am the only one preaching the things which we believe in a radius of more than a hundred miles in every direction.

Last spring I made a short visit with brethren G. W. & J. W. Dickinson and their families at and near Tekoa, Wash. I preached some four or five discourses to good audiences, but on account of sickness had to go home.

I think Bro. Skeels' suggestion, that we have quarterly social letters, a good one; but I suggest an amendment which is: That we have some letters on hand to publish each week. I have been reading the letters of others and have neglected to furnish my share. I will try to do better in the future.

Our town of Waterville, Wash., has a surplus of church houses, but the churches are not very liberal in the matter of letting others occupy them. This is true in other places.

As ever, in hope,

Richard Corbaley.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have been thinking for some time of writing for The Restitution, and to throw in my mite to swell the number of those who are contending for the faith. My faith in the promises of God are as strong as ever, although I am not doing anything in the way of preaching this winter, except a funeral discourse of one of our citizens, which I thought was becoming considerably impressed with the truth, but did not obey.

I preached in the school-house last summer and fall but when school commenced and then, oh my, the school house was not for that, that is for preaching a soon coming King to establish his kingdom on earth, and reign forever and ever. Oh how I long to see the King in His Beauty.

I see by The Restitution in a letter from Sister Foster, that Bro. Foster is blind. Well do I remember when I last visited him. May God bless him in his sad affliction. I am truly glad that there are two in Franklin County that are still clinging to the faith. Remember dear brother, that God has said by the Prophet, "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off. And the inhabitant shall not say I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity." Isaiah xxxiii. 17, 24.

"Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isaiah xxxv. 5, 6, 10.

I am so glad to know that things will not always be as they are now, sickness, sorrow, pain and death are to be done away when Jesus comes, for he said, I am he that liveth and was dead and behold I am alive forever more. Amen. And have the keys of hell and of death. Rev. i. 18. Jesus said, "because I live ye shall live also." He will unlock the tombs and wake up the sleeping saints, and what a happy meeting that will be. May we all be ready to meet the Lord when the summons comes. Will I be ready, or am I doing just as I should is a question we should think about as we move along.

I send $1.50 for The Restitution for 1894. We cannot do without the paper, it tells us so many things. It told us in the "Love Feast" that a goodly number belong to the little flock to which the kingdom is to be given. If there are any of the faith in this county except myself and wife I do not know it. If there is I wish they would write me. My address is, Reeses' Mill, Ind.

Your brother in Christ, waiting for the kingdom.

Editor Restitution:

I know I am too late for the "Love Feast," but I know you will pardon me as I have been sick nearly three months, two of which I was confined to my bed. I was very near to death's door, and my friends thought for a short time that my departure was at hand. When consciousness was restored my first thought was, the dead know not anything, nor any that go down in silence, but the Lord made all my bed in my sickness, and spared my life a little longer, and I am permitted to write one more letter to the dear brothers and sisters of like precious faith and hope of the gospel, even the Gospel of our salvation, the Gospel of the kingdom which cannot be moved. It is that kingdom before which all other kingdoms and empires will sink into oblivion never to rise any more, for the stone that was cut out without hands will become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. This is a sure nail driven by the Great Revealer of secrets to man. No infidel hammer was ever made or ever will be that can pull it out. It will endure as long as the sun. Surely we have strong consolation to lay hold of the hope set before us. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast. Seeing that we have such a hope set before us, let us press forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus. Let us take to ourselves the whole armor of God that we may be enabled to overcome all the fiery darts of the evil one, and be prepared to stand before the Son of Man at his appearing and kingdom, clothed in that righteousness which is of God in Christ Jesus.

May the Lord help us to so live, that when he shall come the second time without sin unto salvation he may find us all vessels of honor, and fit for the Master's use.

I cannot express to you on paper the deep gratitude I feel for The Restitution, and for the dear "Love Feast" of letters.

I rejoiced over some, and wept over others, and have sent them on their mission to other fields to rejoice other hearts than mine, for your humble brother has been the means of persuading two more to believe the gospel of the kingdom. Brother and Sister Adams formerly belonged to the Christian Church but are now firm believers in the gospel of that kingdom which will be under the whole heavens and not above the heavens.

Yours for truth,

O. M. Mitchell.

Dear ones in Christ:

Perhaps some in our own state and others as well, would like to know what we are doing this winter. The Elder suffers all the time with muscular rheumatism, and since having the grippe it is worse than ever, still he has been able to go away some and preach. We were both at McBride, Montcalm Co., Michigan, before the holidays. Brother and Sister Boice have lived there several years, the only ones of the Abrahamic faith there, so they have worked in the Methodist church considerably. At present Bro. Boice is chorister and Sunday School superintendent, and Sister Boice organist. They believe it best to do what they can in this way, hoping to help the young people morally at least and leave some seeds of truth with all. Through them we got the use of the Methodist church for two weeks, we only wished we might have been able to continue the meetings a month longer, but we had no means to rent a hall, and we could not use the church any longer, so we had to come home and start anew. Several became much interested, one Methodist brother acknowledging he was cured of the belief of the soul's immortality, and a Baptist lady declaring she was an Adventist, others were interested and if we had only been helped out with money to hire a hall we feel sure some would have been brought into Christ. Our next work was near Vicksburg, at Prairie grove, worked there ten days baptizing three, and others are ready to obey as circumstances are favorable. The elder spoke one evening in Vicksburg, awakening a great interest, it being so new and grand to them. Many are anxious to have us return and hold a series of meetings, but O, the same difficulty all the time, no money to rent a hall. Only three believers there and they willing to do all they can, but unable to bear all the expense, and it is useless to go for less than three or four weeks. Our hearts sink within us and tears fill our eyes when we see continually lost opportunities for no other reason than lack of money. Crippled at every step, we have paid our own expenses about as long as we can, for our bank seems to have closed with many another one. Never more timely or true words ever uttered than Bro. Baker wrote in Restitution of Jan. 24th. Brethren in Michigan if you have not read it, please for the love of God's dear cause, read it over and over again, and then consider how your evangelists can do the work you expect them to and that they would be glad to do without some backing. We have been almost utterly discouraged this winter trying to do something with odds all against us. Brethren, have you no interest in this matter? We are told to be workers together. O for some of the money that has been wasted this last year. How many more would be rejoicing in a saving knowledge of the truth that are yet without God and without hope in the world. It is almost a temptation for us sometimes when offered good salaries and all expenses paid if we will work for some temperance organizations or wealthy societies. But we realize the Master will soon call for our account, and if we have put his money out to usury, eternal life will be lost. O no it will not pay to go into the pottage business at this late hour, selling our birthright for that which satisfieth only for a season. [illegible] young men and women to look at, who would gladly be at work if there was even a bare living in it. God pity some one in the judgment who is now withholding their Lord's money. God help us all to realize what our duty is and then gladly do it. Yours working for the Master.

Dear brothers and sisters:

I have been reading the letters in The Restitution from the dear ones of like faith. Oh, it makes my heart glad to read those cheering letters. From some reason we did not get our Restitution in time for me to join in that great love feast with the rest of like precious faith. We went to our Sunday school today where we have our Bible classes and services every first day. When we arrived at the church nearly the first news we heard was the death of Bro. Young of Seattle. How sad it made us all feel. It reminds us of that old enemy waiting to snatch us away. When preaching was over our hearts were made glad to know that Bro. Halstead was right there with us, and none of us knew him personally, never having met with him before, although it seemed like we were acquainted with him from reading his letters in The Restitution. My dear brethren, at present my mind is carried back more than twenty years ago when dear old Bro. Hatch was at Bro. Levi's and Bro. Harvey's in and near Mansfield, Ill., holding a series of meetings my husband and I were living in Champaign Co., Ill. at that time. We heard of the meeting and attended it. I was convinced that we must be baptized into Christ's death to gain the first resurrection out from the dead ones. Well do I remember after the meetings closed, as we were on our way home near Mahomet, Ill., Bro. Hatch led me down in the Sangamon River and buried me in baptism. I came up out of the water and went on my way rejoicing. I remember well our dear Bro. Levi Skeels' family was there with us.

It does me good to read those letters from his dear children in The Restitution. Dear Restitution this may not be worthy of the space it would occupy. Yours in patient waiting.

Maggie Skeels.

Dearly beloved in the Lord:

For quite a while we have been under a heavy cloud of affliction, for my beloved wife has been severely afflicted with cancer of the breast, and our physician here pronounced it incurable; but a friend advised her to go to Danville, Ill. and see Dr. V. T. Kingsley, which she did and I am glad to be able to say, the prospect is very flattering for a permanent cure, for the cancer is all out, and the wound is healing nicely, and we feel very thankful to our heavenly Father for his divine blessing, and to the doctor for his kindness and wonderful skill as a physician. This is for the information of our many readers. I will say that I am still trusting in the Lord, and that my faith was never stronger, nor my hope brighter than it is now, for surely the prophecies are being fulfilled very rapidly, and we may soon expect our blessed Savior to return and gather his faithful ones home, and end this long night of suffering and death and bring in that glad morning of rest and peace. What a blessed privilege we have of making all our requests known unto the Lord, with the assurance that he careth for us and that his grace is sufficient for us, and that he will never leave nor forsake us, that the angel of the Lord encampeth round about the righteous and delivereth them, surely the Lord is good to us all. Let us all be faithful a little while longer that we may receive a crown of glory that will never fade away. Your brother in the faith.

R. C. Railsback.

Indiana.

Dear Restitution:

As I read the many words of comfort, advice and warning from your columns I think, how can we be so careless, so indifferent to the cause we love, so careless to our own salvation, when we see the time of his near approach. Let us [illegible] into temptation, that we may be able to stand before him without spot or blemish while we have time and opportunity, make our peace and calling and election sure through him who gave himself for us that all might be saved that obey him. He has a heart full of mercy and pity, without partiality, and willing that all might come unto him and be saved.

We learn that he pours out his wrath upon the ungodly nations. We trust in the faith once delivered to the saints, which is, one Lord, one faith and one baptism. Jesus says, "these words of mine they are Spirit and they are truth." I have searched his blessed word a great deal. Oh that I might learn more of his truth, and that a book of remembrance may be kept for us. Brothers and sisters let us examine ourselves. How will the Christian graces be applied to us? Peter tells us to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity, for if ye do these things ye shall never fail but an eternal life shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. If those things be in you and abound they make you that ye be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord, but he that lacketh these things is blind and cannot see.

Dear Restitution:

The Restitution is the only preaching I have heard for a number of years, and it is a source of strength to me. I am in a city of over a hundred thousand inhabitants, and not a soul to converse with, of the kingdom and all-saving name of the Lord Jesus; thus you can see the great need of the weekly visits of The Restitution with the Bible to encourage me on through this sinful age. Dear friends of the household of faith, we must keep our eyes on the prize that lies at the end of the race, and by the help of God overcome all the trials and temptations that daily surround us; then when we look and read of the prophets, how they were tried and shamefully used, and also the Master and all the apostles, how they suffered and were slain, then I look at myself it is not to be compared with what they suffered, so I thank God and take courage.

C. P. Alaire.

New York.

Dear Restitution:

Inclosed find $1.00 as I see my subscription expired last month.

We have been very much entertained with the "Love Feast" and will contribute our mite.

We are earnestly holding to what we believe to be the true faith. We have one Bible reading each week, prayer and praise meetings Wednesday evenings. Bro. Whitsett is now with us and will preach for us some. We hope soon to have a place where our preaching will be regular, as people out of Christ are interested in the gospel message. Every phase of nature and society plainly show to the student of prophecy that the gospel age is near an end. The prophetic word is now being fulfilled, and now the Master will stand at the door. Seeing that men's hearts are failing for fear, let us who have the truth, watch, for the time is at hand.

I am as ever yours,

C. W. Pryor.

Obituary.

Sarah Ellen Paris died at her home in Bridgewater, South Dakota, Feb. 26, 1894. Her maiden name was Sarah Ellen Nicholson, and she was born in Marshall County, Ind., Sept. 5, 1861. When but four years old she was taken to the home of Brother and Sister Robert and Jane Railsback, of Argos, with whom she lived as a daughter till her marriage with Bro. Zimri Paris, son of Bro. Berry Paris of Rensselear, Ind., Oct. 2, 1888, when she went to her new home in Dakota. She leaves thus early in her young womanhood a husband and two children, one three years old, the other an infant of a day, who with her large circle of relatives and friends, mourn for her. However, the mourning is not as if no ray of light were able to penetrate the darkness, for she died in hope of soon hearing the angel's voice calling her to awake and have immortality's crown placed upon her head. Then if faithful to duty the dear ones she left will see her again and be with her evermore.

Ella Nicholson, as she was known, was immersed by Elder Hugh Barnhill, Feb. 18, 1877, and has since lived a consistent Christian life, brightening the lives of others, doing good as she found opportunity. Funeral and burial at Argos, Feb. [illegible], where Bro. J. F. Wagoner spoke to the large company who assembled to show the last tribute of love and respect.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at her home in Webster, Rooks Co., Kan., on January 24, 1894, Lorinda F., wife of Elder H. R. Kendall. Sister Kendall, whose maiden name was Lorinda F. Thompson, was born in Portage Co., O., on Jan. 21, 1852. Converted under the preaching of Elder Kendall and baptized into Christ by him, in 1874, to whom she was married on June 28, 1876. They were blessed with two sons and one daughter, one of the former, little Jesse, having preceded his mother to the land of the enemy. She leaves to mourn her loss, a husband, one son, one daughter, a mother, three sisters and a host of friends. But we sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. Since she embraced Christ, her great desire has been to do all in her power to advance the truth and induce sinners to come to Christ. Even while on the late bed of affliction she was earnestly contending for the faith and persuading those out of Christ, who watched over and nursed her so tenderly, to come to Christ, believe the gospel and obey. In all her prayers and hymns of praise she ever looked forward with an eye of faith, and with great anticipation to the great and joyful day when the King shall come and all the saints with him, to take his father David's throne. Sister Kendall possessed those noble traits of character and Christian fellowship, which endear a mother to her husband and children. No one knew her but to love her. Her afflictions continued about six weeks; the last three of which she suffered great agony. She bore her affliction without murmur or complaint, gradually growing weaker and weaker until the last, and died in the triumph of a living faith. Brother Thorp was asked to officiate, and took as a foundation for his remarks, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" We deem it sufficient to say that he showed from a Scriptural standpoint what man is now, and what he will be in the resurrection.

J. Bryant.

Farewell my dearest one, farewell
Till Jesus comes to bid thee rise;
Then we will meet his love to tell,
And reign with him in Paradise.

There we will chant those lovely strains,
That angel tongues can never sing;
And walk with him on [illegible] plains,
Giving all glory to our King.

H. R. Kendall.

Died, December 3rd, 1893, at his residence in Kentland, Indiana, Mr. Noah Castle, age 80 years, 2 months and 20 days.

Mr. Castle was born in Fredrick County, Maryland, September 13th, 1813. When about five years old he removed with his parents to Warren county, Ohio. He was married at Westchester, Ohio, in 1835 to Jane Colfield, who yet survives him. The happy married couple moved to Cass county, Indiana and lived there until their removal to Kentland some years ago. Fourteen children were born to them, six of whom are still living.

Mr. Castle first came to Kentland in 1855, and has resided here most of the time since. In his death the town loses an esteemed citizen, who was a model of industry, independence, and morality. He grew old gracefully. He was always amiable and sociable, but never rude nor boisterous. His appearance and bearing commanded respect, and his kindly nature won the admiration and love of all who knew him.

He has been a member of the Church of God for many years, fully trusting in Jesus, and in hopes of a quick resurrection.

Sow seed. Send The Restitution to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from [illegible] part to accept them.

The Promise Fulfilled.

Jesus will come to prove that redemption is no failure; that his own word is no fable. Some cry, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were." Others say, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry." But the believer says, "Come Lord Jesus, come speedily." And when he comes he will show that not one jot has fallen from the least promise, but all has been exactly fulfilled; that Christianity, in the numbers of its converts, in the splendor of its victories, in the results and issues of its conflicts, is no failure, but has the pre-eminence in all things. That ancient servant Moses, that stern prophet Elijah, and all that believed in the Lamb, shall meet on a mountain the glory of which shall not fade, and in a day which shall have no night, and a blessedness which shall have no end. It will be seen that redemption was no mistake, that Christianity was no cunningly devised fable; that all that it predicts, but which thousands scoff at; that all that it claims, which thousands repudiate, it truthfully predicted and justly claimed; all things made new; God in the midst of his people, the bride presented to the bridegroom, creation restored, and all things glorified.—Messiah's Herald.

He who has acquired the art of making the best of everything, will make everything best, and will hence, relatively to his thoughts and feelings, have the best all the time. He will of course be a contented and happy man no matter what his environments are.

[illegible]otional Thoughts.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the Sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew not Christ." Ought the world then to know us? Ought we to take in the pleasures of the world when Christ condemns it? If we are the Sons of God we will eschew all appearance of evil, for whosoever is born of God does not commit sin. If he sins he is not born of God, nor is he a child of God: in this is the children of God manifest and the devil, he that committeth sin is of the devil, for the devil sinned from the beginning. "But know ye not that so many of us as were babtized into Christ were baptized into his death? And again, Gal. iii. 27. "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and if we are buried with Christ in baptism, we are raised up to walk in newness of life. Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal bodies, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof, neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin. Eph. iv. 22. That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in spirit of your mind, and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children; but fornication and all uncleanliness or covetousness let it not be once named among you as becometh saints; neither filthiness nor foolish talking, nor jesting which is not convenient but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God; have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness and what commun- [illegible] Wherefore come ye out from among them, and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Paul says in 1st Cor., "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of the devil, ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of the devils. Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom? Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor thieves, nor extortioners, and such were some of you, but ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the Spirit of God."

2 Thess. iii. 6, 7. "Now we command you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the traditions he received from us, and if any man obey not our word by this epistle note that man and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed."

Rom. xii. 12, 13, 14. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light, let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in clamoring and wontonness, not in strife and envying, but put on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provisions for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof. "For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit which is the Word of God; praying with all prayer and supplication. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers, but the face of the Lord is against those that do evil. Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the devil walketh around seeking whom he may devour, whom resist, steadfast in the faith. Know that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

The Prophet Ezekiel xxxiii. 13, reads, "When I shall say to the righteous that he shall surely live if he trust to his own righteousness and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered but for his iniquity he hath committed he shall die first."

See how necessary it is for us to obey these commands of God that we may not die.

Peter says, "For if after they have escaped the pollution of the world through the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness than after they have known it to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them." God spared not the angels that sinned but cast them down to hell and delivered them in chains of darkness to be reserved unto the day of judgment, and spared not the old world but destroyed it with a flood, and turned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, making them an ensample to those who after would live ungodly.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished.

"Pure and undefiled religion is to visit the widow and fatherless in their affliction and keep themselves unspotted from the world." Christ will soon come, the time is almost here we know by watching the signs of the times. The whole world is in commotion, a sea of unrest. Christ will soon come to take his bride away from this sin cursed earth and he wants her pure and unspotted from sin. He will take none that are stained with sin. Be careful how we live in this life, or we may be debarred from a home in that world to come. Eternal life may be taken from us. How [illegible] and ready? To how many will the welcome words resound, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?" May we all be prepared to hear that voice is the earnest prayer of your Sister in Christ.

EMMA L. BROOKS.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

Kansas Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised for the purpose of sending an evangelist to isolated brethren that are desirous of having the Gospel proclaimed in their vicinity and are not able financially to bear the expense.

Those wishing to have an evangelist sent to them, can correspond with the Secretary, L. A. Chaplin, Ashton, Kansas. Those wishing to contribute to this fund may send the amount to the Treasurer, W. H. Bernard, Oxford, Kansas.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Announcement.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska, will be held at the Fairview School-house in Furnas Co., three miles southeast of Holbrook, commencing Friday evening March 16, 1894, and hold over the following Sunday. Business meeting promptly at 2 o'clock on Saturday.

Important business will come up at this time for consideration, and we sincerely urge all brethren to [illegible]

The Church of God Tract Association will also meet at this time.

We take pleasure in announcing to the brethren that a unity of the work in the state has been practically completey, but in order to finish up said business a conference will be held at Bassett, Rock Co., March 23rd to 25th, 1894.

The State Evangelist will meet the brethren at Bassett and it is expected that an interesting and profitable meeting will result.

Come brethren, show your interest in the work by attending these meetings.

If eternal life is worth anything it is worth an effort to secure it. Therefore, dear brothrers and sisters, let us be firm and steadfast, ready for the coming of the Master, and for every good word and work.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," as a means to this and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre requisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Contentment.

The year is waning: wherefore mourn
His journey's path, or many gained?
We should not call his golden corn,
Save for the mellowing touch of Time.

If Spring's fresh bloom were ever here,
Glad hope would ne'er fulfillment know;
And fruits sure must disappear
That autumn's gift may richer grow.

So is it with the lives of man:
First Youth puts forth her tender flowers,
Then Summer comes apace, and then
The harvest of those vanished hours.

Sigh not because thy lot is low,
The loneliest fate some fruit must bear;
Sweet berries on the bramble grow,
And rugged boughs yield dainty fare.

Let but the generous Autumn be
True picture of thy riper age,
And time shall leave no fee to thee,
Nor life an empty heritage.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 23.

1. And all the multitude of them arising led him to Pilatos.

2. And they began to accuse him saying. We have found this one perverting the nation and preventing the giving of tribute to Kaisar, and saying that he himself was an Anointed (Christ) King.

3. And Pilatos asked him saying, Thou, art thou the king of the Joudaians? And he answered and saith unto him, Thou sayest,

4. And Pilatos said unto the chief-priests and the mixed multitudes, I find nothing to accuse in this man.

5. And they continue strongly in opposition saying, He is stirring up the royal people, teaching throughout all Joudaia as far as here, beginning even from Galilaia.

6. And when Pilatos heard it he asked whether the man was a Galilaian.

7. And becoming aware that he was of the official-power of Herodes, he sent him up to Herodes, he being also in Hierosoluma in those days.

8. And when Herodes saw Jesous he was overjoyed: For he had been intending to see him for some time, because he had heard about him, and was hoping to see some sign occur subject to him,

9. And he questioned him with sufficient words; but he answered him nothing.

10. And the chief-priests and scribes stood continually accusing him.

11. And Herodes along with his soldiery, treated him with contempt and mockery and threw about him sumptuous apparel and sent him up to Pilatos.

12. Now Herodes and Pilatos had become friends to one another that day; for they had before this been at enmity to each other.

13. And Pilatos calling together the chief-priests and the rulers and the royal-people,

14. Said unto them, ye have brought unto me this man, as one who is perverting the royal-people; And lo, I in your presence have made a preliminary examination and found nothing in this man actionable of which ye are accusing him;

15. Moreover neither hath Herodes, for he hath sent him up to us, and lo, there hath been nothing done by him worthy of death.

16. I will chasten him therefore and let him go.

17. But he was obliged at every feast (Paska feast) to release one for them.

18. And they shouted all the multitude together, saying, Take away this one, and release unto us Barabbas,

19. A certain one who was in the prison for a certain sedition and murder that had occurred in the city.

20. And Pilatos again addressed them willing to release Jesous.

21. And they continued responding saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22. And he a third time said unto them. Why? For what evil hath he done? I have no actionable cause of death in him. I will chasten him therefore and release him.

23. But they urged upon him with great voices, asking to have him crucified; and their voices and the voices of the chief-priests prevailed.

24. And Pilatos decided that their request should come to pass.

25. And he released the one whom they asked for, the one who had been cast into prison for sedition and murder, and delivered up Jesous to their will.

26. And as they were leading him away, they laid hold of a certain Simon a Kurenaian (Cyrenean) who was coming from a field and placed upon him the cross to carry behind Jesous.

27. And a vast multitude of the royal-people and women followed him who were beating their breasts and threwing for him, (the threwing by the women).

28. And Jesous turning unto them (the women) said, Daughters of Hierousalem, lament not for me, but lament for yourselves and for your offspring.

29. Because lo, days are coming in which they will say, Blessed happy are the barren and the wombs that have not begotten and the breasts that have not nourished.

30. Then will they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, cover us:

31. Because if they are doing these things with the green tree (in the use of) what will occur with the dry?

32. And two other evil-doers were being led also along with him to be lifted up (a euphremism for to be crucified).

33. And when they had come to the place called Kranion (a skull) then they crucified him and the evil-doers, the one on the right hand and the other on the left. And Jesous said, Father remit unto them, for they know not what they are doing.

34. And distributing his outer-garments they cast a lot.

35. And the royal-people stood gazing. And the rulers moreover were mocking, saying, He saved others, may he have saved himself if he is the Christ, the Elect of God.

36. And the soldiery were mocking at him, approaching and offering him vinegar,

37. And saying, If thou art the King of the Joudaians, save thyself.

38. And there was an inscription over him in Greek. Roman and Hebrew letters, namely, This is the King of the Joudaians.

39. And one of the evil-doers who had been hung was blaspheming him, saying, No, no, Thou art not the Christ, art thou? Save thyself and us.

40. And the other answering and rebuking him said, Dost thou not even fear God, since thou art in the same verdict?

41. And we too justly; for we are receiving things worthy of what we have done, while he hath done nothing out of the way.

42. And he said unto Jesous, Remember me whenever thou shalt have come in thy kingdom,

43. And he said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou wilt be with me in the Paradise.

44. And it was already about sixth hour, and darkness occurred over all the land the sun leaving off until ninth hour.

45. And the vail of the inner sanctuary was rent in the middle;

46. And Jesous crying out with a great voice said, Father, I commit my spirit to thy hands. And having said this he expired (or breathed out).

47. And the centurion seeing what had occurred, glorified God saying, Surely this man was a justified One.

48. And all the multitudes who had come together to this spectacle, beholding the things that had occurred, turned away smiting their breasts,

49. And all his acquaintances stood afar off, and the women who had followed him from Galilaia, seeing these things,

50. And lo, a man by the name of Joseph, who was a counsellor, a good and justified man.

51. (This man was not assenting to their counsel and act)—from Arimathaia a city of the Joudaians, and who was looking expectantly for the kingdom of God,

52. This man went unto Pilatos and asked for the body of Jesous,

53. And taking it down he wrapped it in fine linen, and placed it in a memorial tomb that had been hewn out of stone, where no one as yet had been laid.

54. And it was preparation-day and Sabbath was dawning.

55. And some women who had come along with him from out Galilaia beheld the memorial-tomb and where his body had been placed.

56. And returning they prepared aromas and myhr; and they kept quiet during the sabbath (lit. the sabbatic time) according to the commandment.

Has Rev. xi. been Fulfilled?

I would like to ask Bro. W. H. Wilson if any part of Rev. xi. has been fulfilled? This request is made for sake of the truth and the love of it. This is with much love to all.

LEONARD DAVIS.

My impression is that the above chapter has not been fulfilled, and I will now proceed to give you the reason why I think so.

"If we would correctly interpret the prophecies of this book, strict attention must be given to a divine rule governing its interpretation. If it is not respected, confusion must inevitably ensue. This rule you will find in Rev. xxii. 18, 19, and reads as follows:

"I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.'

Hence, we see that the very words in which the prophecies of this book are couched, is protected from the invasion of man, under the direst penalties that can possibly be inflicted upon any one. If men were permitted to change the words or phrases in this last prophetic message to man, its glorious revelation would be made of none effect. We are strictly bound, then, not to "take away from the words of the book." I, for one, would not dare to tamper with them, but must reverentially respect them as they appear in the original.

I will now proceed to interpret this chapter, being strictly guided by this divine rule.

Verses 1 and 2, relate to the "temple" and "the holy city." We read: "the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months." Then there must be a treading of the holy city under foot of the Gentiles, for "forty and two months," which is three years and a half. This measures the beginning and the ending of the "treading of the holy city under foot," referred to in this prophecy. By a careful study we find more than one treading down of the holy city mentioned in the Holy Scriptures, and they must be separated, and each given its proper place. The other one may be found in Luke xxi. 24: "They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." This sad invasion was consummated by Titus in the year 70, and is to continue "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The one mentioned in Rev. xi. lasts only "forty and two months". The above noted prophetic period will not fit the invasion made by Titus, no, not even if we "take (them) away from the words of the book of this prophecy," and substitute in its place the phrase: "1260 years." If the 1260 years commenced in the year 70, they would end in 1330, but the captivity still continues.

There is to be another invasion of Jerusalem by "all nations," in which "the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished: and half of the city shall go forth into captivity," etc., mentioned in Zech. xiv. 1-6, and this is in close proximity to the time mentioned in verse 5: "and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." The forty and two month period can aptly fit this invasion, and hence by correctly dividing the Word there is no necessity of violating the divine rule governing the book of Revelation by substituting 1260 years, for "Forty and two months." This forty and two month period is in entire accord with Dan xii. 6. 7:

"And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river. How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

The party who will accomplish this work is mentioned in Dan. vii. 25:

"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.

That times means years, see Dan. xi. 13, (margin—"the end of times, even years.")

See Dan. iv. 16, 25, the king was sent to dwell with beasts until "seven times shall pass over thee," that is seven years. Hence, "time is one year. "times," two years, "half" a time half a year, which is three years and a half, or "forty and two months."

Compare Dan. vii. 25. with Rev. xiii. 5, and you will find the same character described with almost the same language: "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months." Exactly the time mentioned in Dan. vii. 25.

The next topic mentioned in Rev. xi., is the prophecy of the "two witnesses," recorded in verse 3: Their prophecy is limited to "a thousand and two hundred and three score days," which is twelve hundred and sixty days, or "forty and two months." Their prophecy then is for exactly the same length of time that the Gentiles shall tread the holy city under foot during the invasion this prophecy alludes to, and I think it relates to the same period of time. Who will dare to "take away from the words of the book of this prophecy," the word "days," and substitute in its place the word years? I will not! I would not dare to do so! ! In fact I find a more harmonious interpretation of prophecy by using the dates just as they appear in this Holy Book. Revelation furnishes no warrant to use years for days. Because Ezekiel uses that measuring rod to some of his prophecies is no warrant to apply it to the book of Revelation which makes no mention of it, but expressly forbids the taking away or adding to the "words," of the prophecy of that Holy Book. As far as Daniel is concerned, "times" is interpreted in the book to mean "years." One time is a year, "seven times" is seven years. Three times and a dividing of a time means three and a half years. When a book furnishes a measuring rod use it for that book, and not try to force it on a book which makes not the least allusion to it.

The point we have arrived at in the exposition of this chapter is the "two witnesses," but space forbids considering it in this article, but will continue it in my next, after which I expect to consider Bro. Smith's request with regard to "The Bride the Lamb's wife."

W. H. WILSON.

Thoughts on Matt. xxv. 34.

Readers of THE RESTITUTION, for some time past my mind has been occupied with thoughts arising from the text, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," and being very much cheered and comforted with the prospect. I thought perhaps it would be well to offer a few thoughts in a crude state with the hope that abler pens may take up the subject and do it justice.

As to the announcement and to whom, the preceding verses leave no doubt, and succeeding verses give the characters to whom the kingdom is given and why it is given, and now, dear ones, let us be very sure to exemplify a Christian character, that the proposed kingdom may be ours.

Let us examine the record given of this kingdom; not a hasty glance but let us learn all we can of that "very good" state of things, especially of the garden "Eastward in Eden."

Surely it had a mild climate, Gen. ii. 25. situated in the vicinity of the Euphrates ii. 14 and afterward given to Abraham, the eastern boundary the Euphrates, and the western the river of Egypt, (Nile.) It became the home of the Patriarchs and Prophets. Israelitish history was enacted there and later the Savior was born there.

The surroundings were good.

Adam had dominion over all earth's treasures, animate and inanimate, and better still. he was very intimate with his Maker, the Immortal God. Please turn and read verses 8 to 14 to freshen your memory. O how pleasant. And only one tree, just one tree was he forbidden to touch or eat of, but a full permit, yes a command to eat of every other one.

Just how long this state of affairs continued we have no definite history and we are left to judge of the time from other duties imposed on him by his King or Ruler.

We find in Gen. ii. 19, 20, that he gave names to all his subjects over whom the Lord gave him dominion i. 26 so that they might afterward be described and known, then also he was required to dress, keep, or prune the premises. Surely he must have remained there some time and while there ate of the trees of the garden as commanded, and if in his daily labors he bruised or wounded himself he had the remedy at hand, for the tree of life had healing qualities as described by Ezek. xlvii. 12; Rev. xxii. 2, or, at least will have when the original state of things are restored, or in other words "the restitution of all things."

Adam was made in our image, after our likeness, i 26, but bearing God's image or likeness did not make him immortal, he died 930 years old. He died because he was mortal and could no longer have access to the Tree of Life from which he had been barred on account of his transgression.

He had been faithfully warned of this beforehand, and here we see the Father's love manifested in guarding the approach to the tree lest he continue to eat and not die. So far as we can learn from the accounts given by the different writers the tree was for food and medicine and to prolong life or evade death. In no case is it intimated that it could impart immortality. (The serpent intimated it to Eve in conversation about that other tree "ye shall be as gods.") Immortal defined is "having no principle of alteration or corruption. Exempt from death, perpetual, having unlimited existence." It applies to a certain condition of the body, not to life or the duration of life. We hope to know more about it when these vile bodies are changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body. In due time God instituted other means to impart immortality. He did not even intimate a state of immortality to be obtained by any one however obedient until it was brought to light through or by Christ, to be granted only to those who in this age only, believe in and obey him; to be put on at the time of his second coming and the resurrection, for the purpose of better befitting them to sit with him in his throne, the throne of his glory and share the glory with him. As to honor please see Psalm cxlix. 5 to 9.

I think Paul intimated that there is a difference in the terms "life and immortality," which was brought to light by Christ and gained by us by a patient continuance in well doing and put on at the second coming of Christ and at the resurrection. 1 Cor. xv.

This mortal (body) must put on immortality, or, in other words, changed or fashioned like his (Christ's) glorious body. Why should Paul use two terms life, and immortality if both apply to life? This line of thought may be well understood by many of our brethren, but it has revolved in my mind for some time past and could not dismiss it except I write it out.

But some may demure at drawing the line for immortality to the gospel age only, and not include Abraham and David, but I think Abraham will be fully satisfied with David's portion or reward, and you may remember David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy (God's) likeness."

It appears to me that the ruling power only are entitled to that condition of body the better to befit them for their work of judgment, 1 Cor. vi. 2; Psa. cxlix; for they, are to judge the world, the nations, yes, angels, which class of beings were in existence in Abraham's time.

Many other Scripture statements chime in and fill up this great subject of immortality through Christ but I throw out these few thoughts for meditation and comfort. Dear ones let it comfort you to know that the time of his glory is near. If he is heir to God's rule of the world we are joint heirs with him to the said prepared kingdom and rulership, and he will surely make all our duties or business in the coming age plain. We have some duties assigned us preparatory to our sitting with him in his throne or inheriting the kingdom. The Savior says, "I was an hungered and ye gave me meat, etc." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," as much as to say, "you have practised righteousness, dispensed blessings where it lay in your power, made good use of the means you were entrusted with, proved yourself capable and now sit with me in my throne."

Have we made every sacrifice or faithfully performed all known requirements so we may hear him say, "Come ye blessed?" If so, cheer up, let the hope of immortality stimulate us. Tell of his love, sing his praise, yes, sing songs of anticipation and consecration and soon we shall realize our hope, we shall see our coming King. Think of it, dear ones, it will be a reality. Some time of day or night he will come, and what will he find us doing? Will we be alone or who will be with us? How will we feel? What will be our first thoughts or our first words to him? We cannot fix up any words of greeting. Doubtless whatever we will say will come from the heart. The three disciples who saw him on the Mount of Transfiguration were afraid and wist not what to say, but our only hope lies in being made immortal instantly at his coming.

OBITUARY.

It becomes our sad duty to here give a short notice of the death of Brother George Alleman, and to testify feebly to his worth as a man and brother. Truly a good man has fallen. Brother Alleman was honest in his dealings with men, giving his support to all workers in the cause of Christ, firm in his convictions of Gospel truth, and unwavering in his confidence in God. He believed the signs indicate the nearness of the end of this dispensation, and the fulness of joy in the new age. Ever faithful, kind and true. We can write words, but cannot make them express our feelings. Good by, George. We shall miss you. May we each live so as to meet on the other side.

Brother Conner has written out a notice and handed in which we give here as follows:

"George Alleman was born in Ohio, Jan. 12, 1830, and died in Starke Co., Ind. March 6, 1894, aged 63 years, 1 mo. and 22 days. He was married Sept. 22, 1850, to Rebecca McDonald, who survives to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband, esteemed by all who knew him. He also leaves four brothers and four sisters besides other relatives.

For many years Brother Alleman has been a firm believer of the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and a faithful servant of the Master. At the time of his death he was one of the Directors of "The Christian Publishing Association," in which capacity he has served since Nov. 10, 1888.

In business transactions he was manly and honest, and in religion he was earnest and conscientious, which caused him to be loved and esteemed by all who knew him. Many times have we been encouraged by his earnest words of cheer and warm exhortations. He now sleeps in Jesus.

While preparing to move to his farm near Plymouth, Ind., he was taken with a hard chill. Congestion of the lungs and heart failure quickly followed, the sad result of which was death.

He was brought to Plymouth, where memorial services were held at the residence of Bro. A. R. Underwood, conducted by the writer, after which he was tenderly placed in the silent tomb, to rest from the toils and cares of a well spent life, until the return of our Master—the world's Redeemer."

BRO. J. L. Wince will be with the Church at Plymouth over next Sunday.

[illegible] who can favor us with [illegible] of Wm. Daggett, formerly [illegible] ...thers, Cal., will receive our thanks.

ON Sunday evening March 11, Bro. J. F. Wagoner closed a series of meetings that was commenced March 3, at the Church five miles north of this city. Three were immersed as the result of the effort.

IN the obituary notice published last week of Sister Ellen Paris, where it speaks of her as well known by the name Ellen Nicholson, it would have been better to have said Ellen Railsback, as she was better known by that name.

BRO. J. J. Cady writes that Elder Adams baptized five into the Christ at Traer, Kan., on Feb. 20, and that every thing is encouraging there. We can all thank God and take courage, when we know that though some old points are at a standstill almost, in other places the car of truth is moving on and on.

"Always say a kind word if you can, if only that it may come in perhaps with singular opportuneness, entering some man's darkened room like a beautiful fire-fly whose circumvolutions he cannot but watch, forgetting his many troubles."

The Reviewer Reviewed.
No. 8.

Reviewer is aware that we believe that all the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwells in Christ now, and he has neither answered our argument on that passage, nor proved that the Godhead dwelt in him before he was born.

Campbell's "Christian system" is quoted as evidence, but when it is known that that system had a kingdom set up at Pentecost but ran down and out so completely that it had to be set up again in the 19th century by Alexander Campbell, (although his claim was contested by Walter Scott) it is not necessary to notice it.

We are next told that the Word that existed in the beginning was more than a mere promise or purpose, "the Word was God." Very true; GOD; not one of several gods. There is but one living and true God.

Col. i. 16 in A. V. is quoted. But no notice has been taken to our honest objections to it.

Rev. xxii. 16, where Jesus the Anointed says he is the root and offspring of David is quoted, and it is added that Christ in his divine nature is the root of David, for—now for the reason—"for without him was not anything made. etc." No proof here of divine nature before he was born. We see David both a father and a son. We see Christ both a son and a father. David was promised an offspring and was the prospective father of him; but the offspring and the father are to change places and relations. The Son is to be the Father and is now prospective Father: and David, not yet born, is to be the Son: he saw this would be so, for he said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Certainly the root exists before the offspring. The divine root already lives, the branch does not yet live.

If it is a fact that no man hath seen God at any time, then the apostles did not see God's person, and our claim that they had seen a manifestation of his love and wisdom and goodness and mercy is true, and John xiv. 9; and xii. 45 are no proof of pre-existence.

"I am the First and the Last and the Living One: and I was DEAD," proves it was not the supposed pre-existent person who did not die, who was speaking, but the Beginning of the new creation he refers to himself when he says "Behold I make all things new."

Next, "The bestowal of the divine title upon the Son is reconciled by the saying of Jesus, I and the Father are one." How strange! —a divine title bestowed upon one who it is claimed was equal with him who bestowed it.

Next, "The Word was God, and the Word became flesh" must be received and believed with equal candor and fairness by every one that truly desires to abide in the doctrine of Christ." Very true; but Reviewer does not believe the pre-existent Word became flesh, or else it could have died.

Isa. ix. 6 is referred to because the child then to be born was to be called the Mighty God and everlasting Father, but his children are not yet born, as we understand it; and so he is not yet Father.

Now follows 1 Tim. ii. "There is ONE God" (as Jesus says, not three as Theologians say, nor two either) and One Mediator, the Man Christ Jesus." We take Paul for it.

Next we are told what has been published a thousand times, but which God has never said, that Jesus was both God and man when here on earth.

Then follows the proof of what we have claimed, that no divine being could be the world's Redeemer, for Reviewer says that "It was fit that the Mediator should be truly man that he might be under the law, and to render his obedience, be tempted, suffer, die; for as God he could not die." Our readers will bear in mind that this assertion "as God he could not die," is based upon constructed proof—reasoned-out proof. What an expedient,—two persons in one; one of unlimited power, the other crucified through weakness, and when the load of anguish was about to crush the weak one the strong one did not help him; he had to cry to his Father for assistance and an angel was sent to strengthen him.

In order to weaken the effect of Christ being made in all things like unto his brethren we are told that "his brethren were not born of a virgin,—were not begotten of God, etc." This will have to pass for what is it worth,—we cannot do justice to it; but will just say that if only in some respects he was made like his brethren, the context shows that he is only in some respects qualified to be a faithful High Priest. Heb. ii. 9-17.

Next, "It was fit that Jesus should have a divine nature." Indeed! Is this expressed in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, or the words which the Holy Spirit teacheth? See 1 Cor. ii. 12, 13. They are not the Spirit's words; and they can not be read into the Scripture without a protest. The words, "In the bosom of the Father" do not begin to warrant one to say what was fit. In the Bible, bosom expresses affection, intimacy and sympathy.

Next. "The difference between nature and person has been clearly shown." Was the pre-existent Word no person after all? The maker of all things a nature without personality. Surely the writer is wading beyond his depth. For he speaks of a body being prepared for him. There is no Scripture for this. If he was a person before the body was prepared for him, and the body was, as he says, "truly man" there were two personalities where there was only one before, or else one person can be at once mortal and immortal as we were taught in our youth. And more confusion still have we when told of "the second Person of the divine nature." Surely this is another Christ and we demand to know what his offices in redemption are.

Next. "No one knoweth the Son but the Father." Does this prove the possession of divine nature by Jesus at the time he spoke these words. Let us hear him:—"I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth [not one of two equal Gods, nor his own divine nature] because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes, even so Father for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are imparted to me of my Father, and no one knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son and he to whosoever the Son will reveal him."

In John xvii. 3, we learn it is Eternal Life to know the Father and the Son; and from the 8th verse we learn that Jesus had revealed the words of Eternal Life to his disciples so that they also knew the Father and the Son,—and so do all who receive his Word. "We know him if we keep his commandments." 1 John ii. 1-3.

In order to make Heb. ix. 14 conform to the pre-existent idea we are supplied with a parenthetical sentence. The passage reads, "Who (Jesus) through the Eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God;" to which is added, (or, through the divine nature, attended by the Holy Spirit which he had without measure.) It is painful to read that the divine nature was attended by the Holy Spirit and the two — divine nature and Holy Spirit—enabled the body prepared for him to offer himself, truly man as he was, without spot unto God. What a relief to turn to the Words of the Spirit and read, "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus whom thou hast anointed" Acts ii. 27; and to read Acts ii. 33 that, instead of being equal with God while on earth, he received of the Father the promised Holy Spirit after he was exalted to the right hand of God.

We are next told that the body prepared for the pre-existent Son, that is the truly man, who was obedient and suffered, etc; made an offering of infinite merit. We cannot do justice to this human expedient either, but in the name of truth and common sense we ask, if an infinite sacrifice was made, was not an infinite victim offered?

Next we are told it was fit that he should have a divine nature, and fit that he should be God so that it would not be idolatry to worship him. Jesus tells us in Matt. xxi. 18 that only the Lord thy God should be worshipped; and in John iv. 21 Jesus classes himself as a worshipper and teaches that it is the Father who is to be worshipped. And in Matt. vi. 9 he tells how to pray and to whom. Proskuneo means a posture of respect or a mark of civility as well as religious worship.

Next, it is said, "It does not become us to attempt to explain how far the two natures meet and cooperate." Does it become us to say without a revelation, that the Son of God had two natures at one time?

Job ix. 8 is referred to. We are solemnly persuaded that the application of this verse to any Being but the Eternal Father, the Holy ONE of Israel, practically rules him out of the universe. It reads; "Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea." etc. The 1st and 12th verses informs us who it is.

In Prov. xxx. 4 Common Version, we find the question of Agur, what is the name of him who has gathered the wind in his fists, bound the waters in a garment, and exalted the ends of the earth, and what is the name of his Son? The first part proves that the Son did not do it. The name of the Son looks formidable to some; but the Septuagint translation makes this clear, for it reads, "Or the name of his Sons." In harmony with Job xxxviii. 7 which shows that before the foundations of the earth were laid Jehovah had numerous sons Happily the self existent One vindicates himself in the 4th verse, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?"

Next, on the bare assumption of two equal Gods which has been disproved, and Reviewer's decision that the Common Version of Acts xx. 28 is exactly the Words of the Spirit, when it is well known that it has been in dispute 100 years, we are told that God died, as to his human nature! Clark and Campbell, and Alford, and Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, and others have been appealed to in matters relating to divine truth, the first principles of which they are strangers to; and now, when their scholarship, which no one questions, would be of signal service they are passed by entirely.

Clark says there has been much controversy over it,—that there is great dissensions among the MSS. and versions,—that few of them have the Word God, and none of them very ancient, some reading, of the Lord, and of God, but the most ancient read, of the Lord. Drs. Wescotts and Hort's Greek Testament says corruptions are suspected here. Tischendorf says the Alexandrian MS. reads, of the Lord, as does Rotherham's and Sawyer's, margin of R. V. says many ancient authorities read, of the Lord, as also American Bible Union Trans., and Jamieson, Fausset and Brown says the evidence of the MSS. preponderates in favor of, the Lord, and that Athenasius, the champion of the Divinity of Christ in the 4th century says the expression, "Blood of God" is unknown to the Scriptures,—while a note in the Diaglott says the original makes good sense by adding the eliptical word Son after own—own Son.

"Died, as to his human nature" we are told. No authority given, as if it was the writer's privilege to arrange matters to suit himself; but the time is hastening on when every man's work shall be brought into judgment.

Our readers must now decide whether the Reviewer's scholarship is superior to all these who testify against their own views, and scores of others. If not, they will reject his conclusion that Jesus was both God and man at the same time.

We are next told that "the Lord of glory was crucified." This mistake is corrected in Acts ii. 36 for it there teaches that he was made both Lord and Christ after he was crucified, as confirmed by Phil. ii. 9 and Heb. i. 9. He who is now Lord of Glory, was crucified through weakness.

When opposed by no one we claimed that pre-existence was not a Bible doctrine because it cannot be stated in Bible language. The discussion has demonstrated this by constant recourse to men's wisdom to sustain it. 2nd. That it necessitates theological definitions of words instead of that of lexicographers. 3rd, All we claimed for the Woman's Seed has been admitted to be true of the Woman's Seed—fulfilled in him. 4th, Another Christ has been presented to us; one never promised, never begotten, never born, never obedient, never tempted, never suffered, never died, never rose and revived, never became our mediator, never promised to come to us or do any thing for us, never brought life and immortality to light, is not the resurrection and the life, is not heir of the land nor throne, was never set before us as an object of faith; and no motive to love him or serve was ever given to us. 5th, This theory makes it necessary to deprive the Eternal One of one-half of his power and glory to enrich a created Son, and he also from eternity(?) And besides that, a theory the like of which can only be found in heathen mythology, that this Eternal Son, which even Clark calls eternal nonsense, left heaven and personally dwelt in a truly man;—two complete persons in one. So that only half of one person died, and the other lived on: or else one of two whole persons died and the other did not. As Christ is said to have given himself, and was faithful unto death we have absolute proof that the human nature was himself and all else a myth; and it is with joy we look for him who says "I am he who liveth and was dead," "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me,"—yes; the Lamb that was slain and redeemed us by his blood. We are persuaded that implicit faith in the promise to the Woman, Abraham and David, —and the announcement that the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us and that God sent forth his Son made of a woman, and the announcement of Jesus that his Father was the only true and living God,—yes, implicit faith in this would stop all discussions of Pre-existence.

We impugn no one's motives, and feel like saying, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," when they say and do things that to us seem grievous sins; we would gladly lead them to Gethsemane and show them the LAMB of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

ANSWER TO ANSWER I.

The remarks about "Waterloo," and "defeat" hardly comport with "a profound and awful subject," but it shows what the writer was thinking about.

In reply to the charge of "one-sided articles" we say that God's truth is a one-sided thing; the man who believes it from the heart is a one-sided person. We have taken sides with God.

In regard to his two opponents, we remark, that it is rather singular that Bro. Wilson's Second article on the apostasy appeared in the same number with the First article of Reviewer, on "The Son of God." Has he not made a mistake? Has he not been the opponent of Bro. Wilson? The circumstances point in that direction.

The "we" and "our" makes him think there is a combination against him, thus making it personal, instead of for or against truth as such. But this is somewhat of a fancy, some preferring the big I, others the more impersonal plural pronouns. We are not surprised at this suspicion, because, having treated us as a novice, and belittled our witnesses instead of answering arguments, he finds they have accumulated so fast, that he thinks it is the work of several enlisted against him. If we were to change sides so that he could employ his analytical powers and critical acumen, we would expect to feel as he does. We have neither needed or received even a suggestion from any one in composing our articles, and knew nothing of Bro. Wilson's articles till they appeared. But for all that we think there is a combination against him. Moses and the prophets and the Psalms, are against him, and Jesus and the apostles are against him on this question. We say it sorrowfully.

We are next referred to 2 Sam. vii. 14 and Psa. ii. 7. In the first. God promises that David's Son should be his Son, and that settles it that the Son only existed in promise;—did not pre-exist. The 2nd Psalm also teaches the same, and forever condemns the idea of a created son afterward hinted at by Reviewer.

To say that the epistles call Christ the Son of God fifty-three times is an insinuation that we do not believe. Does re-existence require that kind of support? Certainly we believe John xx. 31 which says "JESUS is the Christ," —as also Acts iv. 27 which says, "For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou (God—see v. 24, "who made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is), hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate with the Gentiles and the people of Israel were gathered together." Where does the theory of pre-existent-son-creation stand beside this infallible testimony?

The Jews thought Jesus broke the Sabbath; we know he did not. They also thought he made himself equal with God,—but we know he did not, for in answer to this foul charge, he said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself;" so if Son and Father are equal, the Father can do nothing without the Son,—but he did, see Acts iv. 24.

Being able to fully and frankly express our faith in reference to the subject in hand in the words of the Spirit, we deny that we have a theory of it, in the common acceptance of the term. It is God's theory. Reviewer cannot take the Spirit's declaration that "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman," without the addition of its parallels." We would not wish him to. The parallels would emphasize the declaration. But although he says they are so numerous that it would be neglecting a large portion of the Bible, he could not, or did not afford one instance.

On the words "The only begotten Son," he says, "I see in this title a proof of his divinity, and our right to worship him," etc. As the words do not say this, he does not see it with his eyes, and we ask, Can we trust his mental vision? Can we assume the responsibilities of a mistake by us?

We can scarcely conceive of a squarer contradiction than it is to say that the "logos was as masculine while he was God" as after he became flesh; and then say as he does in No. 32, that in the human nature he is the offspring of David · born of the posterity of David as to the flesh."

He then says, "What I contend for is not so much our Lord's pre-existence as his divinity, and his being any more than any mere man." It seems by this that he is coming to the truth. It seems not essential that he pre-exist, providing that he be divine. Well, he is divine; and if the time when he became divine could be agreed upon, can be settled, what is to keep us apart? But then, what does divinity without existence mean? We seriously doubt if it be capable of an explanation in harmony with the ideas previously advanced by the writer. This is said of him who is said to have certainly made the world and all things in it, although not certain that he existed. We are thankful that we are able to judge pre-existance out of its own mouth, as never before; for when it is presently said that "he came forth from the Father and came into the world when his human body was prepared for him; and then, "If there were no other sonship than by begettal how could there be sons of the burning coal?—that is sparks and sons of the quiver or bow, i. e., an arrow;" and "Adam was never begotten, and had no pre-existent mother, yet he was God's Son, i. e., by creation; and presently adds that the BEGOTTEN SON—(caps are ours—) ranks higher than any of these angelic hosts who worship him;" and then in Answer 3, we are asked, "Was the Holy thing born a mere son of Adam or the fellow and equal of the Deity? Such a medley will certainly prevent people from embracing it. If we take in the situation, our readers are left to themselves to decide between Divinity without pre-existence or with it, and a created Son, which means a creature, or a Holy thing born a fellow and equal of the Deity. For ourselves we decide all three statements equally void of the truth as it is in Jesus.

We are asked, "How could the flesh tabernacle in flesh! ! ?" We ask the writer how he explains the language of Paul in 1 Cor. v. 1, "If our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved?" And 2 Pet i. 13, "As long as I am in this tabernacle." Were there two Peter's or one? If one, which was he? Note the following, and say if pre-existence needs this sort of defence:—"The human nature of Jesus was made perfect through suffering." When we were charged with stretching, interpolating, wresting, etc., etc., we asked our readers to suspend judgment for a time; they can now render their verdict on that count, certainly.

OBITUARY.

James Voreis died at the home of his son, William Voreis, in Green Township, Marshall Co., Ind., March 7th, 1894. The direct cause of his death was injuries received from a fall a short time since, though he had been in feeble health for some years. He was born in Barren Co., Ky., Feb. 2, 1806, and was more than 88 years old. Came to Marshall County in 1836 and has resided here ever since. He has been for years a member of the Church of God, and though not obtrusive was firm in his trust in the promises. He leaves four sons and one daughter, and many relatives to mourn. He was married twice, both wives preceding him to the grave. The funeral was conducted by Bro. J. F. Wagoner March 9, 1894.

From the Plymouth Democrat we clip the following:

He was one of the early pioneers, and had lived to see Marshall County grow from a wilderness into one of the best improved sections of Indiana. He was an enterprising, industrious and successful farmer; moral, upright and honorable in all his dealings with mankind, and a man honored and respected by all who knew him.

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

About Christmas time I baptized into the precious name of Jesus, our dear young sister Cora Elvey. Being out of health she immediately went to California, in company with her Sister Lilly, to try the effect of that climate, but it was of little use, she grew worse. Her parents were sent for, but she fell asleep while they were enroute. She desired so much to see her parents, as she loved them as they loved her.

Cora was in her seventeenth year, and always was one of those sweet lovable natures. She received the first prize of the Sunday School, at the close of the last term.

It is a great comfort to us all that she became a bearer of the sacred name before it was too late. Oh, how I wish I could prevail upon all young people who understand the Gospel to do likewise. If Cora had not obeyed when she did, she never would have had another opportunity. Dear young friends, you know not when your opportunity may pass away. Don't delay.

Bro. and Sister Elvey, and daughter Lilly, will start for Chicago, on March 13, funeral services will be held Sunday March 18. Bro. H. V. Reed is expected to conduct the services. Bro. Reed is out of health, and has not been able to preach much of late. May God restore him, that he may yet be able to herald the glad tidings he loves so well.

"Dear is the spot where Christians sleep,
And sweet the memory of the past;
O, why should we in anguish weep?—
They are not lost, but only rest."

W. H. WILSON.

In Little Red, White County, Ark., Jan. 24, 1894, Mrs Cynthia M. Scripture, aged 78 years, 8 mo. and seven days. She lived in Jewel Co., Kan., for more than twenty years, and will be remembered by many old friends and acquaintances. She leaves an aged husband and one son in Arkansas, and one daughter in Kansas besides many grand-children to mourn her loss. She was born in Canaan, Conn., May 17, 1815. She united with the church when quite young and had always been a faithful, true Christian, having perfect faith in that better world where sickness and death never enter and the weary are at rest.

Gone to rest. Life's weary labor done,
Past all the strife, the toil, the care,
Into the silent land beyond the tomb,
That promised home so wondrous fair.

Those eyes no fond love now can brighten,
That voice can answer no more to our own,
The tired head is pillowed low in slumber,
The gentle spirit has forever flown.

Those aged hands so worn and wrinkled,
Now crossed upon the pulseless breast,
They labored here in love and kindness.
Dear patient heart we bid thee rest.

The harvest is ripe and ready to gather,
The journey is ended all burdens laid down,
Life's path often thorny yet faithful and trusting,
Without crosses to bear there's never a crown.

Sleep till the morning, the beautiful morning,
When the clouds and the darkness shall all roll away.
Then may we meet in the glorious dawning,
Where night never comes and 'tis endless day.

Dancing.

Dancing falls under the head of amusements. Both savage and civilized man have a taste for amusements in some form or other. "It is a remarkable circumstance that the public and popular amusements are regarded as objectionable by the more sober and conscientious part of community." Jonathan Dymond. There must be something wrong in what good people as a rule feel morally bound to condemn. From my earliest recollection I have heard dancing spoken of as out of harmony with Christian character and profession—not, however, simply on the ground that it is an amusement, but on the ground that the evil connected with it vastly overbalanced the good. My own observation early in life confirmed this conclusion of the pious and good; nor has this view of the matter been changed by many additional years of observation. This kind of recreation as well as many other kinds is to be avoided by all good Christians. Amusement at best is but a very subordinate matter. It is not the chief concern of any one's life. Dancing is not a matter of anxious and solemn solicitude. Our Christian character is what deeply concerns us. He who foregoes this "social recreation" does not in the least imperil his own salvation, nor put in jeopardy that of another, but he who joins in it does both. I again bring forward my own observation extending over a period of fifty years. I have known quite a number of persons to start in Christian life in all soberness and sincerity and run well for a time, but through the persuasion of worldly associates overcame their conscientious scruples and joined in the "giddy dance." Once within the charmed circle they were lost to the church and to usefulness from that time. The ball room had a more powerful attraction than the sober exercises of Christian worship, the music more entrancing, companionship more agreeable and every thing in brilliant contrast with the solemn worship of a grave assembly, the serious life of a Christian, and the service of the living God. They lost heart at once for our Father's business, had far more urgent calls in another direction and from another master. They were conspicuously absent from the prayer and social meetings, and found more interesting reading matter in the secular papers and popular romances of the day than in the Bible with its facts of faith, its message of salvation and its story of love. What poor soul in the day of affliction calls on the dancing Christian(?) for words of hope and comfort? Who looks up to him as the model Christian and worthy of imitation in all things pertaining to life and godliness? Is he singled out as the man of the greatest force of character and of widest influence for good?

In estimating the propriety of any amusement it may be safely laid down, that none is lawful of which the aggregate consequences are injurious to morals generally; nor if the effect upon those who engage in it is bad; nor if it causes needless pain to men or animals; nor if it consumes much time, or is attended with much expense." The dancer may plead not guilty, to some of these; yet, the main charge will remain good, the aggregate of consequences is damaging to morals and religion as proven by the history of every community where dancing is fashionable. The question is not whether dancing in its simple theoretical character can be successfully defended, but whether it can be defended as it practically exists, and has always existed with all its attendants of evil.

The advocates of this diversion seek to offset its evils by the claim that they are now arranged with a view to a charitable end, that the proceeds are applied to meet the wants of the poor. This is Satan's old argument, that the "end justifies the means" and is as false as his own character. If one has a dollar to spare for a charitable purpose, why spend half of it to gratify the selfish passion for pleasure and amusement. Anciently what one had to spare went directly to the poor. This is God's plan. It is also claimed that dancing is good physical exercise. This is not the object before the minds of those who engage in it. If it was, the benefits are more than counterbalanced by the bad effects of an overdose of this kind of gymnastics; by breathing confined air made foul by emanation from the skin and lungs of those present. Undue excitement comes in for a share of the evil effects. Some of the postures assumed and evolutions gone through are very objectionable on the ground of immodesty. Why does any one need this kind of exercise? and need it, too, in the night?—as most all dancing is done at night. I have known a great many Christians in my life, but never knew one who did not have a sufficient amount of physical exercise in pursuing the useful avocations of life, and some are overworked from sheer necessity. Popular public dancing cannot benefit the Christian physically, socially, morally or religiously. The Christian will find himself positively a weaker man as a Christian by joining in it. He will feel himself crippled in his influence. In all communities where I have lived the non-professor says of the dancing Christian(?) I am just as good as he is, and a little better, for I do not act the part of a hypocrit. A good Christian will not engage in questionable things, he wants the line of demarkation between himself and the world to be broad. He is not of the world, but belongs to another family. He is a pilgrim and a stranger. Whatever is arranged by the world, and for the world's amusements he shuns. He is not a seeker after mere pleasure. He goes at duty's call, but turns a deaf ear to the beck of the world. He does not want to be found with the gay and giddy lovers of pleasure when the Lord comes.

John L. Wincz.

Editor Restitution:

Bro. Halstead has returned from Oregon, and while his health was not first class, we find that he has not forgotten the injunction of our Lord, "Occupy till I come." He began a series of meetings Feb. 13, and has kept them up to the present time. The attendance has been very good and considerable of interest is manifested. Opportunity has been given during the last three or four nights for any who so desired to put on Christ by obedience and thus become Abraham's seed, heirs according to the promise. None have as yet manifested such a desire. Our prayer to God has been, and is, that God's truth might shine into the hearts of some poor souls that are in darkness, and illuminate them as only his truth can, that they might be constrained to obey from the heart that form of doctrine which is being delivered them.

Following are a few of the many thoughts presented for our consideration—together with life eternal only through Christ. The land as an everlasting inheritance, Rich man and Lazarus, Inner man and outer man, Paradise, etc.

His first text was from 1 Cor. ii. 14,—But the nature of man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. He took this text to disabuse people's minds of the idea that so many hold to, that the natural man in our day cannot possibly understand spiritual things, even after they have been revealed to us by those holy men of God—the prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ, and written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. Rom. xv. 4. In other words, all things revealed to those spiritual men and recorded in the Scripture can be understood by any honest heart who desires to understand them. Eph. iii. 4. Whereby when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. But the natural man cannot by any natural means find it out, but through the revelation by Holy Spirit. Eph. iii. 3, 5. How that by revelation he made known unto the Sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the spirit also. Heb. i. 1.

If it be a fact that when we read we can understand, that leaves the responsibility all with us; hence God holds us accountable for how we read and how we hear. And [illegible] that it doesn't make any difference what we believe, just so we are honest in it; but makes our salvation depend upon our believing the truth. 2 Thess. ii. 13. But we are bound to give thanks, alway to God for you brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation—through santification of the spirit, and belief of the truth. Whereunto he called you by our Gospel. Further that this gospel by which we are called, consists of certain great and precious promises—made of God unto the fathers, called the covenants of promise; which Christ came into the world to confirm, and which he did confirm and seal by his own blood—by a knowledge of which, and obedience to the same we are made partakers of the divine nature, after having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. 2 Pet. i. 4.

Then after showing conclusivey that these great and precious promises vouchsafed to the obedient faithful ones were, eternal life, (Titus i. 2), and the land for an everlasting inheritance, (Psa. xxxvii. 29). Matt. v. 5. The kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens and the glory connected with it, (Dan. vii. 27), and that they could be attained, and that we could become heirs of them in only one way—through Jesus Christ our Lord, he took up the gospel, showing that it was not only God's means of calling out a people for his name, but God's power for their salvation. Rom. i. 16. 1st. It is called the grace of God, because it was the glad tidings of God's favor towards man, and Paul said, (Eph. ii. 8), By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Showing very plainly that it is simply by God's favor through faith, that we are saved, and that faith comes by hearing the Word of God, the gospel. To sum it all up, and harmonize all the statements, as to how we are saved—by grace, hope, the Gospel, works, the blood of Christ and by baptism, and all apparently different ways is that we are not saved by any one of them, but by all. That it is by God's grace or favor to the children of men, made known by the gospel, which is made up of great and precious promises, which is the new covenant, which Christ came to confirm and seal by his blood, the which if we believe, will give us hopes and the belief of it or faith, if a living faith will produce works—works meet for repentance, which includes baptism for the remission of sins, and bringing us into Christ. Then if we abide faithful unto the end, if we continue in him rooted and grounded; and keep in memory these things we are saved with an everlasting salvation. It would be impossible in a short article to give even a synopsis of the subjects taken up and considered, but suffice it to say, that the adversary with his whole system of false teaching and error was completely silenced, if not put to route. Only once during the whole course of the meetings was there a sign of disturbance, and we presume that was not intentional. A grayhaired gentleman with a Rev. prefixed to his name, becoming agitated, in a half audible voice, inadvertantly denounced it as a lie. The sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, began to prick the heart, which caused him to cry out, but not as they did on the day of Pentecost.

On March 1st, on account of his health, Bro. H. was obliged to cease his labor. One manifested a desire to put on Christ by obedience.

Patience in Well-doing.

How often we hear the well known remark, "My patience is worn out, it makes me impatient, I am tired of life, I am tired of sorrow and trouble." Oh, should it be so? but it is our weak nature. Yet, we can readily see the dear example shine in the true word that Christ is really our Elder Brother, who has overcome, and we must strive to overcome as he has.

We can and must follow in his footsteps. It is very, very hard sometimes, but we must do it to gain anything in the future.

Be patient in well-doing. Let [illegible] on but one thing. Let us now be doing something for the Master, for he is continually doing something for us. We require so much. We frequently remark about the mother who has a number of children to do for, what a large amount she has to do, she has such a large family, such cares and trouble.

Do we ever realize what a large family the Lord has to care for? and yet, he is ever ready to administer to our numerous wants.

How many blessings we enjoy through life. Life is very dark and cloudy some times, but we come to bright spots afterwhile, and oh what glorious promises we have in store for us.

Have we not enough to be patient for? We should never weary of helping those that need assistance, and yet how often we leave it in the hands of some one else saying they are far more capable of doing it. How many powerless excuses life furnishes. Our hands are full of good noble work. There is much home missionary work to be done. How thoughtless we are of this, how seldom do we say that good word or do that little deed, when we have opportunity.

Charles Robinson says, "There are times when God asks nothing of his children except silence, patience and tears." True perhaps, but how often are we silent on subjects that we should speak of.

Patience works fortitude, or stability of character—and this inspires hope the anchor of life—and we rest in God, in his promise, in his love. This is by faith in him; and there we stand, rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, the promised glory. Rom. v. 2.

What is life without some bright promise for tomorrow? or some prospect of meeting dear friends? What would life be without these things to make it more dreary?

It is a beautiful thought for those that are true believers to know that a time is coming, yea, is almost here, when old things are passed away and all things have become new. 2 Cor. iv. 17. But when the Lord cometh will he find faith on the earth? Will we weary of well doing before that time? We are surely living in perilous times. Oh how that true and noble Word is perfected, how true is Matt. xv. 9.

1 Cor. vi. 9-10; Gal. v. 19-21, tell us very plainly who shall not be remembered for their good works. Therefore let us be patient in well-doing or we may be cast away as one of these. Life is short and let us do what our hands find to do. Let us be waiting and watching for we know not the hour when the Son of Man cometh. Matt. xxiv. 42; Mark xiii. 34-37. Let us be faithful until that time comes, for He has told us to be faithful over a few things, and he will make us master over many. What promises, what hope of joy in the future, the near future. Oh to be ready, ready waiting till the Lord doth come. How anxious we are to be ready when that train comes to bear us away to our place of joy and pleasure, probably to visit some dear friend. Let us be ready and anxiously waiting to go on Christ's train of joy, and glory, and power that will carry us to that place of safety. Let us scatter the seeds of kindness, let us spread the Word, let us hold fast to that which is good.

May the children of Christ be true and grow stronger in the love of all that is good, patiently waiting, lest in coming suddenly he finds us sleeping. Watch.

Selected.

Is Immortality a Present Possession?

Throughout the whole of the Scriptures the word immortal does but once occur, and then it is spoken of in connection with the Deity. It is found in 1 Tim. i. 17, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever. Amen." Likewise the word immortality; it is used as an attribute of the King of kings. He is spoken of as the only one who yet possesses immortality. We read in 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16: "The blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; [illegible] everlasting—Amen."

Immortality, or deathlessness, as the word implies, is a state of being connected only with and strictly pertaining to the Divine nature. Consequently it is shared by all those who are partakers of that nature. They become children or sons of Deity, and can die no more.

To men a gracious invitation is given to seek for immortality and lay hold of eternal life. Peter declares that by certain exceeding great and precious promises we may be made partakers of the Divine nature. Hence we can become sharers of that immortality which is derivable from Jehovah alone. Hence we read of immortality in connection with man, but in every instance as a future reward—as a future state of being, not as a present actuality. Thus we read, in Rom ii. 7, that eternal life will be rendered to all those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for immortality. Paul declares, "this mortal shall put on immortality." Immortality, therefore, cannot be an attribute of human nature. It can only, to members of the Adamic race, become a personal possession after they have been raised from the dead and become invested with their house from heaven, whereby they are changed from flesh to spirit, from the mortal to the immortal, dying no more, death having no more dominion over them.

At the present time, immortality cannot be affirmed of any human race, save Christ the first-fruits. He now lives to die no more. But even with him, the Captain of salvation, he was a sharer of the mortal ere he became partaker of the Divine nature. Death hath no more dominion over him. It had once. In that he died he died unto sin once. He, therefore, was like us, mortal, and had to pass into the tomb and be the subject of resurrection ere immortality and eternal life could be his.

And ever harmonious in its teaching, the Scriptures iterate and reiterate the dying condition of man. It is this which constitutes the foundation upon which every doctrine is built, and but for which there would have needed no revelation. But for our dying mortal state, what need was there of salvation? For salvation is a deliverance of man from death. Let us look at a few of these statements. —Prov. xiii. 13—"Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed: but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded." Ps. xxxix. 12, 13—"Hear my prayer, O Lord, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were. O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more." Ps. xlix. 6-14—"They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches; none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him: (for the redemption of their soul is precious and it ceaseth for ever) that he should live forever, and not see corruption. For he seeth that wise men die, likewise the fool, and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others. Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations, they call the lands after their own names. Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish. This their way is their folly; yet their posterity approve their sayings. Selah. Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling." Acts iii. 23—"And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Rom. iii. 13, "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Ezek. xviii. 20—"The soul that sinneth it shall die."

Thus Jehovah's Word declares that man is not a deathless being, that he is not an immortal soul, but that he, at death, passes into the land of forgetfulness, and is no more. And unless he is brought from the sleep of the grave by the power of an omnipotent Jehovah, he must for ever remain in the congregation of the dead, as utterly [illegible] raise himself from the tomb. Life has been given him, but it is not his own; and he has no power whatever to retain that. There is no man that hath power over the spirit, to retain the spirit, neither hath he power in the day of death; and there is no discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it. Eccles. viii. 8. And when in the day of death the life passes away, it is not in the power of any man to deliver himself from the embrace of death, for being out of existence it is not possible. If, then, he ever live again, it must be by the might and power of another.

They that are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, can die no more! Can die no more! No more! Does not this of itself prove that death once had dominion over them? That it did once lay them low? That they did once pass to the grave? And in the Scripture, wherever the resurrection is announced, it is spoken of in connection with death and the grave.

Jesus said, "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live;" and again, "All that are in their graves shall hear his voice." And David declares "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." And Daniel says, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."

And as the verity of the death state is acknowledged, so also is the verity of a resurrection of the dead announced. Job said, in the nineteenth chapter and the twenty-sixth verse, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and my eyes shall behold and not another. David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Daniel was told to go his way "till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." And this, said Jesus, is the will of the Father that sent me, "that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." So Paul declares, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead." Acts xxiv. 15.

"But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." "By man came also the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. xv. 13, 21. In these quotations from the writings of different inspired penmen, we have, because derived from the same source, an identity of teaching. All affirm the reality of death—the non-existence for a time of the individual: that they lie in the grave, without consciousness, without knowledge, memory, love, hatred, envy, prayer, praise or thought; but that at a time in the future, though corruption has seized them, in the flesh, if they hear the voice of the Son of God, they shall live again, having been redeemed from the power of the grave—raised from the dead by the power of the Deity.

Silence under Provocation.

This is one of the most difficult things to maintain that duty demands of us. Many good people have striven for a long time to so master themselves that when sharply provoking things have been said or done to them, they shall keep sweetly silent and let their attitude be a wholesome antidote to the assaults they received. This is what they have greatly desired, but alas, how they have failed! How they have grieved over their repeated failures! Human nature, even at its best estate, is a hard thing to manage.

Dr. Maclaren truly says; "When our house takes fire, the first impulse is to go after a bucket of water; but if the temper takes fire, the first impulse is to throw on more fuel. Now, the best water-bucket for aroused temper is resolute silence. If, whenever a provoking word were spoken to us, or an irritating act were done, or an injury struck on us, we should firmly seal our lips for even ten minutes, we should save ourselves many a quarrel, many a heart-burn, many a mortification, many a disgrace to our religious profession. One of the [illegible] told me that he used to be very passionate, but he broke his temper by resolutely bridling his tongue until he cooled down."

Some men, naturally very able and well educated, have greatly hindered themselves from accomplishing what they really might have done, simply because they had no self-control under sharp provocation. Their unbridled tempers have cut the cords of their power and left them sadly weak when they ought to have been strong and calm. Tempests are powerful, but calms are sometimes more powerful than the most furious tempest. Nothing rebukes a provoking opponent more effectively than a dignified silence. This is the Christian's defence and strength.—Messiah's Herald.

"Neither."

"Well, I cannot understand why a man who has tried to lead a good moral life, should not stand a better chance of heaven than a wicked one," said a lady a few days ago, in conversation with others about the matter of salvation.

"Simply for this cause," answered one. "Suppose you and I wanted to go into a place of interest where the admission was one dollar. You have fifty cents and I have nothing. Which would stand the better chance of admission?"

"Neither," was the solemn reply.

"Just so; and, therefore, the moral man stands no better chance than the outbreaking sinner. But now suppose a kind and rich person who saw our perplexity, presented a ticket of admission to us at his own expense! What then?"

"Well, then we could go in alike; that is clear."

"Thus, when the Savior saw our perplexity, he came, he died, and thus obtained redemption for us, Heb. ix. 12, and now he offers you and me a free ticket. Only take care that your fifty cents does not make you proud enough to refuse the free ticket, and so be refused admittance at last."

God counts silence, inaction, and indifference among mortal sins.

Change of Schedule on the Pennsylvania Lines.

A change in the schedule of passenger trains on the Pennsylvania Lines went into effect Sunday, March 11. Under the new schedule the time of trains at Plymouth, Ind., is as follows:

The Coming and Kingdom of Our Savior.

"When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with him. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31.

"The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32-33.

"I saw in the night visions, and behold One like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven and came to the Ancient of Days. And they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 13, 14.

"And Thou, O Tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion." Mic. iv. 8.

"In mercy shall the throne be established; and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness." Isa. xvi. 5.

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with justice and judgment, from henceforth, even forever." Isa. ix. 7.

"In that day his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east." Zech. xiv. 4.

"Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

"And many nations shall say, Come let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. For the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Mic. iv. 2, 3.

Here are only a few of the many positive declarations given in God's holy word concerning the coming and kingdom of our blessed Savior, and yet we have people all over this land of ours, that will teach and preach, that Jesus is now seated upon his throne, and reigning over his kingdom.

In Rom. iii. 21, we find this language. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I am also overcome, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Here then are two thrones brought to view. The throne of God and the throne of Jesus, and our Savior emphatically says, that he is now seated upon his Father's throne, and he has just as truly said that the overcomers shall sit with him in his throne, and the promises are only to those that are overcomers. Those that overcome the evil one, shall have administered unto them an abundant entrance into the Kingdom of God.

It is written that through much tribulation we enter the Kingdom of God, (then we enter the kingdom,) not the kingdom enters us, as some of the teachers of today are advocating. When do we enter or inherit the kingdom?

In the first part of our lesson we learned that when the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then he would sit upon his own throne, and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them, one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, and he shall set his sheep on his right hand, and the goats on the left then shall the King, (at that time he will rule as King now he officiates as High Priest.) Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

We see from this reading, that not until Jesus comes, is it possible to possess the kingdom. We can become an heir to the kingdom, but not a possessor of it.

"As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise, and if children then heirs and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him that we may be glorified together. When will the child of God be glorified? When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

Our Savior said that in the last days there would teachers arise that would say that Christ had already come, they will say, Lo here, and lo there, but if they say he is in the secret chambers believe it not, for as the lightening cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. [illegible] "Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him.

He will come and build again the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, and will build up the breaches thereof, and will raise up his ruins, and build it as in days of old. Amos ix. 11; Acts xv. 16.

When our Savior comes and takes to himself his great power and reigns. When the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Savior. It is not going to take place in such a quiet way that we will need to be told that he is here. He came first as the Babe of Bethlehem. His second coming will be as King of Kings. In that day, the Lord shall be King over the whole earth. Zach. xiv. 9.

Blessed time may it soon come.

☞It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. The second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the Fairview Schoolhouse in Furnas Co., three miles southeast of Holbrook, commencing Friday evening March 16, 1894, and hold over the following Sunday. Business meeting promptly at 2 o'clock on Saturday.

Important business will come up at this time for consideration, and we strongly urge all brethren to be present at this meeting.

The Church of God Tract Association will also meet at this time.

We take pleasure in announcing to the brethren that a unity of the work in the state has been practically completed, but in order to finish up said business a conference will be held at Bassett, Rock Co., March 23rd to 25th, 1894.

The State Evangelist will meet the brethren at Bassett and it is expected that an interesting and profitable meeting will result.

Come brethren, show your interest in the work by attending these meetings.

If eternal life is worth anything it is worth an effort to secure it. Therefore, dear brothers and sisters, let us be firm and steadfast, ready for the coming of the Master, and for every good word and work.

California and the Mid-Winter Fair.

A more favorable opportunity than the present to visit California will probably never be offered. The rates for excursion tickets, via the North-Western Line, are the lowest ever made, and aside from the delightful semi-tropical climate of California, the Mid-Winter Fair at San Francisco, which is now in the full tide of success, is a most potent attraction to the tourist and pleasure-seeker. The trip from Chicago to California is made via the North-Western Line in the marvelously fast time of 3½ days. Palace Drawing Room Sleeping Cars leave Chicago daily, and run through without change, and all meals en route are served in dining cars. Daily Tourist Sleeping Car Service is also maintained by this line between Chicago and San Francisco and Los Angeles, and every Thursday the party is personally conducted by an experienced excursion manager. Completely equipped berths in tourist sleepers are furnished at a cost of [illegible] each from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, thus affording persons of moderate means the journey in [illegible] and economical [illegible]. The North-Western Line [illegible] a booklet of [illegible] descriptive of the Mid-Winter Fair, and also containing [illegible] information concerning [illegible] copies of which will be mailed free upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western Ry., Chicago, Ill., if you mention this publication.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Brethren

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Poetry.

Not Your Own.

"Not your own!" but his ye are,
Who hath paid a price untold
For your life, exceeding far
All earth's store of gems and gold.
With the precious blood of Christ,
Ransom treasure all unpriced,
Full redemption is procured,
Full salvation is assured.

"Not your own!" but his by right,
His peculiar treasure now,
Fair and precious in his sight,
Purchased jewels for his brow.
He will keep what thus he sought,
Safely guard the dearly bought,
Cherish that which he did choose,
Always love and never lose.

"Not your own!" but his, the King,
His, the Lord of earth and sky,
His to whom archangels bring
Homage deep and praises high.
What can royal birth bestow?
Or the proudest titles show?
Can such dignity be known
As the glorious name, "His own?"

"Not your own!" To him ye owe
All your life and all your love;
Live, that ye his praise may show,
Who is yet all praise above.
Every day and every hour,
Every gift and every power,
Consecrate to him alone,
Who hath claimed you for his own.

Teach us, Master, how to give
All we have and are to thee;
Grant us, Savior, while we live,
Wholly, only thine to be.
Henceforth be our calling high
Thee to serve and glorify;
Ours no longer, but thine own,
Thine forever, thine alone!
— Frances Ridley Havergal.

Original.

The Gospel According to Loukas. Chap. 24.

1. And on the first (day—strictly "the one" as this is the cardinal and not the ordinal pronominal adjective) of the sabbattic rites (these being the Pascha days and this being the first fruits day),—at deep dawn they went to the memorial-tomb carrying the aromas which they had prepared.

2. And they found the stone rolled away from the memorial-tomb,

3. And entering in they did not find the body of the Lord Jesous.

4. And it came to pass as they were in perplexity about this, lo, even two men stood by them in gleaming apparel,

5. And becoming afraid and inclining their faces to the earth they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead?

6. He is not here; but hath been awakened: call to mind how he told you, while he was yet in Galilaia, saying,

7. It behoveth the Son of Man to be delivered up into the hands of men, obdurate sinners, and to be crucified, and on the third day to arise.

8. And they remembered his oracular words.

9. And returning from the memorial-tomb they told all these things to the eleven and to all the rest.

10. And they were the Magdalene Maria and Joanna and Maria the (mother) of Jacob; and the rest (of the women) along with them told these things unto the apostles.

11. And these oracular words seemed in their sight an idle tale as it were, and they distrusted them (the women not the words).

12. But Petros arose and ran to the memorial-tomb and stooping down to look saw the linen-clothes and them alone; and went away wondering to himself as to what had occurred.

13. And lo, two of them on the same day were going their way to a village sixty stadii from Hierousalem, the name of which was Emmaous.

14. And they were conversing with one another about all these occurrences.

15. And it came to pass while they were conversing and discussing, that Jesous himself also drew nigh and went his way along with them.

16. But their eyes were controlled so that they did not recognize him.

17. And he said unto them, What are these words that ye are exchanging with one another as ye walk? And they stood sad-visaged.

18. But one whose name was Kleopas answered and said unto him, Dost thou alone sojourn in Hierousalem and dost not know the things that have occurred therein during these days?

19. And he said unto them, What sort of things? And they said unto him, The things concerning Jesous the Nazarene; a man who became a prophet; able in deed and word in the sight of God and all the royal-people;

20. And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him up to a verdict of death and crucified him;

21. And we were hoping that he was the one who was destined to redeem Israel. Moreover also with all these things to-day brings this third day since these things occurred.

22. And besides certain women of ours who got to the memorial-tomb at dawn astounded us—

23. And not finding his body they came saying that they had also seen a vision of angels, who say that he is alive.

24. And certain of those along with us went to the memorial-tomb and found even as also the women had said; but they did not see him;

25. And he said unto them; O ye unapprehensive and slow in heart to put faith in all the things which the prophets have said.

26. Did it not behove the Christ to suffer these things and enter into his glory?

27. And beginning from Mouses and from all the prophets he interpreted to them the things concerning himself in all the Scriptures.

28. And they drew nigh to the village where they were going their way; and he made as though he was going his way further on.

29. And they urged him saying, Abide with us, because it is near evening and the day hath already declined. And he entered in to abide with them.

30. And it came to pass when he had reclined with them, that he took the loaf and commended it and brake and was giving it to them,

31. And their eyes were opened and they recognized him; and he disappeared from them.

32. And they said to one another, Was not our heart enflamed within us, as he talked to us on the way, as he opened unto us the Scriptures?

33. And arising that same hour they returned to Hierousalem, and found the eleven and those with them assembled together,

34. Saying, Surely the Lord hath been awakened and hath appeared to Simon.

35. And they narrated the events on the way and how he was recognized by them in the breaking of the bread.

36. And as they were saying these things, he stood in their midst and saith unto them, Peace be with you.

37. And they became awe-struck and afraid, thinking they beheld a spirit.

38. And he said unto them, Why are ye terrified, and why do doubtful thoughts arise in your hearts?

39. Perceive my hands and my feet, that it is I. Feel of me and see, because spirit doth not have flesh and bones even as ye behold me to have.

40. And having said this he showed them his hands and his feet.

41. And while they were still distrusting and wondering for joy he said unto them, Have you anything eatable here?

42. And they gave unto him a piece of broiled-fish.

43. And he took and ate it in their sight.

44. And he said unto them, These are my words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, namely, that it was yet necessary that all the things that had been written in the law of Mouses, and in Prophets and Psalms concerning me should be fulfilled.

45. Then he opened their mind to understand the Scriptures;

46. And said unto them, In this wise hath it been written, namely, that the Christ was to have suffered and to have arisen from among the dead on the third day,

47. And that repentance was to have been heralded in his name for a remission of sins unto all the nations, beginning from Hierousalem.

48. Ye are their witnesses.

49. And lo, I am sending the promise of my Father upon you; but do ye stay in the city until ye have been endued (lit. put on your under-clothing) with ability from on high.

50. And he led them out as far as unto Bethania; and lifting up his hands he commended (blessed) them.

51. And it came to pass as he was commending them, he was parted from them, and carried up into the heavens.

52. And they did him homage (worshipped) and returned into Hierousalem with great joy.

53. And they were constantly in the temple commending (blessing) God. Amen.

COMMENT.

"Oracular-words" instead of "words" merely R. V.

"Stadii" instead of "furlongs" R. V. This has been anglicized to "stade."

"What sort of things" instead of "what things" R. V.

"A man who became a prophet" instead of "a man who was a prophet" R. V. gives a different trend to the thought here.

"Who say that he is alive" instead of "which said that he was alive" R. V. which has the merit of being grammatical and according to the text as well as much more vivid in its suggestiveness.

"Unapprehensive" instead of "foolish" R. V. The translators of the past have been altogether too ready to say "fool" and "foolish" and to put such words into the mouth of God through their interpretations of his oracular word. What does Christ himself say on this point in the "Sermon on the Mount?" Read it again and think it over. Even the term there used and translated "fool" is not strictly speaking the Greek word for "fool," but means "savorless," or without the salt of wisdom or true understanding. In short God has set us a better example of courtesy than has been read into his word by a perverted imagination in the past. Remember that "all God's ways are judicial ways." And as "the Judge of all the earth" he is even now presiding in the Great Parliament of the nations through his spirit and its utterances.

"To put faith in" and not merely to "believe" R. V.

"To suffer these things" that is the significance and teaching of "the Pascha" you see and not "the Passover." Neither is God going to pass us over. We have got to bring up the remainder of the suffering as "the body." The Head has already suffered and come off victorious. How about the body? How about the "hope of the glory" "in which we are being saved?"

"Reclined" instead of "sat down" R. V.

"The loaf" instead of "the bread" R. V.

"Commended" instead of "blessed" R. V. means a great deal to me. Think it over. Does it not remove the thought from the limbo of superstition in a measure? Why did he command it? Because God gave it in his beneficence, and it is proper that we should recognize God's beneficence whether we eat or drink or whatever else we do, because we are as participants in his blessings thus constantly recognizing our dependence and showing proper gratitude as an act of true worship.

"And was giving it to them" instead of "gave to them" R. V. That is was in the act etc., when "their eyes were opened" as elsewhere referred to later.

"Hath been awakened" instead "Is risen" R. V. The word for "rising" is used later along in this chapter.

"Spirit" instead of "a spirit" R. V. This article "a" makes all the difference there is between a personal organic spiritual being and a mere "breath." In other words, I understand the Lord says here that a spiritual breath which their perverted imagination and superstition had personified, and of which they were afraid was not organic and did not have "flesh and bones" as they saw he had: and so he appeals to all their natural senses to refute and correct this superstition and false reasoning.

"Ye are their witnesses" that is the witnesses to the nations of these things instead of "ye are the witnesses of these things" R. V.

"And lo, I am sending the promise, etc." instead of "Behold I send forth the promise, etc." R. V.

"Until ye have been endued with ability from on high" instead of "until ye be clothed with power from on high" R. V. "Power" is too indefinite an English word to express the idea in this Greek word —"dunamis"—and "endue" better expresses the kind of clothing they are too receive. For it is "underclothing." "The ependuement" of which Paul speaks is the clothing with the spiritual body which is put on later over this "enduement from on high" received now.

"Commending" all along here instead of "blessing" R. V.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Are You Ready?

Some day we shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds, with power and great glory, and hear the cry, "Go ye out to meet him." How many of us are ready, with lamps trimmed and burning, ready to meet the Bridegroom, or have some grown tired of constant watching? There will be some striving for gold; some will be choked with the cares of this life; some will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; some will be seeking for worldly power or fame; some will be found drinking and dancing, and smiting their fellow-servants. The love of many will have grown cold, some have grown careless, but Beware! you are on dangerous ground, only a little step and you will have stepped off into the fearful chasm of forgetfulness. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him. Isaiah lv. 7. O! thoughtless one turn back before it is too late. Wise and faithful servant, watch yourself always, least you be found wanting. He is coming to reward those who love his appearing. If you have a dread of that grand event, you had better stop and think, ask yourself the cause. Do you want to stay with the world a little longer? Do you want to add a little more to your wealth, or have you some little sin you have not left off? The time is speeding on, the "signs are thickening fast," perilous times have come, the black war cloud hangs over Europe and Asia, and will soon burst with great and terrible destruction, deluging the earth in blood.

It is our hope that it will be the last great battle before the coming of the Prince of Peace. Some day there will be great excitement and mourning in the land over certain persons missing. The papers will be full of the strange mystery, whole families will be missing, husbands will be missing, wives will be missing, and fathers and mothers will have strangely disappeared, or perhaps a son or daughter whom the family had ridiculed for their strange belief. A great search will be made, and then the terrible thought will strike them, that the absent ones all belong to a certain sect every where spoken against, and very unpopular; so unfashionable that many who believed what they preached were ashamed to go to their meetings. "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh." Matt. xxv. 13.

Some time we shall see Jesus, see him as he is, the same Jesus who was crucified for our sins, the same dear Lord who wept and prayed that the cup might pass from him. Oh! What great love. He died that we might live. By his stripes we are healed, and if we have patiently run the course, we will hear his kindly spoken, "Well done good and faithful servant." Come ye weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Some day we shall receive a crown more beautiful than all the jewelled crowns of this world, for we belong to the royal house of King Immanuel. Although the world does not know it we are heirs to immense wealth; but they only see us as we appear, the poorest of earth. Some time we will help to rule the nations, with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and David and all the prophets and apostles, and our loved ones come forth from the tomb, clothed in bright raiment of immortality, with a firm and elastic step, and a bright and joyous countenance. No more pain or suffering, or death, but eternal youth. No dread of what is to come, or sorrow for what is past, "For it has not entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glory that shall be revealed in us, when the earth is made new.

Some day we shall hear sweeter music than mortal ever heard, see lovlier flowers, and more beautiful trees. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary, and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Isaiah lx. 13. And the air will be full of the song of birds and hum of bees. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock, and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my Holy mountain, saith the Lord." Isa. lx. 25. Some time we shall see the beautiful city of God, the New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, Rev. xxi. 2. O, rapturous vision, glorious and most Holy City, can I ever be accounted worthy to enter thy pearly gates and walk thy golden streets, or sit by the bank of the river? "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb." Rev. xxi. 1. Shall I see Jesus? Yes, if I keep his commandments. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." "And the Spirit and the Bride say come, And let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. 16, 17. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen.

VIOLA V. SKEELS.

Important Question.

"Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Amos iii. 3.

This question relates directly to God and Israel, as the context shows, and if Israel would walk in harmony with God, she must be agreed with God, and to be agreed with God she must of necessity agree to let you dictate the terms of agreement: otherwise God would not be God to Israel, and they could not walk together. How often God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to chastize Israel for her good, because she would break her agreement or covenant and go off after other gods. Yet, God in his infinite mercy was ever willing and ready to pity and bless his people when they saw the folly of their way, and would turn unto him with all their heart and humbly seek his favor. And all the trouble that ever arose between God and Israel or Adam or any one else, was occasioned by the creature's violation of that relationship existing between creature and Creator.

The record states that Enoch walked with God three hundred years and God took him, took him alive of course, but before his translation he had this testimony that he pleased God. And if we would be gathered home when Jesus comes to gather his jewels, we must also please God, walk with him in this life, take delight in his service, and do all the good we can.

This question relates not alone to God and his creatures in ages past, but is just as pertinent now as then, as it expresses a general truth, that is true in all time, and in all things, and under all circumstances. For men and women to walk with God today they must be agreed, or in harmony with God, and to be in harmony with God they must of necessity believe his word, believe his promises, and obey his requirements, although his requirements and his promises now, may vary somewhat with those of ages past and gone, yet faith in his Word and obedience to his will creates harmony between God and man thus enabling them to walk together. Faith in man's word and implicit obedience to the requirements of men will never enable one to walk with God. How careful we should be, that our faith stands not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God, the Gospel. The principle expressed in our question holds good in all the walks of life, thus two men of opposite political views cannot walk together on the political road, but will necessarily pull apart as they walk.

The same principle holds true religiously, no two men or women can walk together religiously unless they be agreed, especially on what they regard as essential points.

We may honestly differ on many minor points, and yet be able to walk together on the same road, if this were not so no two would be able to walk together. But if your faith and mine are directly opposite each other on what we believe to be the Gospel and its obedience, then there is no minor communion between us, there can't be, and it is folly to try to affiliate when there is no affinity. The same principle is true in families, and among neighbors. In order for a family to be harmonious and walk together they must agree, their objects and aspirations must be the same. If Brother M's whole soul is filled to overflowing with the cares of this life, so much so, that he thinks and talks and works almost every day and night for the things of this world, (in opposition to his Master's instruction) and when the day of meeting comes round, he is suffering with the Sunday headache and feels awful bad, and can hardly live through the day, but manages to sleep it off and is up before day the next morning and out rustling with all his might through another week, no more headache until he must stop work and go to church, and then it returns to torment the poor creature for another day and night, while Sister M. manages to do her work that must be done in good season, and takes a good share of her time to rest her weary limbs, and read and meditate upon God's holy Word, and learn his holy will, and go to church and worship God, and cheer up and exhort the brethren and sisters to love and good works, no headache that day to mar her peace and joy which is full to overflowing, and if the weather is a little ugly, she feels she must go if she must needs walk. She is living for God and his cause, walking by faith there is affinity between her and God, but how can she walk together with Brother M. when they are not agreed, no affinity between them, their aspirations and heart's desires are not the same.

May God in his mercy pity them.

T. E. ADAMS.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the first resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

In the Beginning.

"The morning stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted together for joy when the foundations of the earth were laid."

There were angels that left their own habitation. Where did they go?

The Sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair and took them wives. And all flesh corrupted its way. A super-human element was mixed with the Adamic and the race of man was corrupted. Noah's family was pure and was saved in the Ark.

This super-human element is recognized from Genesis to Revelation.

"Didst thou not sow good seed in thy field, from whence came the tares? An enemy hath done this; the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil." "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."

C. BOARDMAN.

A Taunting Question.

At times when Christians are having unusual misfortune, and darkness and desolation come upon them, they are apt to hear such a taunting question as this: "Where now is the God in whom you have been trusting?" The implication is that Christians are no more highly favored by some great power outside of themselves than other people are; for, if they were, then why are they "in trouble like other men?" In Micah vii. 10, we find these words: "Shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God?" David was annoyed by a similar question when he was seeing troublous times. Read his aching words: "Mine enemies reproach me, while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?" And to many other godly people, since David's day, the same taunting question, with perhaps slight variations, has been put. And oftentimes, when this question has not found open expression, it has been silently asked in the hearts of skeptical people concerning those Christians whose experience has been at times full of blighting bitterness and devastating misfortune. The questioner has thought that if there were a great and good God, loving his children as he is supposed to love them, he would not permit them to suffer such anguishing and depriving experiences. Where can their God be, while they are enduring such fell disasters and withering sufferings? If there be a God, he neither does not care for them as he might, or else they have forfeited all claims upon his compassion. At any rate, there must be something wrong, somewhere and for some reason. So the questioners think. But is it not also true that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth? And is it not also true that God would teach his children most valuable and eternal lessons in and by their afflictions? He never does leave them, no not for an hour.—Messiah's Herald.

AT one of the fashionable churches a series of discourses is being delivered on "How to get on in the world." This is doubtless a drawing card. At another it is being proved by science that death does not end all.

IN a Long Island town, last Sunday night, a representation of "the passion, crucifixion, death, burial and resurrection of Christ was given in pantomime in a Catholic Church at 25 cents per head. The entertainment was conceived by one Schmitt, who was scourged and crowned with thorns and tied to the cross. Horrible!!

IN a paper read before the Presbyterian Ministers' Club of Cleveland, by the Rev. D. L. Hickox on "Will as a force," he said "the laws of nature had never been violated by God," and held that "creation was the only miracle." Every day we see that the religious leaders are being switched off the old theological tracks but seldom get switched on to the track of truth—further away is the rule.

◆

DR. Levi Gilbert of the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Cleveland, preached last Sunday evening on the topic, "It makes no difference what a man believes if he lives right." And is reported by the papers to have said that this doctrine was both fallacious and injurious; that the connection between a man's actions and the impulses of his mind is so intimate that he is held to account for his thoughts. This is refreshing to read from such a source; and we hope it may induce some to search and see what the essential faith is.

IT seems from one of Tennyson's later poems entitled "Despair," that he realized the terrible results of the eternal torment doctrine.

"And we broke away from Christ our human brother and friend,
For he spoke, or it seemed that he spoke of a hell without help, without end.
Ah, yet, I have had some glimmer at times in my gloomiest woe,
Of a God behind all, after all, the great God for aught I know;
But the God of love and of hell together—they cannot be thought;
If there be such a God, may the Great God curse him and bring him to nought!"

IT is doubtful if Thomas Hood thought when he wrote the following lines that they would ever become a reality; but it lacks but little of it at this moment:—

Candidly inform us, now,
Did you ever?
No, you never
Could have fancied such a thing.
Never such vociferations,

"Any gentleman for Joppa?"
"Marcus, Marcus!" "Ticket please Sir!"
"Tyre or Sidon?" "Stop her, ease her!"
"Jerusalem, 'lem! 'lem!" "Shur! Shur!"
"Do you go on to Egypt, sir?"
"Captain, is this the land of Pharaoh?"
"Now, look alive there! Who's for Cairo?"
"Back her!" "Stand clear, I say, old file!"
"What gent or lady's for the Nile
"Or Pyramids?" "Thebes! Thebes! Sir!"
"Steady!"
"Now where's the party for Engedi?"

"Pilgrims, holy, red-cross Knights,
Had ye ever, the least idea,
Even in your wildest flights,
Of a steam trip to Judea?
What next marvel time will show,
It is difficult to say—

"Bus," perchance, to Jericho,
Only sixpence all the way."

Re-peopling the Holy Land.

Col. Goldsmid, who is the figure-head of the "Lovers of Zion Association" whose object it is to establish Jewish colonies in Palestine, recently said, in an interview, in answer to the question, "What land have you secured for your colonies?"—"We have bought about [illegible] acres of land in Gilead, a most healthy region, and the sanitorium of the Romans in olden times. It is a magnificent corn growing country, and will probably form one of the granaries of [illegible] from Haifa to Damascus will pass close to the land we have secured. The colony will have excellent markets open to it, and a good port at Haifa."

"To what extent in the way of number of colonists, will your scheme reach?" Ans. "That depends upon what support we get, and how far we can overcome the difficulties."

"What is your idea as to the population which Northern Palestine and Central Syria can accommodate?" Ans.: "In ancient times this country supported an enormous population. Major Conder, who is one of the greatest authorities, considers that there has been very little material change in the climate. The first rains and the latter rains still exist, and there is no reason why, under favorable conditions a population quite as large as that in ancient times should not be supported there again. One of the United States commissioners to Russia gave it as his firm opinion that the Czar will not rest until he has expelled five millions of Jews from Russia, so that this question must inevitably become an European one. It stands to reason that no existing country can receive anything like a proportion of such an enormous number, considering the overstocked labor markets. Even Australia is now sending out large agricultural colonies to Argentina and Paraguay. The only land which is close at hand to Russia, and to which the Jews could be sent at small expense, is Syria, and it will be for the nations of Europe to decide when the time comes whether this is not the best theater of operations. It is certainly the most natural one. I do not mean to say the whole of Palestine and Syria is healthy. There are tracts that are fever stricken, but a small expenditure of money in draining would pay hand over hand. The soil in those spots is marvelously rich. In the Jordan valley, tropical and sub-tropical cultivations can be undertaken such as tobacco, cotton, tea, coffee, etc. At the Dead Sea there is asphalte, which would be a very paying article of export. . . . And I believe," added Col. Goldsmid, "that it will be the salvation of the race to take a country life."

We see no reference in all this to Jehovah's long declared purpose, but things are being so shaped that the keen business instincts of the wealthy Jews are being used to further that purpose. This is a sure sign that the time to favor Zion is about come.

Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

By this mail I send you a copy of "The Christian Oracle," published by the Disciples of Christ, in relation to a proposed discussion between Mr. Clark Braden and Mr. Thos. Williams. The former a Disciple, and the latter a Christadelphian, on the nature of man.

The point it seems desirable to bring to the notice of your readers is contained in the letter of Elder C. Grant McNeill, pastor of Church of Christ in Bedford, Iowa, numbering some three hundred members, and he is an able writer.

He says, referring to Mr. Clark Braden's claim to represent the Disciples of Christ "as it is now managed, I beg to file a disclaimer as to Brother Braden representing all Disciples of Christ in his present position.

As for myself, I expect as the debate progresses I will find myself much more in harmony with Bro. Williams than with Bro. Braden.

In my travels among our brethren I have found hundreds who believe the dead saints are "asleep in Jesus" and that the dead "utterly perish." I have visited congregations in which it would be difficult to find even one brother or sister who believes otherwise."

The fact is there are many in the denominations who repudiate the horrible slander on our Heavenly Father that he will compel any of his creatures to suffer eternal life in torment, or the error that as soon as a man is dead he is more alive than ever, that death is a mere curtain through which he passes at once into the presence of God. I know of preachers, church officers, and members who repudiate these and kindred errors, and [illegible] or less subscribe to such subjects, in spite of the man-made creeds of the denominations they are connected with. Being active workers, and useful in the congregations they are let alone by the "authorities" so long as they outwardly conform, and it rests with them to consider what answer they will give in the day of judgment as to their testimony to God's revealed truth.

So far as the "Disciples of Christ" or "Christians" are generally concerned, if a man speaks "as to the oracles of God" using the words which the Holy Spirit uses in the Scriptures, discussing "Bible things in Bible words," allowing the Bible to explain itself, he is free to speak the truth in love always.

Of course, people will have different ideas on various subjects according to their early education and association, and according to their knowledge more or less of the Word of God; and among a people drawn from so many denominations and from the world as the Disciples of Christ have been, it cannot be otherwise than that more or less of sectarian speech and thoughts will prevail, till continued study of the Word and the habit of expressing themselves in its language, causes them to come to "the unity of faith," to all speak the same thing, and to be perfectly joined together in one spirit.

On this basis we can afford to bear with each other, remembering that none of us reached the truth that we do know in one day. That many stand where once we stood, that they, as we, are growing in knowledge, and let us hope the likeness and love of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I pity the person who does not expect to know more of God's revealed will on the 31st of December than he did on the 1st of January, and also the man who does not feel the responsibility of knowing whatever of truth he may, by God's favor have attained to, so as to communicate it in all kindness to others who may be willing to hear, instructing those who oppose themselves.

I think some things written in THE RESTITUTION very erroneous on some important questions, but on the other hand, good endeavors are made to correct them, and so long as the paper itself is not committed to these errors it may be well to have them discussed and shown to be such, especially when so kindly a spirit is manifested as one generally observes.

W. T. BAKER.

Dear Restitution:

I was at a meeting of the branch of the "Evangelical Church" and they preached immortality of the soul till I cannot help but speak of it. If I understand the Bible right, none hath immortality except God and our dear Savior, (Jesus) who has suffered the penalty of death, and has risen therefrom.

Death means a state of unconsciousness, and I cant see how they make it that the dead are conscious, and especially if they read Eccl. ix. 5–8; xix. 10–20.

We must not change his divine Word. May I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may prove faithful unto death.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:

It had not been that I have not enjoyed the Love Feast that I have kept my seat, for it has truly been a feast to me. I waited for others, but now if there is room for me I would say that I am still on the Lord's side, and expect to live and die there.

A social meeting is something I have always prized and desired. I like Bro. Skeels suggestion to have one every three months. A brother said that some in his congregation were growing cold and indifferent. How strange that it should be so. I would say to such, if you cannot stand with each other how can you stand alone? Remember the Master says he that is ashamed of me, of him will I be ashamed. I am thankful for the strength received from the letter drawer, and especially from the good practical sermons by the preaching brethren. One said it was so cheering when we saw the names of those we had associated with. I say yes, especially [illegible] those who were instrumental in bringing us to the light. I try to get people interested in the things pertaining to the kingdom, but they say it dont make much difference what our faith is, just so we are honest and go to the best of our judgment, but they forget that the wisdom of man is foolishness with God. O for a convincing power to show people where they stand. I hope some preaching brother will come this way soon and arouse this people. Now brethren, let us press on to the mark of the high calling in Christ. I am determined to stand or fall by the old ship. Amen. Yours in hope of the kingdom.

Editor Restitution:

Inclosed please find $1.50 for your most valuable paper for another year as I cannot think of doing without it, as it is a source of great consolation to me in my lonely hours as I live alone. My father took it ever since it has been printed. I have taken it since his death, and shall continue as long as I can find the means to pay for it. I was very much pleased and comforted in reading the short letters from the dear brothers and sisters that participated in the Love Feast. I would like to have written something myself if I could have written anything worthy of printing. I was greatly pleased to read of the hopes of others, of their joys and sorrows. It encourages us on our weary way. I think the time is short, the conflict will soon be over. May we all so live that we will hear that welcome appaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord," is the prayer of your sister.

Dear Restitution:

Brother D. M. Hudler visited the brethren at Dixon, Ill., in January, remaining over two Sundays, delivering eight discourse and being greeted each time with a fair audience, notwithstanding the fact that the several churches were holding revival services.

There was a good degree of interest manifested. He is an earnest worker, plainly teaching the glorious truth given in the Word of God. We pray the seed sown may find lodgment in many hearts and that it may spring up and bear fruit abundantly. Bro. Hudler is very much liked here and we hope to have him with us again soon.

Yours in the faith.

ANNA L. ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

I feel to praise our dear Savior that he has done so much for us. I was very much edified in reading the letters from the dear ones of like faith. We are commanded to speak often one to another, and so encourage each other. If we are his body we need to build each other up in the most holy faith. I am very much interested in reading the different articles in THE RESTITUTION. I would like to ask Bro. Wilson to reconcile or show why there seems to be a difference between Matthew's account of the time that the woman went to the sepulchre and the account of Mark, Luke, and John. I ask because I cant understand how it was.

Yours for the truth.

J. B. LENT.

Dear Restitution:

I will try and write a few lines for your lettter drawer. I love to see it full of encouraging letters from the dear brothers and sisters. There is only a little band of us here. We meet each Sunday at the houses of the brethren to study God's Word. There are but few but Christ tells where there are one or two gathered in his name there he will be also.

We know the time is short in which we have to work, for Christ will soon come to set up his kingdom, and how earnestly we ought to labor that we may be found with our lamps trimmed and burning, worthy of an entrance into that beautiful kingdom. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

Dear brothers and sisters do not faint by the way, be firm, do not be led astray by worldly pleasures. What are they to us? We should be striving for pleasure far greater than this age can afford. May we all so live that we will be accounted worthy of an entrance into that beautiful kingdom is my prayer.

Your Sister in hope of everlasting life.

EFFA C. JOHNS.

Dear Restitution:

I trust that it is not too late for me to say that I am still trusting in Jesus, and trying to walk in the straight and narrow way. I feel my weakness but have his promise that sufficient for the day shall thy strength be, and he is able and willing to fulfill his promises. Surely God's Word is sufficient for us, if not to whom shall we go? Not to mortal man for then we have a division of faith which is contrary to God's Word. We can only trust in him, for Jesus prays, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy Word is truth."

May we all so live that we may inherit all things and enter through the gates into the city, is the prayer of one who hopes for eternal life.

CARRIE E. HILSABECK.

Dear Restitution:

I have read the many good letters from the scattered and isolated brethren and sisters here and there all over the world, and I feel it devolving upon me to say something for my Master, and I can say, that I love the blessed Lord for what he has done for me. I am contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, although I have many hard trials, and temptations, and troubles to contend with, but I would not give up my hope for all this world. I thank the blessed Lord that he ever opened my eyes to the truth, and gave me light to understand it. I am determined to fight on the good fight of faith until I win the crown and reign with Jesus in his coming kingdom.

I ask all your prayers that I may hold out faithful, and meet and clasp hands with the dear brothers and sisters at the resurrection morn.

I will send money to renew my subscription.

Yours in the hope of the coming kingdom of Christ.

B. W. REESE.

Nebraska.

Editor Restitution:

I too would contribute my mite of testimony. How blessed it is to know that there are others longing for the hope of Israel—together with you all. The coming of Jesus and the establishment of his kingdom is the longing desire of my heart. Even if I should fail to hear the King say, "Come ye blessed," I can see it is just what the world most needs.

I am now past my 70th mile stone towards the end of this life, and in the 52nd in the race for that which is held out as a hope. Forty-five years of that time I have believed in the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus Anointed.

Believing the following will give you pleasure, as it has myself. About 18 miles northeast of Brookfield we have a church of over fifty members, and nearly every time we have preaching some one is baptized in the faith. Bro. Waller visits them once a month, and is doing good work in two other places, and has or will soon organize a church in one or more localities. The churches are in the country among well to do farmers. I am very much interested for them.

Yours in the one faith.

Editor Restitution:

I will write a few lines to thank you for sending me the paper so long after it was due. Now please find $1.50 to pay for the year '93. I will try to send you more soon. I will try to get one subscriber at least for the paper. I am giving them out and trying to get the people to see the truth. We are isolated from all of like faith. We have no preaching but the paper and our Bible. We are quite lonely, husband and I being the only ones of the Abrahamic faith. Oh how I like to read the letters from the dear ones. It does us so much good. We must be vigilant in the Master's cause. May we all strive to double our diligence in the cause of truth and duty. Do more good, pray more, and so have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God's dear Son, is my praper.

From your Sister waiting for our King to come and give us eternal life in his kingdom.

A. G. WINCHESTER.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

Isolated as I have been for the last eight years with my little family, I have many ups and downs in this cruel world. As my family is now almost grown, I want to go some locality where my children can associate with those of the one faith, and will try to do so in the spring.

I have read with interest the Love Feast letters, and it brings to my mind the good meetings of long ago in Kansas. I see Bro. Foore is still left of the many who were present at those meetings. Alas! Many of them have gone to the silent tomb. Bro. Prime is still battling for the truth. Hold out faithful to the end and you will receive a crown of life that fadeth not away. Brother Elton, sorrow not as those that have no hope, for if we believe Jesus died and rose again them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Sister Emma I sympathize with you in the loss of your dear mother but be thankful that you have one parent left. A few more days of weeping and mourning and our sorrows will be ended. Soon the redeemed will come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy. When all the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him for the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is governor among the nations. Even so come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

I remain as ever your sister.

Editor Restitution:

Inclosed is my remittance for another year in which I have been somewhat tardy. I have been pleased with the testimonies that are appearing in THE RESTITUTION. "Dust I am, and unto dust shall I return." Deplorable, humiliating condition. Now for the release. "For there is no name given under heaven whereby we can be saved except the name of Jesus the Anointed One. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. But if there be no resurrection of the dead then is Christ not risen. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." How important, how necessary, the resurrection of Jesus and our own in order to obtain eternal life. Brethren, I want a part in the first resurrection, that is my hope, my desire.

B. F. EICHOLTZ.

Bro. Underwood:

As my subscription has expired please find enclosed $1.50 to pay for the paper for one year. I have taken the paper for over twenty years and it would be hard to do without it as it is all the preaching we have here. I once knew how good it was to live where the gospel was preached. I will sing praises to my God while I have my being, because I have been made to understand the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Pray for me that I may be found faithful, to the cause we so dearly love. My prayer is, that we may meet in the kingdom where Jesus the well beloved Son, our great Advocate and Friend, whom we so much desire to see. Send him back to this earth again. Give thy people repentance towards thee. May they exercise faith in the Lord Jesus, and thus let seasons of refreshing come from the presence of the Lord. Oh let him return and build, raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down. O Father let the time of restitution begin. Lord hide us from the hour of trial, call us to the secret chamber, hide us as it were for a little season till thy indignation be past. Come Lord unto those of us who are looking for thee, without a sin offering to salvation, for well we know that salvation is of thee. And oh, that we may all be united as good soldiers, fight the good fight of faith, that we may have everlasting life, and be able to enter the kingdom where we shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and when the glory of God shall fill the whole earth as the waters now cover the mighty deep. May we ever be with the Lord singing praises to God is my earnest prayer.

SARAH HARLACK.

Dear brothers and sisters:

While you have been enjoying yourselves in writing, I have been enjoying myself in reading and thinking of the pleasure of hearing from each other, and thinking of how much more enjoyment there will be when Christ comes and we get home where there will be no more sorrow nor sin to disturb us. I was thinking that if there were to be a love feast, that we expect there would be some expenses to meet, and was thinking that if we would each one send in our mite as God has prospered us, that THE RESTITUTION might be sent to those who are not able to pay for it, or for some other urgent cause, would we not feel as though the feast had been spent in a way that God would approve of? Would we not feel as though we had done our duty? To begin with, I will enclose a check of $10.00, which I will leave for the Editor to use as he sees best. For fear of being lengthy, I will close. Love to all.

MRS. H. L. VICKERY.

Dear Restitution:

I have been thinking for some time that I would say a few words in the feast columns, but have put it off quite a while. I have been somewhat stirred up while listening to the four discourses preached by Brother D. M. Hudler, in the Sunny Side School-house, near Adeline, and I hope it is seed sown in good ground. Bro. Hudler is an able speaker, knowing well how to handle the sword, wielding it to make the truth show brilliant and so plain that any child can understand it. There seemed to be a good interest manifested, and we hope it wont be long till he can make us another visit, as there seems to be an opening for good to be done here. Bro. Hudler is a man that ought to be kept in the field all the time. I wish the brethren of Northern Illinois would wake up to a sense of their duty toward God and man, and spare enough of this world's goods to do this. Brethren, let us awake out of our slothful slumber, for the time is soon coming when it will be told in our ears the solemn sayings of the Apostle James v. 1, 2, 3. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl, for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments motheaten, your gold and silver is cankered; and the rest of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days."

Oh let us work and live that instead of this solemn sentence, we may hear, "Well done thou good and faithful servant enter into the joys of thy Lord."

Brethren, there is a big work for us to do. If we cannot sing like angels, if we cannot preach like Paul, we can give the widow's mite and comfort one another with kind words, and not do as is spoken in James iii. beginning at the 13th verse. "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? Let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envyings and strife in your hearts, glory not and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy, and the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."

Dear brothers and sisters, let us shun the sins that doth so easily beset us, the love of evil speaking of each other, and the love of money. Let us spend it more for the cause of Christ, so we may be among them that make peace, that we may obtain a crown of righteousness and gain an entrance in his everlasting kingdom, is the sincere prayer of your sister in Christ.

MRS. M. E. LINDSAY.

Near and Afar.

The sails we see on the ocean
  Are as white as white can be,
But never one in the harbor
  As white as the sails at sea.

And the clouds that crown the mountain
  With purple and gold delight,
Turn to cold gray mist and vapor
  Ere we reach half its height.

Stately and fair the vessel
  That comes not near our beach;
Stately and grand the mountain
  Whose height we may never reach.

O, distance, thou fair enchantress
  Still hold in thy magic veil
The glory of far-off mountains,
  The gleam of the far-off sail!

Saved by Hope.

A disciple of Christ is expected to be always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of the hope that is in him with meekness and fear. 1 Peter iii. 5. It is, therefore, created by evidence that we can appeal to the understanding of our fellow creatures with.

Three points of character are essential to ensure our acceptance by Christ: Faith, Hope and Love—the reality of the symbols, the cross, anchor and heart. Faith is the substance of things hoped for (Heb. xi. 1), and faith works by love and purifies the heart. These form a threefold cord which is not quickly broken—a lifeline to the rock of our refuge. We know that without faith it is impossible to please God, and faith is produced by hope, therefore hope is just as necessary for Divine favor. Hence, the apostle says, "We are saved by hope." Rom. viii. 24. Can a stronger word be used to show the value of hope to us? Saved or lost! Anyone must experience what it is to be saved from some deadly peril to fully appreciate what is meant by the word. But hope that is seen is not hope; "For what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for." Hope is expectation, earnest desire. We do not hope for that which we already possess. Therefore, those who say they have eternal life do not hope for it, because they consider they are already in possession of it. "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." We long for immortality because we see it not in ourselves or any of our fellow creatures.

But when Paul said "We are saved by hope," was he alluding to all the hopes which the various sections of religious professors throughout the world possess today? No, for he said to the disciples at Ephesus (iv. 4) "Ye are called in one hope of your calling." He is then referring to a certain definite hope, and informs us the source from which it is derived. Rom. xv. 4. "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope." These Scriptures are the writings of Moses and the prophets, so that if any one has a hope which has not been produced by a study of these writings, it is not the one hope by which we are saved.

But some may say, there appears to be more than one hope even in the Scriptures. 1 Thess. v. 8, Hope of salvation; 1 Tim. i. 1, Christ Jesus our hope; Titus i. 2, Hope of eternal life; Titus ii. 13, Blessed hope; Gal. v. 5, Hope of righteousness. These are only various ways of expressing the different features of the one hope, called in Coloss. i. 23, The hope of the Gospel. This, Paul says, is Christ in you (Christ's disciples from among the Gentiles) the hope of glory, v. 27. If we were to enquire to-day of all the various sects in this country if they have this hope of glory in them, I have no doubt that they would all reply in the affirmative. But if you apply the test, and enquire if their hope agrees with that of Paul as regards their dead friends, a defect is discovered at once. 1 Thess. iv. 13. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him from the dead at his appearing." 1 Cor. xv. 23. Paul in comforting these members of Christ, does not say their dead brethren are in heaven or paradise, but that they are asleep—sleeping the sleep of death; from which they will be awakened by the trump of God, and arise from their graves. Others who do not come within the scope of this limited consolation have really no hope. An attempt is made to make Paul contradict himself by quoting Coloss. i. 5, "For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel," as evidence that the righteous are going to heaven. But it is in vain, for the hope may be laid up for us in heaven, and yet we need not go there to obtain it; for it can be brought unto us. Jesus Christ is our hope, because all the promises of God are in him, yea and amen; and he is at present in heaven. The question is, are we going to him, or is he coming to us? Peter answers it after saying what is frequently advanced as another proof of heaven being our future abode:—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us."

Now for the answers:—"Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter i. 3, 4, 13.

This aspect of the hope alone is sufficient to show how few there are possessed of it. It is called the hope of salvation, because those who retain it are promised deliverance from an eternal grave. Hence it is also the hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the ages of the law in promising Abraham an internal inheritance. It is the hope of glory, because those who are saved will share in the honor and glory of the coming age. Rev. xx. 4. Jesus Christ our hope, because the salvation and glory of the age to come is in him. 2 Tim. ii. 10.

The life of the saints is now hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 3. The grace of God which bringeth salvation is the blessed hope, for it is by his grace, or favor in Christ Jesus, that we are saved. John ii. 11, Eph. ii. 8. It is the hope of righteousness, because with the salvation we, according to God's promise, look for a new order of things, wherein dwelleth righteousness. 2 Peter iii. 13. It is apparent, then, from the testimony advanced, that the hope of the saints is, to participate with Christ in the life and glory of God in the future age, or kingdom of God. Paul attaches to this hope the resurrection (Acts xxiii. 6), because the majority of those who realize it will be raised from the dead to enter upon it, having already passed away. Therefore Jesus says, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more; for they are equals unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Luke xx. 35.

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are sons of God. ("The Spirit is the truth," 1 John v. 6). And if we are sons, then are we heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation (or hope) of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. viii. The creature is man, and he was made subject to vanity in being made of the earth, earthly, like the rest of the animal creation. As Solomon declares, all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Eccles. iii. 19. So that man is of a few days, he cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not. Job xiv. It is of no use to say that this only refers to the body, it is the creature life and body, for James says—"What is your life, or cycle of existence? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James iv. 14.—Man was made thus ephemeral that he might by earnest aspiration for the higher nature possessed by the angels, look up to God, and by the exercise of the upper organs of his cranium, develop that character of Divine excellence which should be accounted worthy of permanent and glorious existence.

"Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body." This manifestation of the sons of God in glory will be realized by the saints at the appearing of Christ; hence, as Paul says, our citizenship is now in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Phil. iii. 20. This mortal must put on immortality, this corruptible must put on incorruption. Death will then be swallowed up in victory.

John, writing to the brethren, says—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John iii. 2. We rejoice in hope of the glory of God based upon what he has promised in his message. This Paul terms the Hope of Israel, because it pertains to that nation, being the hope of the promise made of God unto their fathers. Acts xxvi. 6. This promise consists of the everlasting possession of the land of Canaan by Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, at the time when their seed, the Messiah, should rule the world; when Abraham should be a father of many nations, who should be blessed in him and his seed. It was ratified by an oath. For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swear by himself. For God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel confirmed it by an oath. That by two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest for ever. Heb. vi. The apostle is writing to those who have put on Christ in baptism, and being in Christ, are Abraham's seed, and joint heirs of the promise. Gal. iii. 27-29. All those who have not embraced this hope of Abraham and his children are in the state described by Paul in his letters to the Ephesians (ii. 11), Gentiles in the flesh. At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.

Modern Christians laugh at the idea of the commonwealth of Israel having anything to do with salvation in Christ; why, they say, it was broken up and done with long enough ago. But it has to do with it, notwithstanding all that may be said to the contrary, for it is God's Kingdom. His purpose in the past was with that nation; its present dismembered and scattered state is his work; and it his determination in the near future to gather the fragments together, and rebuild it in Palestine, on a more glorious and permanent scale. And as for the covenants of promise, they are as ignorant and faithless of them as if the Bible did not mention them; and the significant hint that they are without hope because they are aliens and strangers to these things, appears so absurd that in advocating it we are considered fanatics. They think they have a better hope, but it has been enjoyed by all nations in times of ignorance, from the savage upwards; and no matter how fervently they may cherish it, it is like the baseless fabric of a vision, for the hypocrite's hope shall perish, the hope of the wicked is like a puff of breath. Job.

When we consider the works of God, bearing witness to his infinite wisdom and power, we can hardly imagine it possible for a man who is himself one of them, and existing in the Deity, to be Godless—living without God in the world, and yet there are myriads even in this country who are in this condition.

When the covenants of promise are understood and believed, and Christ has been put on in baptism, then Paul, in writing to such at Ephesus, says—"But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ. Now therefore ye are no more strangers (to the covenants of promise) and foreigners (to the commonwealth of Israel) but fellow citizens (of the Kingdom of God) with the saints, and of the household of God." Ephes. ii. 13, 19.

The hope must be retained in patience till the promised salvation is revealed, for it is the proof in the day of judgment, that we are one of the living stones of the house of God and Christ. The words of the apostle are to this effect in Hebrews iii. 6, 14—"But Christ as Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." "To you who are still without and desire to understand, believe, and obey the truth: we say in conclusion, may the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, give unto you the spirit of wisdom, and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." Ephes. i. 17, 18.

Is Rev. xi. Fulfilled? No. 2.

In our last article we considered the length of time the "Gentiles" would tread down the "holy city," we find spoken of in verse 2. The topic for this issue will be the "two witnesses" referred to in verse 3. The time for the beginning and ending of their witness will be just a "thousand two hundred and three score days," which is "forty and two months." Many who hold to a fulfilment of the prophecy of the "two witnesses" being in the past, name the Old and New Testaments as the witnesses. Such interpreters do not adhere close to "the words of the prophecy of this book," but change the "thousand two hundred and three score days," to 1260 years. But the above change does not help their case in the least. If the two testaments are the "two witnesses," they must commence to witness as they appear. The New Testament was completed about A. D. 65, and 1260 years from that date, would end in 1325. But thank God, they did not cease to testify at that date, but are still telling the good old story. How much better it would be to cling close to "the words of the prophecy of this book," and then we would be able to give interpretations more in harmony with common sense. They tell us clearly what the "two witness" are, listen:

"And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth."

Here we find that the sacred "words" of this prophecy, affirm the "two witnesses" are "two prophets." Who has a right to change the above sacred words, by a declaration that they are "two books?" Prophets were men chosen of God, through whom the words forming the two books came to men. In verse 4, they are called "two olive trees"—"These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth."

Compare this with Zech iv. 11-14: "Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof? And I answered again and said unto him, What be these two olive branches which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves? And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord. Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth."

Certainly, no one can honestly compare these two passages, without being convinced beyond a doubt that they both relate to the same characters. They are "two anointed ones," chosen "oil" bearers from God, they "empty the golden oil out of themselves." Remember five of the foolish virgins were not oil bearers, they had no "golden oil" to empty out of themselves, consequently they were not prepared to meet their Lord. The margin calls the "two anointed ones, "sons of oil," and they "empty golden oil out of themselves," "golden oil" signifies something very precious. Possibly the "golden" message from God. There is food for deep and precious thought in this Scripture. Think about it, precious sons and daughters of God.

At this time the "two anointed ones,"—the "two witnesses"—the "two prophets," were standing "by the Lord of the whole earth." The New Testament did not exist at this date, consequently could not have been one of the "two witnesses."

Verse 6. gives some of the powers of the "two witnesses:" "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will."

God's prophets of old exercised these very powers, and these "two prophets," when they appear, will exercise the same powers, "as often as they will." The power of "will," relates to persons, and not to inanimate books. I wish now to call special attention to verse 7, as that verse proves that the "two witnesses," have not yet "finished their testimony:" "And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them."

Notice that it is "when they shall have finished their testimony," that "the beast that ascendeth out of the abyss, shall make war with them, and shall overcome them, and kill them," (not kill the immortal Word of God). The facts are, that this ten horned beast is still in the abyss. It is "when," it ascends out of the abyss, that it will "make war," upon, "overcome," and "kill" the "two witnesses," the "two prophets," the "two anointed ones," the "sons of oil."

Verse 8-12, relates how the followers of antichrist will misuse their dead bodies, and records the triumphant resurrection of the "two prophets" from the dead.

We have no historic record of the beast ascending out of the abyss, and its conflict with the "two prophets," and the wonderful chain of event connected therewith.

Rev. xiii. 1, Speaks of the beasts' reappearance. Verse 2 shows that when it appears, it will bear the characteristics of the three other beasts, which preceded it, viz: the "lion," "bear," and "leopard." "And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority."

This is virtually the reconstruction of the image of Daniel, and this must in a sense be restored. See Dan. ii. 34, 35: "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer thrashing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

As you see, the stone strikes the "image upon his feet," and not the feet alone, with all the rest of the image gone. Then again, in verse 35, we find that it is the "iron," "clay," "brass," "silver" and "gold," that are "broken to pieces together [illegible] out of the "abyss," all these world-powers will be centralized in it, as shown by Rev. xiii. 2. And this is the time he persecutes the "two witnesses," so you see that the part relating to the "two witnesses" of Rev. xi., must stilll be future. Rev. xiii. 5-7 speaks of the blasphemous character of the reappeared beast, and how it will make war with the saints and prevail against them for "forty and two months," the same length of time the "two witnesses" prophesy.

Now turn to Dan. vii. 25, and we have an exact counterpart of Rev. xiii. 5-8; they are "given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time,"—forty and two months, or three years and a half.

Please notice that it is the reappeared beast representing the "lion," "leopard" and "bear," that is to continue "Forty and two months," and you must see that it wont do to change the "words of the prophecy of this book," to 1260 years, as the beast is still in the abyss.

I apprehend that this "forty and two month" period, will be the time of the "great tribulation," during which the "two witnesses," will testify after the removal of the true and tried ones.

This is a prolific topic, but I trust I have given enough to show that Rev. xi. is not yet fulfilled.

May God grant that we may be both faithful to ourselves, and to his Holy Word, and not change it to suit a theory, but test all theories squarely and fairly by the Word.

This exposition may not suit the brother asking the question, but nevertheless I have given my honest convictions, from an honest study of God's Word.

Signs.

There are many indications within the notice of us all, that portend the close of this age, and though visible to every one "having eyes that see" yet we who reside in large cities, like Chicago, where in a few hours conditions sometimes develop that startle all mankind, are perhaps closer to the fluttering pulse of this dying world. We are in the midst of many churches. We need to travel but a few squares in any direction before reaching some lofty pile of masonry, which according to the rites of the creed which erected it, has been duly dedicated to the service of God. We are becoming aware that these people are pleased to place a very elastic construction on the meaning of "the service of God."

They claim a service of God in delivering a sermon, so-called, on such subjects as these, "Choosing a wife." "What the young ladies think of the young men." "Abraham Lincoln." "Parallels in the Bible and the Koran." These I could multiply indefinitely, as any who will consult our Sunday papers will see. I herewith append a notice of exercises which took place March 6th, in one of our churches and which speaks loudly for itself. "Free Trade vs Protection, at Warren Avenue Congregational Church, Cor. of Albany and Warren Av. Tuesday Evening March 6th, 1894, under auspices of Kings Sons Society. Is this the gospel? We know better. It means to us that the time of great trouble is nearing rapidly. Oh what a glorious consummation follows that time of trouble. "As the lightning shineth out of the east unto the west." When the world is rocking in the throes of dissolution and the nations are reeking in blood and disaster, a halt will be called, all the world will be dazed by the sublime flashing of the presence of the King of kings, who shall come with power and glory, the tide of bloodshed and distress will be rolled back, the waves of the sea of sin will be stilled as were the waves of Galilee by him whose [illegible] to [illegible] —Brethren, be ye [illegible] his coming.

Sabbath Versus Bible.

For the benefit of those not yet satisfied as to whether they ought to keep the seventh day Sabbath or not.

In the first place we will say the Sabbath was not given to any one to keep as a rest day, for twenty-five hundred years after creation, and was then given with the law and ten commandment covenant, and was given to the children of the bond woman, their parents having died in Egyptian bondage.

"Wherefore, she said unto Abraham, cast out this bond woman and her son; for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac." Gen. xxi. 10. "Now ye brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise." Gal. iv. 22-31. We find the ten commandments given to the Jews, or fleshly Israel, and I defy any one to prove by the Bible, that the Sabbath was ever given to any but fleshly Israel, and they were literal descendants of Jacob. Who are Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God and the promises. Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen. Not as though the Word of God had taken none effect, for they are not all Israel, which are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called, that is, they which are the children of the flesh. These are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed. Rom. ix. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, for he is not a Jew which is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men but of God. Rom. ii. 28, 29.

We are of the woman and were never in bondage, and as the children of the free-woman, and as such, we never had a seventh day Sabbath given to us. We are under the law of Christ. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Gal. vi. 2.

1 Cor. ix. 21, says, "If ye love me keep my commandments."

St. John xiv. 15, 21. "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love." Chap. xv. 10.

It seems that any one with one eye open can see that we are not under the law containing the seventh day Sabbath. All the one ever given, was given to fleshly Israel. We are under the Gospel, and I feel like mixing some of it right in here. "And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 2. "And they departed and went through the towns preaching the gospel." Verse 6.

The disciples certainly preached what he commanded them to preach.

We learn that preaching the kingdom is preaching the gospel, which Paul says, "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (the gospel.) Rom. i. 16.

"And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16.

"But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptised both men and women."

We find that to preach the gospel is to preach the kingdom of God. And if we believe the gospel and tarry not, but arise and be baptised, we have the promise of salvation, and no ten commandments or seventh day mixed in with it. I bring in the gospel to show more plainly that we get pardon for past sins without keeping the seventh day Sabbath.

What is Conversion?

Without going into long detail, the Apostle Paul says, "be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," so conversion is really and truly a mental transformation. A sorrow for past life, and a determination by the grace of God, to lead a new life; for we are told that "Godly sorrow worketh repentence to salvation." But to call the new birth, conversion, is in direct contravention of all the New Testament language about conversion. It is simply a monstrous violation of the use of words and thought.

What then is it to be born again?

The answer is of the utmost importance; for Jesus told Nicodemus "except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Our Savior put the subject in the most concrete form possible.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh."
"That which is born of the spirit is spirit."

What then is it to be born of the spirit, is a question of paramount importance; and has troubled many a D. D., and caused him to blunder.

We find in Col. i. 15, speaking of Christ, these words, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." How is he the first born of every creature? is answered in the 18th verse. "He is the head of the body the church, who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, that in all things he might have the preeminence."

We find in Acts xxvi. 23, that, "Christ should suffer and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead." Rev. i. 5, "And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness and the first begotten of the dead."

In Rev. iii. 14, he is called "the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Of course this means the new creation, the re-generation. What then, but that the resurrection constitutes the new birth, and that Christ "was the first-born from the dead."

It follows then, that the Apostle Paul's effort to describe the resurrection, describes the mode of the new birth. In 1 Cor. xv. 42, "So also is the resurrection of the dead, it is sown in corruption, it is raised (or born) in incorruption," v. 43, it is sown in dishonor, it is raised (or born) in glory, it is sown in weakness, it is raised (or born) in power. v., 54 it is sown a natural body, it is raised (or born) a spiritual body."

"There is a natural body"—that natural body, or body of flesh was born of flesh—"There is a spiritual body," that spiritual body was born of the spirit, at the resurrection. 45, "The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening (or life giving) spirit." How clear!

"How be it, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual." v. 49, "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we also shall bear the image of the heavenly."

In v. 50 the apostle confirms the assertion of our Savior that "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Must be born again from above, be born again of the spirit, at the resurrection.

Verse 53, "For this corruption must put on incorruption," by a new birth; born of the spirit, at the re-generation, when he "shall make all things new."—Then this mortal must—and will—put on, or become immortal.

The same apostle, makes it equallly plain what it is, "to be born of water." Rom. vi. 1 to 10. Baptism is the emblem of the resurrection; baptism represents death, burial and resurrection. "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him; knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Verse 4 is very explicit. "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: but like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Notice in particular the big "For" in v. 5, of Paul's great argument, "Planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be in the likeness of his resurrection." To comment on these veres would be as vain as to "gild fine gold, or to paint the lily."

That the disciples, and apostles should enlarge and amplify the gospel is in accordance with our Savior's promise in John xiv. 12, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

WM. DRESSER.

Learning is like Scanderbeg's sword, either good or bad, according to him that hath it; an excellent weapon if well used, otherwise like a sharp razor in the hand of a child.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

Sow seed. Send THE RESTITUTION to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Change of Schedule on the Pennsylvania Lines.

A change in the schedule of passenger trains on the Pennsylvania Lines went into effect Sunday, March 11. Under the new schedule the time of trains at Plymouth, Ind., is as follows:

Depart for the west No. 15 at 5:12 A. M. No. 39 at 1:55 P. M. No. 9 at 6:10 P. M.

Depart for the east No. 4 at 2:38 A. M., No. 20 at 10:35 A. M., No. 8 at 7:41 P. M., Local East at 7:30 A. M.

For the East or West.

Take the Nickel Plate Road. Three trains in each direction daily except Sunday. Two daily through trains between Chicago, Buffalo, New York and Boston. All trains stop at Argos. Lowest rates on the Nickel Plate Road.

Has your subscription expired? If so, don't let it remain so.

Do you want them?

"Future Probation, is that awaiting any of the unrighteous?" A book of 118 pages, by Wm. Glen Moncrieff. Reduced from 25c to 12c post paid. $1.20 per dozen. Send to this office for them.

Connection at Argos.

Address of Treasurer of Ladies Evangelical Aid Society, Miss Emma Jackman, Box 381, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Rates to California greatly reduced via Pennsylvania Lines. The Midwinter Fair at San Francisco and the numerous other attractions in the wonderland beyond the Rocky Mountains can be enjoyed by persons of limited means as the round trip rate has again been materially reduced via of Pennsylvania Lines. Passengers can select any of the several routes from Chicago and St. Louis and the return limit is ample for a satisfactory sojourn. All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

California in three & one-half days.

From the snow-clad regions of the East to the delightful semi-tropical climate of California is a matter of only a few days' journey if the North-Western Line is used for the trip. Palace Drawing Room Sleeping Cars leave Chicago daily and run through to California without change, covering the distance in the marvelously short time of three and one-half days, and all meals en route are served in dining cars. Daily Tourist Sleeping Car service is also maintained by this line between Chicago and San Francisco and Los Angeles, and every Thursday the party is personally conducted by an experienced excursion manager. Completely equipped berths in Tourist Sleepers are furnished at a cost of only $3.00 each from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, thus affording a most favorable opportunity for making the journey in a comfortable and at the same time economical manner. Variable route excursion tickets, taking in all principal points of interest, are sold at exceedingly low rates. Illustrated pamphlets descriptive of the Mid-Winter Fair and full information concerning rates, routes, etc., will be mailed free upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill., if you mention this publication.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund." please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Poetry.

A Prayer.

Lord speak to me that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As thou hast sought so let me seek
Thy erring children lost and lone.

O lead me Lord that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet,
O feed me Lord that I may feed
Thy hungering ones with manna sweet.

O teach me Lord that I may teach
The precious things thou dost impart,
And wing the words that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart.

O strengthen me that while I stand
Firm on the rock and strong in thee
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers in life's troubled sea.

Oh give thine own sweet rest to me
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season as from Thee
To weary ones in needful hour.

O use me Lord, use even me,
Just as thou wilt and when, and where,
Until thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, thy joy, thy glory share.

Irrelevant Conclusion.

"For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God." Rom. ii. 28, 29.

Many expositors conclude from this language that Paul meant to include Gentile Christians under the name Jew, that all who are circumcised in heart, in the spirit are entitled to this name. This is a false conclusion and leads to erroneous views of Old Testament prophecy in reference to God's chosen people, or the part of them which bore the name Judah, from the time of the division into two distinct nations under Rehoboam and Jeroboam, the former ruling two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, and the latter ruling ten tribes. Jew is a corruption of Judah and occurs first in the book of Esther and dates from the Babylonian captivity. In the days of our Savior the name in the plural form was quite common. Jesus himself was called King of the Jews. The name Jew or Jews nowhere in the New Testament applies to Gentile Christians, and the name Judah nowhere in Old Testament prophecy and promise applies to the church of this dispensation. If there is such application I have never in more than forty years of study, found these names so used. "Judah" does not mean the Christian church, nor "Jew" mean Gentile Christian. And further the name Israel is not used to denote Gentile Christians. 1st, in reference to the text at the head of this article, it does not mean that the name Jew does not apply to the natural seed (the two tribes) for Paul himself in this 2nd chap. does apply it to his own countrymen who were not Christians, and whose circumcision was only in the flesh. Hear him: "Behold thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law; and makest thy boast of God." v. 17. Again writing under the dictation of the Spirit, "The Jews require a sign, and the preaching of Christ crucified was unto the Jews a stumbling block." 1 Cor. ii. 22, 23. 2nd, the text does not teach that the Jews as the natural seed will never be blessed jointly with the ten tribes of Israel when both houses shall constitute one nation upon the mountains of Israel, and one king be king to them all, (Ezek. xxxvii. 22) as symbolized by the two sticks in the hand of the prophet.

These same expositors who pervert the text in dispute and play havoc with Old Testament prophecies, which in all fairness of exposition abound with blessings and promise to the twelve tribes unconditionally, are quite willing that wherever we find curses, and captivity, and spoliation written against Judah and Israel these prophecies refer of course to the natural seed. How unfair! But says the objector, Paul says "He is not a Jew which is one (a Jew) outwardly." If this statement is to be taken in the absolutely literal sense, then Paul contradicts himself and also inspired history which calls these same legalists Jews, though destitute of any change of heart. The first verse of the next chapter is a question about this same keeper of the law. "What advantage then hath the Jew?" so we find Paul calling him a Jew. Well, well says the objector, what does he mean by saying he is not a Jew which is one (i. e. a Jew) outwardly? I assure you he is not affirming that a Gentile is a Jew; but he is affirming in some sense that a Jew is not a Jew, and in the 29 v. affirming that a Jew is a Jew. This will illustrate the apostle's meaning. If in my presence John Jones should boast of being a man and of what he had done morally, socially, and physically: boast of his inheritance by birth and blood; boast of his educational advantages, and even boast of his religion; but in a few days I should learn that this same John Jones had cruelly abused his horse, savagely kicked a harmless dog, maltreated an innocent child, and insulted pure womanhood I would say this man with all his claims to manhood is not a man—but that man is a man who is humane to animals, tender to childhood, courteous, considerate and gallant in the presence of women. This man is worthy of the name man; the other is not; he is only an ugly brute. I have called Jones a man, and said he was not a man. Have I contradicted myself? No, from one standpoint, Paul could say a Jew is not a Jew, and from another a Jew is a Jew. The language of Paul is no warrant for applying the name Jew and Israel to gospel believers irrespective of blood, nationality and religion. When we find Paul using the name Jew he means one who belonged nationally to the two tribes Judah and Benjamin. This fact, the text under consideration does not set aside. And when reading the prophecies of the Old Testament, and we find the name Judah, and find blessings connected with it let us not conclude the prophet had in mind Gentile Christians. Some writers use "Jew" and "Hebrew" as interchangable names. The latter is the older and more comprehensive name being first applied to Abraham and in the time of Joseph and later, to any of the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob. All Jews were Hebrews, but all Hebrews were not Jews.

Conference Report.

Our conference which convened at Attica, Ind., Friday before the third Sunday in February, was carried on over the two following Sundays. Bros. T. E. Adams and J. F. Prime were with us and conducted the meetings throughout the entire conference. Bro. Prime is an earnest worker and studies to rightly divide the word of truth. He very ably showed us, by letting the Bible be its own interpreter, that man is mortal, that he has the promise of immortality only on conditions; that the Bible reveals three worlds, and in order to understand any portion of Scripture we must know to which world or age it applies; that every good and perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights, and we do not have to go up after them; that the Lord's commission to his disciples was to preach the gospel to every creature; and that this commission included four things, viz: preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, repentance and remission of sins, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he (Christ) had commanded them (the disciples), and that through faith as a result of the fulfilment of this commission, we, who gladly hear the word, and treasuring it up in good and honest hearts, bring forth fruits unto holiness, shall be saved." He also showed that the gospel was embodied in the covenants of promise, and that the Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith preached before the gospel unto Abraham.

Brother T. E. Adams very ably showed us by the Scriptures, that while the punishment which God would inflict on the finally impenitent was an everlasting punishment, it did not follow that that punishment would be everlasting torment; and that directly contrary to the everlasting torment theory, the Scriptures taught that the wicked should be cut off, should perish, should be as though they had not been; and should consume away and be as ashes under the feet of the righteous. He also showed by the Scriptures that Christ, the great antitype of the paschal lamb, must needs, and did die as literally as the lamb; that he poured out his soul unto death; that he made his soul an offering for sin; that he went down into hades, hell or the grave; and that we must believe that he died before we can believe that he rose from the dead; and we must believe that he rose from the dead, before we can hope for a resurrection from the dead. Since a resurrection of the dead is indispensible to the fulfilment of the gospel which was preached unto Abraham (and there is but one gospel), and since salvation is dependent on a belief in the gospel, it is of paramount importance that we believe that Christ died according to the Scriptures. Bro. Adams is a very close and able reasoner, and received a good hearing, as did also Bro. Prime. The meetings were fairly well attended considering the threatening aspect of the weather, and the very bad condition of the roads; no conference work was done, however, owing to the absence of the brethren from other points.

Brothers Russel and A. Chaplin were with us on Friday before the 4th Sunday, but Brother Russel taking sick, was obliged to go home the next day. Brother Chaplin staid with us to the close of the meeting and gave us valuable aid in singing and encouraging words. Several letters of greeting were received from brethren and sisters from abroad, who were unable to attend owing to the weather.

All the brothers and sisters attending the meetings gave witness to their oneness of faith by testifying to their hopes, which all centered in the promised soon coming kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Sister Merritt of Anthony and Sister Starkey of Sharon were with us the last Sunday of the conference. Sister Sulivan of Goss Station was also with us during the entire conference. The interest during the entire meeting was very good, and although no new conversions to the truth were made we cannot but believe that God's Word, so clearly presented, and so attentively listened to, will yet bear fruit in some good soil unto everlasting life. Yours in hope of eternal life in the soon coming kingdom.

S. C. Oliver.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Conference assembled:

As I could not be with you personally, I thought I could express to you through the medium of the pen my heart's desire and prayer in your behalf. As I think over the past three months, I see many things that I think we should be thankful for. Thankful that some have been led to a knowledge of the truth, and accepted Christ as the Captain of their salvation. Thankful for life, health, and many blessings that we are surrounded with. Truly love and mercy has followed us all along our pilgrimage, and how we should rejoice and thank God, that again, some of us at least, can gather in a conference assembly. I sometimes fear that we do not appreciate these little gatherings in Jesus' name as we should. How refreshing when tempest-tossed, sorrowful, and distressed, to find a refuge in these quiet resting places. To meet with those of like precious faith, and sing together the beautiful songs of Zion, tell to a sympathetic friend our hopes and fears, talk of the precious promises God has given us, and of his great love toward us. As I write, these words impress themselves upon my mind "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God."

Brethren and sisters, now we should prize this high calling in Christ Jesus. That we are the children of God, should be the turning point in our every action, that all we do and say may be for the glory of him who manifested his love toward us in sending his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Truly "God is love," and how we his children, need that tender protecting love and care. And if God has so loved us, we should cultivate the same spirit, toward each other, for if we love one another hereby know we, that we dwell in him and he in us, because he has given us of his spirit. The times in which we live are perilous times; but the banquet table of the Lord is yet spread, where we can feast daily upon the precious promises and truths found in his Word, so let us stand firm with our banner unfurled because of the truth. Having on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one. The foundation is sure, built upon the solid rock. Christ Jesus, he is our refuge and strength, and a very present help in time of trouble.

"Yes, we have an anchor that keeps the soul,
Steadfast and sure while the billows roll,
Fastened to the rock which cannot be moved,
Grounded firm and deep in the Savior's love."

And while we hold to the line of promise that is anchored within the vail, whither the forerunner for us has entered, even Jesus, and we the believing children are waiting and watching for his return, let us not sleep as do others. It is true that the outlook at times is discouraging; but the command is onward, ever onward. There is no time to stand still, occupy until I come, the Savior said. We have a comforting thought, that if we go forth weeping bearing the precious seed, we shall doubtless return with gladness, bringing in the sheaves. The time of our redemption draweth nigh, when we will each be rewarded as our work has been. May we not be found wanting. I trust that this gathering in the name of Jesus may redound to his glory and that you all may be blessed in your efforts in his name, and finally when life's tempests are calmed, and Jesus the life giver and King, returns to bless his people, may you be permitted to be robed in the garment of immortality, and receive the crown of life. May the God of peace make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well, pleasing in his sight. Your sister in Christ.

Bible Language.

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." Eph. iv. 29.

In this little article, I wish to say, that when we speak of Bible things, we should express ourselves in Bible terms. For instance, say the first day of the week, instead of Sunday.

The word Sunday, implies idol worship; or a day dedicated to the sun.

The First day of the week besides being the Bible word, carries with it a weight of faith and knowledge, that may be a light to many. It is the day the Savior rose from the dead; the day he twice appeared to his disciples, after his resurrection; the day the Comforter, that glorious witness first came to the disciples, and the day the disciples met to break bread.

Let us not forget to do good and be willing to communicate.

May the God of peace, who brought up from the dead that Shepherd of the sheep, through the age lasting covenant, unite us in every good work to do his will; working in us that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Christ our Savior.

Every one who has this hope in him, purifies himself, even as he is pure. Submitted in love.

The Parables of the Leaf.

"Know ye not this parable? and how shall ye know all the parables?" the Master asked his disciples, when they came to question him as to the Parable of the Sower. The question suggests that the world is full of parables for those who have the understanding heart that can read them. Our Lord opened the book of nature, read us a page here and there of its spiritual meanings, and then left the book in our hands, that we might read the rest as we acquire insight into the facts there disclosed, and their correspondence to facts of the spiritual world.

At all times men have seen a correspondence between the life of the leaf and the natural life of man. Homer dwells on it as the type of human fragility and vanity, and sees in the falling leaves the picture of the generations passing away into nothingness. And the same comparison occurs again and again in the poetry of the Greeks and the Romans. It is the favorite image to convey their sense of the brevity and the unsatisfactoriness of human existence, which is as "a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." It is remarkable that the comparison is not found in the Scriptures. It is true that Isaiah writes, "We all do fade as a leaf," and the words are often quoted as applicable to the natural conditions of our life. but the context shows he is speaking of a state of society under the blight of sin, and not of man's eternal decay,—a state in which none calls upon God for help, and men are consumed by their iniquities.

But the old pagan way of looking upon the leaf is common enough with us, because we choose to look only on the surface of things. Especially each autumn seems to come to us with a fresh reminder that we are "a race under sentence of death;" and even the polychromatic glories of our American fall are felt to be the coloring of a shroud. It moves us to melancholy rather than to joy.

Yet science shows that the true parables of the leaf lie deeper than these mournful suggestions, which come to us when we read the facts so superficially and partially. It has lifted the veil more fully for us, and shown us the larger meaning. First came Liebig as a founder of agricultural chemistry, showing us how the leaf both in its life and its death ministers to the increase of the earth's fertility. Once it was supposed that vegetable life drew its nourishment mainly, if not entirely, from the soil. The plant grew up from the soil, and, dying, gave back what it had gotten. The falling leaf merely returned to the source from which it had sprung. And the earth's fertility was a given quantity, to which nothing could be added. We now know better. It is from the atmosphere, as well as from the soil, that vegetation draws its support. And to gather its food from the air it spreads abroad the vast surface of its leafage, a single tree sometimes employing acres of leaf-surface for the purpose. Through its leaf-pores it drinks in the carbonic oxyde, which it converts into woody fibre, while the soil supplies little more than the flinty silica for stiffening the whole structure. And just so is it with the spiritual life of man. He lives not by the earth beneath so much as by the heavens above him. His health and growth in true manhood come from spreading his absorbent leaves into the higher currents of existence, and finding there the sustenance of his best life. The leaf, therefore, is the symbol of this essential contact with the things above, and not beneath.

"But the leaf withers and dies,—a symbol of the waste, the vanity the futility, of finite existence." Liebig again comes to our help. It is by such seeming waste and loss that the earth has been transformed from a mass of barren rocks and sands into a globe clothed with soil, and burgeoning forth in the beauty and use of herbage, flowers, plants, and trees. There is no loss in vegetable decay. A little escapes back to the air, to nourish fresh vegetable life; the rest adds itself to the wealth of the soil, on which vegetable and animal life depend largely for existence. It is by such decays that our prairies have deepened their soil, until three, four, and five feet of rich vegetable loam are accumulated for human harvests. It is such decays that have converted the barren wildernesses of the remotest geologic age into rich and fertile lands. Such decays have heaped up our coal-measures, as depositories of heat and force for human service. The divine beneficence comes forth thus even in what man's short sight finds as a symbol of the vanity of all things, human life not excepted.

"But the leaf dies and falls. Whatever remoter good may come of its mold, it has vanished out of the sum of things." Here again science interposes. It bids us distinguish between the leaf's efficient life and substance and the shell which encases it. The former is the chlorophyl which makes the leaf able to absorb and assimilate its food from the air. When the tree or plant or grass passes the point at which the seed has ripened, this precious substance is withdrawn gradually into the stem or the root, to wait for another season of usefulness. Hence the farmer knows it is better to cut his hay a day or two too early than too late. If he waits till the seeds are fully ripe, the leaves and stems are becoming mere empty and innutritious husks, from which the nourishing substance has been withdrawn. So if you tie a horse near a maple tree in early summer, it will eat all the leaves within its reach; but three months later it will not touch a leaf, however hungry. It might as well eat wood-shavings.

Here again the leaf is a parable. It seems to decay and perish. So with the life of man. Death seems to end all. But a sure knowledge carries us beyond. For his real being, as for the real leaf, there is a future of use and beauty. His days are as the grass; but, as one of our own poets has said, "the grass always has another day."—Sunday School Times.

Gospel of the Kingdom.

"The gospel of the kingdom" is composed of two great departments of truth, (1st) the things concerning the kingdom of God and (2) the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ; which things, in the days of the apostles, were believed before baptism. Matt. xxiv. 14; Ac. viii. 12; Gal. i. 8, 9.

1st. The things concerning the kingdom are briefly stated in the following four paragraphs:

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

(1) The kingdom will be on earth and eternal, according to the covenants with Abraham and David. Gen. xii. 7; xiii. 15; xvii. 7, 8; xxii. 17, 18; Acts vii. 5; Gal. iii. 16-18; 2 Sam. vii. 16; Ac. ii. 30; Luke i. 32, 33; Dan. ii. 35, 44; Zec. ix 10; Matt. v. 5; vi. 10; Num. xiv. 21; Isa. xxiv. 23; lx. 18-21; Rev. xxi. 23; xxii. 3-5.

(2) The kingdom will be set up at the personal return of Christ from heaven, as the Nobleman returning from the far country. Matt. xxv. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 1; Luke xix. 12-19.

(3) Sinners can never be able and worthy to "inherit the kingdom of God" unless they become righteous and immortal. 1 Cor. vi. 9; xv. 50, 53; Jno. iii. 5; James ii. 5; Dan. vii. 18, 22; Luke xii. 32; Matt. 34, 37; vi. 33; 2 Pet. i. 10, 11; Rom. viii. 17; Rev. v. 9, 10.

(4) When Christ and his immortal redeemed shall have reigned a thousand years blessing all nations, both sin and death will cease, the kingdom be delivered up to the Father, and God be all in all. Thenceforth his will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven, that is, perfectly and by every inhabitant. Gal. iii. 8; Rev. ii. 26-27; iii. 21; xx. 6; Psa. xxxvii. 9, 10, 20; Mal. iv. 1-3; Prov. ii. 21, 22; 1 Cor. xv. 26, 28; Rev. xxi. 4; Matt. vi. 10.

2nd. The things concerning the name of Jesus Christ are implied in their respective titles that constitute his name. Those things are briefly expressed in the following four paragraphs:

(1) He is not only the Seed or Son promised in the covenants with Abraham and David, but is also Emmanuel, the Christ, the only begotten Son of God; and is Prophet to teach, Priest to intercede, and King ordained to be Judge of quick and dead, and to reign in that "everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Matt. i. 1, 23; xvi. 16; Jno. i. 49; iii. 16; Ac. iii. 22; x. 42; Heb. v. 9, 10; Luke i. 32, 33; 2 Pet. i. 10, 11.

(2) He is the one Mediator and High Priest who "died for our sins," rose again, ascended into heaven, and ever liveth to make intercession for all that come unto God by him. And thus by the precious blood of Christ there has been provided a way of atonement and pardon whereby obedient believers are accounted righteous, and worthy of eternal life in his coming kingdom. 1 Tim. ii. 5; 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4; Rom. iv. 25; v. 11, 10; Heb. vi. 20; vii. 25; ix. 15; 1 Pet. i. 19; Rev. v. 9, 10.

(3) He is our life; and to all who "by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality" he will give eternal life at the resurrection of the just. Jno. xvii. 2; Rom. ii. 7; Col. iii. 4; 1 Cor. xv. 54; Luke xiv. 14; 1 Pet. v. 4.

(4) Through the merits of the blood of Christ, the past sins of penitent believers of the gospel of the kingdom are washed away in the act of baptism; and such baptized believers "have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous." Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16; Rom. iii. 25; vi. 1-4; Gal iii. 27-29; 1 Jno. i. 7; ii. 1.

Overdoing is as bad as, and sometimes worse than, not doing. We may put a fire out by overloading it with that same coal with which it could be kept going. A good many fires are put out in that way. Worshipers in the church service, or at the prayer meeting, go away cold because the very sermons and talks and prayers, and maybe music, that began to warm them, were piled on until the fires of zeal were smothered out.

We will supply friends who wish tracts to distribute with "Pearls" and 4 page tracts at 40 cts per pound, postpaid. This makes about 800 pages.

ADVICES from England show that a vote against the House of Lords was passed on the 13th, and was reversed on the 14th; but even this serves to show that the people are growing restive under lawmakers over whom they have no control.

PREACH Christ Jesus when you preach, brethren,—his humiliation, his sufferings, his death, his resurrection, his ascension, his mediation, his coming, his kingdom—Preach of those who are his at his coming, and the soul-cheering facts of the mundane inheritance of the saints.

A DISPATCH from Paris on the 15th inst says that a dynamite bomb was exploded on that day inside the chief entrance to the Church of La Madeleine. The man who threw it was killed by the explosion and a number of others were severely injured by the shock.

JOHN LOCK said, regarding matter and mind "It is urged that we cannot conceive how matter can think. I grant it; but to argue from thence that God cannot give to matter a faculty of thinking, is to say God's omnipotency is limited to a narrow compass because man's understanding is so; and brings down God's infinite power to the size of our capacities."

WHAT Jesus says: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." Matt. xv. 13. He also says, "This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." John iii. 19. Also "That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." Luke xvi. 15.

IT would do much more good, as far as advancing the cause of our blessed Redeemer is concerned, if our friends would refrain from writing on the subject that has been so ably discussed by Bro. Jones and Joblin. These brethen will present each one more article to finish his side, and then we hope will devote the same energy to presenting to a race of dying men and women, truth that if accepted and lived out, will save them from the fatal effect of continued sin.

WE see by the newspapers that the Rev. John McMiller of Scotland has announced from his pulpit that he will not baptize (rantize) the children of those who do not subscribe to the church fund. To exclude them from membership with the Body of Christ and an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven because their parents are derelict, is rather a highhanded piece of business, unless, indeed, he has a special dispensation. This is no doubt intended to be a powerful threat.

A BROTHER in the West has kindly sent us an answer to the question addressed by our Lord to Peter, "Simon, Son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" John xxi. 15. He says: "I really believe he pointed to, or meant by 'these,' the other disciples." He then goes on to say that he understands the question to be, not whether Peter loved the Lord more than the rest loved him,—but whether Peter loved the Lord more than he loved the other disciples. Did the Master occupy the first place in his affection is the idea

WE see people spending their time, and energy, and means for the benefit of people in future ages, while tens of thousands around them are perishing for lack of knowledge. Zeal without knowledge is no better now than it was in apostolic times, and we would to God it were directed into a channel that would prepare a people for the Lord at his appearing. By a note from the Editor we see that the able and scholarly work of the lamented, Wm. Glen Moncrief on "Future Probation" is now offered at 12 cents. They should be scattered by thousands.

"AN ignorant Asiatic was once asked, "How do you know there is a God?" The answer was, (at the same time pointing to human footprints) "How do you know that men have passed this way?"

IT was something of a surprise to learn from the report of the "Ministers' Meeting" in Claveland, on Monday that some thirty of the Catholics of the city have recently joined the Methodist Church.

STRONG affections in the enjoyment cause sore afflictions in the loss; but we must balance one against the other as best we can. For our part we want to have an unwavering faith, and a hope that reaches within the veil, and then we will be strong to bear as well as to enjoy.

IT has been well said that to be always intending to reform our lives, or to follow more closely the footsteps of Jesus than heretofore, but never finding time to set about it, is as if a man should put off eating and drinking and sleeping from one day to another until he had starved himself to death. The quality of good intentions is guaged by the effect on our conduct.

WE want to call the attention of our readers to the prospectus on the first page of THE RESTITUTION. It is a fairly good epitome of the truth, and has stood there many a year. Look it over carefully dear reader, and you will see at once why there is such a paper,—why there is need of such a paper. We see a list of vital truths, neglected by other religionists because they do not believe them. You will see that belief of and obedience to these truths have made a separate people, a people whose hope grows out of the system of truth here outlined. They have thus espoused God's cause and take this means of disseminating his Truth, and cause others to lay hold of the hope set before us in the promises of God. When we say vital truths we mean that they are essential to salvation in promise, and the conditions upon which it is promised. And the reason it makes a separate people is, that only those who believe what is promised will obtain what is promised; because there is only one faith, and therefore one hope. The point we want to press home upon our readers is that it takes the gospel Christ and the apostles preached to save people. If it did not, then all the sects and denominations in Christendom would be children of God, and heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; and to separate from them would bring us into condemnation. If the doctrines referred to be true, they are THE TRUTH, the truth that makes men free indeed,—the truth that separates them from sinners, and obedience to which purifies their souls. To believe these things to be true and at the same time hold that the belief of something else will do just as well is to deny that they are the gospel; and if they are not the gospel what is? But if they are the gospel, we are in the line of duty—doing and being what God expects us to do and be in the absence of Jesus—the Light of the world. Time and again our heart is pained by coming in contact with men with the merest smattering of the truth who assume to be teachers, and claim to be brethren while holding that sincere belief of something else will save people. This sets aside God's conditions of salvation for their own, and rules them out. They are not of us, and only claim to be in order to have the opportunity to lower the standard of truth. We have come down to the perilous times, when, as our Lord has intimated the very elect ones are in danger of being deceived by wolves in sheep's clothing. Oh, let us be out and out for God and truth; those of the milk-and-water brand will never hear the Lord say, well done. As a people we know too much to be influenced by the average religionist, but experience teaches that we have not been ware of the goody-good, half-and-half brethren who broaden the way of life. By all the love of God and of Christ we say, cling to the covenants of promise as the mariner clings to the last plank; if we do that we will outride all storms, surmount all difficulties and enter into the joy of our Lord.

"IT is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth,"—says Paul of the gospel of Christ. This shows who will be saved by it, and why. Everything is plainly set forth in the fewest possible words. A man must believe, keep in memory, and walk in the truth. God's saving power, is the Word of the Spirit. Its influence is the influence of the Spirit—just as the joints of the field, or the success of the mariner, or success in business in general are ascribed to God, though seemingly produced by our industry or skill.

"YE shall know them by their fruits" said Jesus. This requires no one to judge another. A certain sign is hung out by deeds done or spirit manifested, that stamps one's character. It is only necessary to be able to read the signs. It would be well if we could ever remember that none of us live to ourselves. As long as we associate with others we influence, and are influenced. This principle seems to pervade the whole realm of nature; it is written upon the flowers the air, the rocks, the rain-drops, the ocean, the sun and moon—"None of us live to ourselves." It behooves us not to forget that we are always influencing somebody for good or evil, and that the account will soon be footed up; and then woe to those who have caused others to stumble;—woe to those who have taught lies in the name of the Lord.

MOODY is reported to have converted four thousand people in Washington city at a cost of two hundred dollars, or five cents each. This is remarkably cheap—great returns for a small outlay. If only one in a hundred of them were really converted from the error of their ways, it was a profitable investment. Of course we do not mean converted—or changed from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God. Only truth can effect such results; and truth—the truth that sanctifies, the truth summed up as the gospel of the kingdom does not figure in those religious excitements; and it is a melancholy truth that they are religiously deluded. They think they are ticketed through to glory although in utter ignorance of the power God employs to save. Moody himself believes some of the truths that make up the gospel, and yet has not the faintest idea that they are part of the good message.

IN regard to the management of feelings we recently heard a brother say that he made up his mind some time ago not to be governed by his feelings, and reported that he was succeeding fairly well. This resolve exhibits a distinction between Christian duty and feeling it would be well to emulate. Feelings make lots of trouble when allowed to rule. Their seat is in the flesh; and feeling is practically only another name for the flesh. Feeling often stands square across the track of duty, and should be watched closely, or it will switch us off. Some twenty or more years ago, an article appeared in THE RESTITUTION that is recalled by these thoughts,—the substance of which was: That antagonistic feelings do not dwell together, that a nurse will try to make an angry child laugh, because the temper then melts away; that our feelings are like a board on a pivot; and when the good humor end is up the bad temper end is down; and that the feelings exist in opposite pairs. But we do not think feelings, ever so good, should stand at the helm. The feelings must be subordinate to a divine rule of conduct.

In the World, not of it.

"I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world." Ah! is that so? Did our Lord pray thus? Then neither must we pray to be taken out of the world. This is our place,—this is where we have to be disciplined; we need the discipline; we are disciplined because we need it. If Jesus did not pray that his disciples be taken out of the world, what did he pray for? He says, "I pray that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." Here we learn what to pray for,—to be kept from the evil. We run no risk here. Evil and its influences are everywhere, and we have to resist them, and we see that it is our privilege to ask for assistance and God's pleasure to assist us if we ask. If he does not see fit to remove the thorn in the flesh he will whisper, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Believer, whatever your sphere in life, whatever your joy or grief, whatever your worries or persecutions, or successes or defeats heed the Savior's invitation and go to him,—he is able to succor and willing, but you must come to him: he graciously invites and waits for you, but he forces his services upon no one. After looking over the Master's teaching carefully these lessons stand out in bold relief: "Learn to leave the world; learn to use the world: learn to meet the ills and allurements and contradictions of the world with the strength derived from fellowship with the Father and the Son, and an unwavering confidence in the Word of promise."

Expediency.

We copy the following lines from the confessions of a Clergyman. They show that the religions world is rotten to the core. He says, and says truly,—"Expediency is the covert of infidelity. We ought always to contend that nothing is expedient but what is lawful. This expediency comes under the name of usefulness; and, when usefulness is proposed to us we ought to ask, is it our duty: Whenever anything has been propounded to be done, or to omit doing, it has always been on the score of usefulness, never on the score of duty. I cannot express what my feelings are of the infidelity of these times. The church is poisoned by it and has brought an influence to bear upon it which absolutely incapacitates it from living a life of faith. Our newspapers, reviews, and periodicals carry this poison and infuse it into every pore. I speak to those who may know and feel what I mean, and say the posture fitting such is sackcloth and ashes."

A Woman's Mistake.

They were seated on the vine-wreathed veranda—Edith Wells and Raymond Lester—when the old church bell rang out its mellow invitation.

"Shall we go, Edith?" asked the young man, trying to be very indifferent.

"Go where?" She looked up with well-feigned surprise.

"Why, to the temperance meeting; don't you hear the bell?"

"Oh, the idea! You must be jesting. I've heard enough of temperance meetings. But perhaps you wish to go?" coldly.

"Not without you. I have been somewhat interested in them. The ladies are taking hold of the work as if they meant to reform us all—there's need enough."

"I think they go much too far. What is the use? Men will drink, and the women will have all their work in vain."

"Not always. They've closed the saloons in several places."

"Oh, yes, for a time! By the way, you should have been here yesterday. Mrs. Brown was here, and we had a debate, she is in favor of no-license, mamma and I for license. Didn't we have a lively time! You should have seen her look of horror when I said I did not care for moderate drinking, and as for cigars, I just doted on the perfume! Of course I objected to drunkenness, but I have no friends too weak to stop drinking when they ought to."

"They say that it is impossible when the appetite is once formed."

There was an undertone of earnestness in the young man's voice that a more thoughtful person would have noticed, but Edith answered lightly,—

"Pshaw! I don't believe it. If a man really wants to break the habit, he can—or he's no man. Do you think you could be so unmanly as to be a 'slave to drink?'"

She looked at him half in ridicule, half in proud confidence, but he answered soberly:—

"I do not know, Edith."

"You are too modest; but I am willing to risk it without any total abstinence pledge."

"Are you? I was about to propose that we both sign one."

"Ha! ha! Raymond that's a good joke. Sign a pledge, indeed!"

"Seriously, Edith, I have been thinking of signing a pledge. I could do it easily now, but in time I may learn to love liquor, and it would be harder. You laugh, but many a strong man has gone down; why not I? We might be on the safe side. A pledge would keep me, for I never broke a promise in my life? What do you say—shall we sign?"

"No; I shall do no such thing. Fancy our being at a party and having to refuse the least sip of wine because we'd signed a temperance pledge! Do you fear I'll ever be a drunkard?"

"No, no, Edith. I've thought only of myself. I"—

"I'll risk you, Raymond. Don't go and make a fool of yourself. Pardon me, Ray, but it seems so weak and foolish to sign a pledge, that I lose all patience. We could not make the promise now. Papa has already sent an order for wines for—our wedding. Don't think about it, Ray. I can trust you; I haven't a fear."

Five years had passed away.

A stormy night had settled down upon the city. In many a princely home the heavy curtains were closely drawn, coal heaped upon the grates, while laughter and song sought to smother the shrieks of the keen wintry wind.

In a rickety house which illy sufficed to keep out the storm, a thinly-clad woman, crouching over a few smouldering embers, sought to warm her benumbed fingers in the flickering blaze. Presently the door swung open, letting in a gust of chilling wind, and a poor, ragged sot staggered to a chair. Muttering something about the "miserable fire," he drew from his pocket a bottle of whiskey and drank deeply. This seemed to madden the woman, who was watching him with contempt written on every feature.

"Raymond Lester! would you spend the last dime for whiskey, when your wife and child are starving?"

"Hold your tongue! If you're hungry, go and earn something. If I earn a quarter shovelling snow, and spend it for whiskey, whose business is it?"

"Oh!" moaned the woman; "was it for this I left a happy home? Did I think you—you—would ever bring me to such depths of sorrow and disgrace?"

"Stop, Edith Lester!" cried the man, with a frightful look in his bleared eyes. "Stop and hear what I say. I am a wreck—ruined, soul and body. I have brought you to sorrow and disgrace: but, woman, it's your own work! Once I saw my danger; I feared my appetite; I wanted to become a temperance man; but your hands tipped the scales on the side of drunkenness and—hell! Again and again you've urged me to drink—you've poured the wine for me with your hand. You kept it on our table. You have said, 'My husband is strong enough to be a moderate drinker, but I am here, a ruined man! No power on earth can save me now. Some one will care for you, but my doom is sealed. Don't madden me with reproaches; I'm desperate. God knows I meant to have been a good husband. I tried. O Edith, if you had but helped me, I might have been"—

The creaking door was flung open by a reckless hand, and the roar of the storm deadened Edith's cry of anguish as she sank down alone by the side of her sleeping child. Her work! Ah! what a revelation. All these years she had reproached him, scornfully and bitterly, for his lack of manhood, for sinking lower and lower. Had she indeed tipped the scales? Had her half-serious words carried such a weight of woe? A careless girl's thoughtless words brought a future full of misery? Years of suffering seemed crowded into one short hour, and then came rest in long unconsciousness. When morning dawned, helpful hands were there to save.

But Raymond Lester, on that bitter night, stung by grief and remorse, wandered far out from the city, and, weary at last, sank down to perish.

Edith, a lonely woman, once more in her father's house, can never escape the scenes that haunt her—the winter storm, the wild wind tossing the tangled hair, the snow and sleet beating upon the face she loved, and a once manly form cold and stiff in death. When wintry storms beat about her dwelling, she watches through the long night hours, when every gust of wind flings back the cry: "It is all your own work, your own work!"—Zion's Herald.

City of the Hundred Gates.

In any case the ordinary tourist is likely enough to emerge from the temple of Karnak stupefied by that mere vastness of scale, those Titanic proportions of architecture which ranked it ages ago, when it was intact or nearly so, and which rank it today, when it is a ruin, among the wonders of the world. It is not the mere area of the mighty building which oppresses one, though four cathedrals of Notre Dame would go, it is said, into the Hypostyle Hall. Nor is it merely the altitude to which the towering columns mount, or their enormous girth, or their forest-like array. You think of those huge pillars that lose themselves in the upper gloom at Seville, and of the endlessly intersecting avenues of the Mosque of Cordova, and you feel that in these two points, at any rate, Karnak, if it be not exactly rivaled, is not so very far ahead. It is the astonishing successful combination of all the widely differing architectural effects which are severally produced by number, by size, by proportion, by disposition, by the imperious influence of mass, and the winning appeal of perspective—it is the combination of these into a phalanx of forces to be launched irresistibly against the senses and the soul of the beholder that makes the great temple what it is. Those Atlantean columns, which were built, surely, to uphold the heavens themselves, and which seem to bear up their enormous surmounting monoliths as a giant would lift a child, have no suggestion of unwieldiness in their colossal size, leave no sense of excess in their multitudinous number. The calyx-capital into which each column blossoms would take ten men to span its monstrous girth; yet it opens out against the blue Egyptian sky above its roofless head as lightly as if it were the finest Gothic tracery above an English cathedral nave.

Everywhere the feeling of absolute fitness, of perfect proportion redeems this majestic hall of the offense of mere Brobdingnagerie; and whether the eye dwells upon the parts or sweeps the whole—whether it travels through the endless alleys of the forest of stone and rests by turns upon base and shaft and flower-like capital of its component columns, or pauses to peruse walls, deep-graven with colossal gods and kings, and still glowing here and there with the undying colors of 4,000 years, the artistic taste is alike satisfied. So admirable, indeed, are the proportions of the whole that the stupendous bulk of its constituent parts is hardly realized. Derangement of their symmetry seems necessary to enable one to measure it in all its full awfulness, as we do there, where one of these gigantic pillars has fallen and bows its hundreds of tons of weight and the superincumbent-burden of its huge plinth, dislocated and askew, toward one of its fellows. The cause of this portentous displacement no man knows; but the vague tradition that ascribes it to the conqueror Cambyses may be safely dismissed. No mortal hands, relying solely on the strength of human muscles and the only known forces of an age that knew not of gunpowder, could ever have done the work of inchoate destruction which is above our heads. Nothing short of an earthquake could have thrust one of those tremendous plinths into the position of that overhanging horror.—H. D. Traill in London Telegraph.

Dear Restitution:

We have been very much pleased with Bro. Wilson's explanation in THE RESTITUTION of March 14, of Rev. xi. and other texts, of 42 months and 1260 days and time times and a half, etc; as we had come to the same conclusion some time before. Will Bro. W. H. Wilson please explain Rev. xiv. 10-11; and xx. 10, as we never could harmonize those texts with Rev. xx. 12-15, and xxi. 4-8, and other such Scripture texts fully to our own satisfaction from any of the translations.

Conference Report.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, in Nebraska met as previously announced, at Fairview, March 16th, to 18th, 1894.

The attendance and interest was all that could be desired.

Everything shows a marked increase in the work since last report except the number baptized.

The following churches were ably represented by wide-awake brothers and sisters, one having come over 250 miles to attend this meeting. Blair, Moorsfield, Fronier, and Traer, Kansas.

On account of the absence of officers of "Tract Association" but little was done in this line. Tracts however are on hand, and Vice-presidents are requested to send in their orders to the secretary of the society at any time.

The business meeting at 2 o'clock on Saturday, was presided over as usual by Bro. Adams.

The Treasurer's report shows the amount received during the quarter as $192.60. Paid to evangelist $152.50. To assistant evangelist $15.00. Balance on hand, $25.10.

Evangelist reported, amount received, $152.50. Expenses, $36.61, less expenses $115.89. Number of discourses, 68, baptized, 21, miles traveled by rail, 2498, by team 280.

Assistant evangelist reported amount received $15.00. No. of days employed, 23, discourses, 21.

Letters of greeting were read from Sister Chaplin, Secretary of the Kansas Conference, W. J. Bode, Camp Clark, Neb. Also a communication from Bro. Myers of Iowa, in regard to a revision of the "Electic Hymnal," and on motion the secretary was instructed to correspond with him and offer the following proposition, viz: that the money now on hand subscribed by brethren in Neb., for the "Educational Fund" be used in revising the Hymn Book and that this conference take the amount in books at whatever price per. doz., the book sells for at the time completed.

It was moved and carried that we adopt the "Constitution of the Tract Association."

In regard to uniting the work in the state it was decided that hereafter it should all come under, the management of the one Executive Board, and that the territory north of the Platte River be known as the North District, and that south of the Platte River, the South District. Also the resolutions adopted by what was formerly known as the South Dakota and North Nebraska Conference was unanimously adopted by this Conference. Propositions submitted to this conference in regard to the unity of the work was also accepted.

On motion of Bro. Morgan, the next Quarterly Conference will be held at Moorfield, June 8th.

Thus closed another very successful meeting.

ALMUS ADAMS, Pres.
J. J. CADY, Sec'y.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I herewith enclose $1.50 to pay for one years subscription to the paper.

I take much pleasure in reading it, as it is the only religious paper of interest to me. I am alone in the faith here, and have met none of our brethren or sisters for a number of years. Nevertheless I have held firm to the Second Advent doctrine all the time. May all that have heard the true gospel do likewise. Let us be faithful to the works of righteousness that we may be able to walk directly on the narrow path that is spoken of in the blessed Book the Bible.

Yours in faith,
FRANK S. POTTER.
Dakota.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

Poetry.

Farewell!

Till life's illusive dreams are fled,
Till pillowed on the dreamless bed,
Through joy and sorrow, sun and shade,
May God's protection be thy aid
Farewell!

Farewell!
[illegible] the [illegible] Eden-land
We join Immanuel's white-robed band,
From which our rapt lips are never heard
[illegible] sad parting word.
Farewell!

Vision of Heaven.

[A review of a sermon on the above subject by Mr. Talmage, published in N. Y. Witness, Feb. 7, 1894.]

Dr. Talmage has had a vision, or dream in which he saw the pious ghosts of all classes in heaven. They were all very glorious and happy, but those who had suffered much, as the martyrs, from Stephen the first Christian martyr, down to the latest in modern history, was exalted above others. He ranks King David among them because he suffered so much from the wicked Saul, Absalom and others.

Let us see if his theology is not sick and unscriptural, and needs to be doctored. Let us see if he is not mistaken in seeing David there. The Lord sent word to him that he could not build the temple, but his son would. He should "Sleep with his fathers," Sam. vii. 12, and in the 1st chapter of Kings it is said, he "slept with his fathers in the city of David." Has David waked from that deep sleep of death and ascended to heaven? Let Peter answer that question. He says in that discourse to the great crowd on the day of Pentecost, "David is dead and buried—David has not ascended to heaven." It was Jesus who had risen from the dead and ascended there. There is no proof that David has ascended since that time,—hence it is certain that Mr. Talmage did not see him there. He says, "I shall be satisfied when I shall awake with thy likeness." Psa. xviii. If he is as satisfied to sleep till the morning of the 1st resurrection, and then awake in the likeness of his God, we ought to be.

It is said of Solomon and his son Rehoboam, and nearly all the kings of Israel, "they slept with their fathers." His wise son Solomon, says, "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything. Also, their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished." Eccl. ix. 8. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of Man. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. xlvi. Take the testimony of Isa. xxiv. 12. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is the dew of herbs, and earth shall cast out the dead." God's dead men are said in this passage of holy Scripture to dwell in the dust up to that time, and there is not a particle of proof that they have since that time risen from the dead and ascended to heaven to accommodate Mr. Talmage, or verify his unscriptural dreams. Jesus said to his disciples, "As the Father hath life in himself, he hath given to the Son to have life in himself that he may succor, (make alive) whom he will." He said to Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, he shall live, and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." He said unto John after he ascended to heaven, "I am he that was dead and behold I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and the grave." His Almighty arm will soon remove the bars that hold the pious dead, and unlock their graves, as the great stone was rolled away from his grave on the morning of the third day. The Apostle Paul wrote to those who mourned the death of their Christian friends, that they should not sorrow as others who had no hope, for those who had fallen asleep. What did he mean? Let him answer. "If Jesus died and rose again, even so will God bring again (from the dead) those who sleep in Jesus. For the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and trump of God and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then those who are alive, and remain shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so be forever with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. Then will the voice of the archangel and trump of God be heard by all of God's dead men and Isaiah's dead body, and they will wake and sing the song of redeeming love, and thus celebrate the greatest victory over death and the grave that was ever gained over man's worst enemy. They do not sing before but after waking.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep.
From which none ever wake to weep."

But they wake to sing. But some may object that the spirit will return to God who gave it. The original word translated spirit is often translated breath, and that is exactly what he gave to man when he formed him—gave him the breath of life. The life of the Christian, at death, becomes "hid with Christ in God, (a very safe place to hide such a treasure) and when he shall appear the second time, he will appear with Christ in glory." Col. iii. 4. Cannot appear with Christ in glory till he appears. If we lay up treasure in heaven, he will bring his reward with him. He will recompense deeds of charity at the resurrection of the just. Says Peter, "Hope to the end for the favor that shall be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 1 Peter i. 13. "Many of them who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life." This great gift of life will begin after, not before the waking. Those who leave all for Christ and the kingdom, shall receive eternal life not in the world to come, but in the age to come. Luke xviii. 30. After the addition of 3000 in Pentecost to the church, Peter exhorts another crowd to repent that their sins might be blotted out when the Lord should come for the restoration of all things that God's prophets have written,—as the restoration of the land promised to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession and the throne of David now in the dust of ages.

If all the ministers would preach the gospel of the kingdom as found in the inspired prophets of God, and the gospel of the kingdom and eternal salvation, or redemption of the body, which Paul was waiting for, see Rom. viii. and which is shown to be near by the signs that precede his coming, they would confer a great blessing on their hearers. Luke xxi. But Mr. Talmage saw in his visionary dream, the martyrs highly exalted in heaven. If he had seen their future glory in the light of the "exceeding great and precious promises" of the Bible, he would have told important truth. The martyrs yet sleep in death. After the battle of the great day of the Lord and the binding of satan for 1000 years, John sees thrones for them, he sees those who had been "beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and they lived or (came to life) and reigned with Christ a thousand years, but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years was finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall reign with Christ a thousand years." Rev. xx.

Bishop Henshaw says, that this literal resurrection was the hope of the church 1700 years, till Dr. Whitby explained it away. The renewal of the blessed and holy makes the second coming necessary to the eternal life of all the sleeping saints. In close connection with the command "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust;" it is said, "Come my people, enter into thy chambers, hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isa. xxvi. 20. Are these the burial chambers spoken of by Paul? "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with great glory. And he shall send his angels, and they shall gather his elect from the four winds. (Perhaps to the Mount of Olives.) They will ascend to the atmospheric heaven, and meet the King of kings—see him fashioned like unto his glorious body, and from that time "Be forever with the Lord." But what after that meeting? "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives—and the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee, and that mount is turned into a plain for a place of refuge for the fleeing Israelites. Then the Lord and his redeemed ones will stand upon Mount Zion. "And the Lord God will give him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever. Then the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and before Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream, and he that hath my Word, let him speak my Word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 28. "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness; and (immortal) princes shall rule in judgment." Isa. xxxii. 1. Come Lord Jesus, and "be King over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 3.

Things Essential.

In things essential unity, in all things charity. The gospel of the kingdom of God consists of things to be believed; but how can we believe the things without an understanding of the things to be believed. The same gospel that was preached to Abraham was preached by the last living apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, and if we would reteach, we must teach the same things that the inspired apostles taught. A double curse has been pronounced on the man or angel who would dare preach any other gospel than that which has been taught by holy men of God, who spoke as the Spirit gave them utterance.

In the 8th chapter of Acts we are informed that Philip went down to Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. That the people with one consent gave heed to the things (plural) which Philip spake. And because of the power of God, manifested through Philip, towit, casting out of evil sprits and healing of palsied and lame folk, there was much rejoicing in that city. And notwithstanding, one Simon by name had deceived them for a long time with his arts, yet when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. Even Simon himself believed the same things of course and was baptized. I will itemize some of the things to be believed in order to a correct belief of the gospel of the kingdom of God. When Jesus comes he will be king over all the earth. Zech. xiv. 9. That Jesus will come to earth again, we have the testimony of angels as well as that of men. Acts i. 11. Jesus says when the Son of Man shall come in his glory with all the holy angels, then he shall sit on the throne of his glory. Matt. xxv. 31. The angel said of him who should be born, that he should be great, and would be called the Son of the highest, and that the Lord God would give unto him the throne of his father David. Luke i. 32.

2. The saints being joint heirs with Christ will share his glory. Matt. xix. 28. Will be associate rulers. Rev. ii. 26. Do you not know that the saints shall judge the world. 1 Cor. vi. 2. The inspired Daniel speaks of a time when judgment will be given to the saints of God. Dan. vii. 22; Rev. i. 6. Jesus says to his disciples, ye are they which have continued with me in my trials, and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Luke xxii. 28, 29, 30.

David says concerning evil doers: Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them, and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning. Psa. xlix. 14. The Psalmist in speaking prophetically of the Lord says, He shall subdue the people under us and the nations under our feet; he shall choose our inheritance for us. Psa. xlvii. 3, 4. Malachi says, And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under your feet. John in that grand vision of future things says, And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them. And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the Word of God, which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands. These lived again and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Rev. xx. 4.

3. Jerusalem will be the place of his throne, will be the capital city of the kingdom of God, the metropolis of the world. He will come to Zion. He will then issue his proclamation. It will be this, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies. My houses shall be built in it, saith the Lord. Doubtless this is the house David had in mind when he said, but thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come. Sam. vii. 19. This proclamation will be world wide. A line will be stretched forth upon Jerusalem. Cry yet, thus saith the Lord of hosts, My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad, and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem. Zech. i. 16, 17. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo, I come. And I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and they shall be my people. And I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem again. Zech. viii. 2, 3.

4. He will then issue laws to govern the heathen, to bring them in subjection to the kingdom of God, which shall occupy the territory of the beast of Daniel's image. Dan. ii. 44. The first territory acquired after the sitting up of the kingdom of God will be the territory of the beast of prophecy; all outside of that territory will be reckoned heathen. And time will be required to subjugate them. When subjugated they too will become subjects in the kingdom of Christ. Tribe after tribe will be subdued until earth's inhabitants are all brought in subjection to the will of the Almighty. The curse forever recinded; death sorrow and sighing shall be no more. Peace on earth and glory in the highest. The wild beast of pray shall be subdued. The lion shall feed on straw like the ox. The serpents shall loose their poisonous fangs. Nothing shall hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain. The earth shall be full of his knowledge and glory.

And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills. And all nations shall be gathered unto it, and many people will go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. For out of Zion will go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more. Isa. ii. 2, 3, 4. He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he has set judgment in the earth and the isles shall wait for his law. Isa. ii. 3; Rom. viii. 19.

5. The heathen world will be subdued and become subjects in the kingdom of God. Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Psa. ii. 8; Isa. xlii. 4. Daniel says the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the most high who will with Jesus execute the judgment written in Psalms cxlix. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9; Deut. 1, 2.

6. The saints will inherit the earth. Matt. v. 5; Psalms xxxvii. 18, 28, 29. The upright shall dwell in the land and the perfect shall remain in it. Prov. ii. 21. Judah and Israel who have long been dispersed will be gathered to their own land and will have been united and become one kingdom, and one king shall be king to them, even Jesus their long rejected Messiah. Ezek. xxxvi. and xxxvii. When Israel and Judah behold him whom they have pierced, when Jesus shall have returned to Jerusalem, then will be poured upon the houses of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of favor and prayer. And they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and shall mourn for him, as for an only son. In that day great mourning shall be. Zech. xii. 10, 11, 12, 13. Blessed are those that mourn for they shall be comforted. Matt. v. 4.

7. God's Word is behind all this. It will not fail. His resources are boundless, his power infinite, all the forces in nature are at his command. These are some of the items that go to make up the things concerning the kingdom of God. These are some of the things which were preached by Philip, by all the apostles and prophets. These things are supplemented by the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ. Coupling together the things concerning the kingdom of God and the things concerning the name constitute the gospel, the power of God unto salvation. Rom. i. 16. And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence no man forbidding him. Acts xxviii. 30 31.

1. Concerning the name, Jesus is the Son of God. Matt. iii. 13. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Psa. ii. 7. 2. He was crucified. Acts ii. 23. 3. He was buried. 1 Cor. xv. 4. 4. He arose from the dead. 5. He ascended to the Father. Acts i. 9. 6. He sat down on his Father's throne. Acts ii. 34, 35. 7. He will come again. Acts iii. 20. And sit down on his father David's throne. Acts ii. 30; Luke i. 32, 33. These are some of the things briefly stated that go to make up the gospel of the kingdom of God. The power of God understood, believed, embraced, lived up to will keep us from falling, and house us safe home in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. This is the gospel that Jesus commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and preach to every creature. He that believeth and is immersed shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be condemned. Submitted in love of truth.

Selected.

The Jews and their Land.

The kingdom of Israel in the past was the kingdom of God. This kingdom is to be restored, only upon a far more glorious scale than it existed before. It will be ruled by immortal men, Jesus being the supreme King. The apostles will be honored—according to the promise of Christ—by judging or ruling "the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. xix. 28), hence we can understand their anxiety to know if Jesus, after his resurrection, was then going to "restore the kingdom to Israel." Acts i. 6. For these and many other promises to be fulfilled, the Jews must be regathered to their own land, for they will form the subjects of the kingdom of Christ, though ultimately, all nations will bow to his sceptre and acknowledge him to be the Lord, "to the glory of God the Father." Phil. ii. 10, 11.

This is one of the reasons why the Jews are preserved—amidst all their persecutions—a distinct people upon the face of the earth. They have an important part yet to play in the world's redemption. Jehovah watches over them in the land of those who hate them. Depend upon it out of the present evil his purpose will be evolved. "Afflictions spring not out of the dust." Divine wisdom is at work and we should so conclude if the purpose of God was inscrutable. But in this case it does not appear to be so. According to many signs abroad in the earth observed by the students of Scriptures, to which reference need not now specially be made, "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Prior to the immediate manifestation of Christ to the Jews as their deliverer and King the Scriptures lead us to understand that there will be a partial resettlement of the Jews in the land of Palestine, a gathering together of a number of the long outcast race, and a degree of prosperity and peace such as they have not known in their land for long, weary centuries before. For many years past those interested in the Jews, those interested in "the hope of Israel," which was Paul's hope (Acts xxviii. 20), those waiting for the "Consolation of Israel," and looking for the kingdom of God, have been on the watch tower looking for these events to take place, and they have been rewarded by seeing the land opened up to the ancient people, and a greater interest manifested in Palestine than has been the case for many generations. Evidently the time is near when they "shall build the old waste places: and shall raise up the foundations of many generations" of desolations. Isa. lviii. 12.

First of all the law which forbade a Jew to acquire land in Palestine, which had existed for a long period of time, was repealed, the Sultan of Turkey—I think in the year 1857—permitting the Jews the privilege of doing this long forbidden thing. Then came the scheme of the venerable Sir Moses Montefiore for improving the position of the Jews in Palestine. A considerable period of time, too, was taken up in surveying the land by distinguished English officials, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, the results of which survey were published to the world, and threw a flood of light upon Bible references to Palestine. The Russo-Turkish war also resulted in a British Protectorate over the Holy Land, of which a great deal has not yet been heard but may be in the not far distant future, when England will cry "Hands off" to the Russian power which would fain make Jerusalem the headquarters of her faith and absorb the territory of Bible fame into her vast possessions. Another result of the war was the seizing of Cyprus by the British power, and later on came the occupation of Egypt, which we may now reckon a British possession, by which acquisitions we are brought into very close relationship with Palestine, and shall be able to give practical effect to the Protectorate when the need arises so to do. There are now also a very large number of Jews in Palestine. The work of colonization has been going on at a considerable rate for many years past. There has long been societies in existence, under patronage of some of the very wealthy Jews, with a large capital to work upon, with the object of assisting Jews to form colonies and once more bring this highly fruitful land under cultivation. The heart of every patriotic Israelite yearns to see the once favored land prosperous once more, and to behold "Jerusalem a praise in the earth." The hope of a Messiah yet to come—though the true one is rejected—is not yet dead in the breasts of the truly devout. Their hope finds expression in the phrase, "This year here, next year in Jerusalem," uttered upon the day of atonement when the rites have concluded with the sounding of the trumpet. There is no land on earth like Palestine to the Jew. Thousands there are who long to return to the cradle of their race; wherever they are found, east, west, north, or south—"on the banks of the Tiber or the Thames, the Jordan or the Mississippi, on the shores of the Caspian, or on the burning sands of India, the 'home sickness'—as it has been called—is heavily upon them. And in Palestine, around the ruins of Jerusalem, soon as their Sabbath dawns, grey-headed men and venerable kneel amidst the sacred dust, kiss the very stones; and then, in low, plaintive tones, which in their minor cadences, seem to breathe out their soul's deep anguish, sing—

"For the palace which is laid waste,
For the temple which is destroyed,
For the walls which are pulled down,
For our majesty which is gone,
For our great men who have been cast down,
For the precious stones which are burnt,
For the priests who have stumbled,
For our kings who have despised him,
We sit down alone and weep.

Have mercy upon Zion;
Gather the children of Jerusalem!
Make haste, Redeemer of Zion;
Speak to the heart of Jerusalem;
Remember the shame of Zion;
Make new again the ruins of Jerusalem!"

Doubtless the homesick and weeping sons and daughters of Judah are upon the very eve of receiving the answer of God to their hearts' longing and intense desire. God is about to "arise, and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is" well-nigh "come."

OBITUARY.

Died at her home in Whitley County, Indiana, March 17, 1894, Sabina E. Wince, aged 50 years, 3 months and 12 days. Sister Wince's maiden name was Emery. She was born in Wayne County, Ohio, and in early childhood was brought by her parents to Whitley County, where she resided up to the day of her death. This part of the state at the time of their arrival was almost a wilderness and she shared with her parents the toils and privations of pioneer life. The schoolhouse where she acquired the rudiments of her education was built of round logs and covered with clapboards—a structure the rudest of the rude. Later she attended a few terms of high school at Roanoke and Columbia City, and one term at the Ft. Wayne M. E. College. For several years she taught common or district school and as a teacher ranked among the very best in the state.

In 1866, she was married to Alfred B. Wince and to them three children were born, two sons and a daughter, who with their father mourn the loss of an affectionate mother and a devoted wife. In 1870, she was baptized into the Christ and remained rooted and grounded in the faith and hope of the gospel until the day of her death, looking for her reward at the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the just. She was a member of the church of God at Clayaville, Huntington County. Her faithfulness and devotion to her children knew no bounds and embraced days of toil and nights of waking, and her weary hands, and oft aching head refused to rest until the morrow. She sleeps in Jesus awaiting the sounding of the trump of God, and the archangel's voice to awake the righteous dead, when like David she will be satisfied, wearing the likeness of the Divine Redeemer. Funeral discourse by Bro. J. F. Wagoner.

John L. Wince.

Died at San Jose, California, March 7, 1894, of pneumonia, Sister Julia C. Vose, whom the friends at Argos will remember as the Nebraska stranger, who was baptized at their place a few years ago. She sometimes wrote little mournful poems for The Restitution. Her life has been a very sad one, full of disappointments and trials. But she found rest and peace in Jesus, and her last letters to me were full of expressions indicating her love of and unbounded trust in God.

S. Roxana Wince.

What a man does now as his best work, is largely the outcome of what he has been getting ready to do for a long time before now. Long preparation is essential to high performance even though the performance itself seem easily and quickly done. The flowering of a century-plant takes but a brief time finally; but long years of slow preparing were needful to make that plant ready for the work of those few days. Moses had the study of a generation in the world's greatest university, and the training of a generation in the practice school of the wilderness, to fit him for his work of bringing out, in a single night, the Hebrews from bondage into a national life. And so it is with every man of God in every sphere; he must be trained for great service before great service is a possibility with him. Let no young man fear that he is losing time while he is filling up in anticipation of outgiving. Better service can often be done in one year by one who has been ten years in training for that service, than would be possible for that same person in twenty years without such preliminary training.

Chain of Lakes, Waupaca, Wis.

The attention of those figuring on a place for their "summer outing" is called to Waupaca, Wis., located on the Wisconsin Central Lines, about 200 miles from Chicago. It is a delightful spot, surrounded by a beautiful chain of lakes, which abound in bass, trout, pike, pickerel and muskallonge. Good hotel accomodations at rates within reach of all. For full particulars, maps and guide books, address Jas. C. Pond, Genl. Pass. Agt. Milwaukee, Wis.

stitution:

In the issue of Oct. 18, 1893, a contributor in setting forth what he thinks are "facts not generally known," sets forth an error when he states that "in one instance the word satan is applied to God," and as proof of his assertion refers to 1 Chron. xxi. 1, and to 2 Sam. xxiv. 1. If your contributor had consulted James i. 13, 14, he would have discovered that the word, he, in his references did not refer to God in any sense; but referred directly to satan himself. If W. B's understanding of his own references are correct the Bible clearly contradicts itself.

1 Chron. xxi. 1. reads, "And satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel." 2 Samuel xxiv. 1. reads touching the same subject, "And again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, go number Israel and Judah."

If translators had placed a period at the word Israel, instead of a comma, and had given the word, and, a capital letter, the most superficial Bible reader would understand the close of the one statement; but as it now stands, although the word satan is not applied to God, it does read that God tempted David to sin, which is not true, as the Apostle James tells us that God never tempts any one; furthermore, 1 Chron. xxi. 1, records the fact that it was satan who tempted David to sin in the sight of God, and against Israel.

As uninspired translators have divided inspired Scripture into chapters and verses, there occasionally appears a seeming incoherence, and frequently the ungrammatical construction of a sentence obscures or partially covers up the original sense of the text. For an example of this fact see Psa. lxviii. 6, "And God sitteth the solitary in families." As the above quotation now stands written in King James Bible, who among all the children of men can see any sense in it, or get the fact therein stated out of it. I should say not one of us by careful study could get the statement therein partially hid from the comprehension of the natural man; yet, when the divine teacher is present with the reader, the truth is instantly lifted of its present clothing, and reads as follows, "God sitteth the people all apart in families."

As the Bible was originally written without punctuation or division, we are commanded to "divide the word of God aright," and unless we are careful and watchful to do this, we very often fail to get the original ideas of the Bible authors. In Isa. ii. 18, 19, we read, "And the idols he will utterly abolish, and they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord." Gen. iii. 8, reads, "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day, etc." Now, was it the idols who went into caves for fear of the Lord, or, was it the men who owned and worshipped the idols? Was it God walking in the garden, or was it Adam and Eve? Was it God who tempted David, or was it satan?

It is of solemn importance that we "divide the word of God aright."

I am exceedingly jealous for the honor of God's written Word, and this must be my apology for asking that the foregoing exposition of 2 Sam. xxi. 1. may be inserted in the columns of the many thoughted and clear eyed exponent of the Abrahamic faith—THE RESTITUTION.

W. B's. statement arose solely from a failure to "rightly divide." Will the brother kindly re-consider his teachings, and set himself right before his readers.

Respectfully submitted.

Depart for the east No. 4 at 7:58 A. M., No. 20 at 10:35 A. M., No. 8 at 7:41 P. M., Local East at 7:20 A. M.

Mysteries.

The great essayist, Dr. Drummond, says: "There are ten good years in a man's life in investigating what is in a leaf, and there are five good years more in investigating the things that are in the things that are in the leaf." How little we know of what is knowable on every side; and beyond this what impenetrable mysteries to the human mind abound, such as only the Infinite One can grasp. And yet men are ever saying, in their pride and egotism: If I cannot solve all these mysteries, I'll reject the whole system of revealed religion, even Christ and his great salvation. As reasonably say, because I cannot fully comprehend in all its minutiae how the food taken into the human system developes blood, muscle, bone, etc., therefore I will forever discard all food, starve the physical man. Are not thousands by a similar process of reasoning starving the spiritual man?

Again the author above quoted says again: "Doubt is can't believe; unbelief is won't believe. Doubt is honesty; unbelief is obstinacy. Doubt is looking for light; unbelief is content with darkness." Unsaved friend, are you a doubter or an unbeliever?

OBITUARY.

Died, February 14th, 1894, at her home near Oxford, Cowley County, Kansas, after a short but painful illness, Sister Marguerite Wasson. Sister Wasson was born July 5, 1854, aged 39 years, 7 months and 9 days.

She was united in marriage with Thomas W. Wasson August 18, 1872, with whom she lived until the enemy death, parted them; keeping her part of the contract sacred until the end. She leaves a husband and eleven children to mourn their loss; but they sorrow not as those that have no hope. Her sleep will be short for Jesus is soon coming to raise the dead, when we trust, she will come forth to an immortal life. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer in connection with 1 Thess. iv. 13-14, to a large congregation of sympathizing friends; showing them that the dead shall live again, and that hope centers in the resurrection. We then laid her to rest in the cold silent grave to wait till Jesus comes, for if we believe that Jesus died and rose, so also those having slept, will God, through Jesus lead out with him. 1 Thess. iv. 13-14. Emphatic Diaglott.

"Mother thou art sweetly sleeping,
All unconscious of our gloom,
But the Savior soon is coming,
And will raise thee from the tomb.
Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come,
And thy will on earth be done,
Then no more shall death [illegible]
There shall be eternal joy."

Vandalia Line Excursions.

To South, Southeast and Southwest will run on various dates from now until June 5th, 1894, inclusive, One Fare Round trip. Call on or address any Vandalia Line Agent and ask for information contained in Circular No. 827 of January 20th, 1894.

Address of Treasurer of Ladies Evangelical Aid Society, Miss Emma Jackman, Box 364, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, if each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way in such as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time your may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

Kansas Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised for the purpose of sending an evangelist to isolated brethren that are desirous of having the Gospel proclaimed in their vicinity and are not able financially to bear the expense.

Those wishing to have an evangelist sent to them, can correspond with the Secretary, L. A. Chaplin, Ashton, Kansas. Those wishing to contribute to this fund may send the amount to the Treasurer, W. H. Bernard, Oxford, Kansas.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 4, 1894. NO. 13.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

I'll Take What Father Takes.

'Twas in the flowery month of June,
The sun was in the west,
When a merry, but a motley company
Met at a public feast.

Around the room rich banners spread,
And garlands fresh and gay;
Friend greeted friend right joyously
Upon that festive day.

The board was filled with choicest fare,
The guests sat down to dine;
Some called for "bitter," some for "stout,"
And some for rosy wine.

Among the joyful company,
A perfect youth appeared;
Scarce sixteen summers had he seen,
No specious snare he feared.

An empty glass before the youth,
Soon drew the waiter near;
"What will you take, sir?" he inquired,
"Stout, bitter, mild or clear?

"We've rich supplies of foreign port,
We've first class wine and cakes."
The youth with guileless look, replied,
"I'll take what father takes."

Swift as an arrow went the words
Into his father's ears;
And soon a conflict deep and strong,
Awoke terrific fears.

The father looked upon his son,
Then gazed upon the wine.
Oh God! he thought, were he to taste,
Who could the end divine?

Have I not seen the strongest fall,
The fairest led astray?
And shall I on my only son,
Bestow a curse this day?

No, Heaven forbid. "Here, waiter, bring
Bright water unto me,
My son will take what father takes;
My drink shall water be."

—W. Hoyle.

When and How are the Nations Blessed?

Is the theory true that while the elect are gathered with Christ in the air at his second coming, that the earth is set on fire, and the world of mankind are burned up, and that is their final judgment? Is this theory in harmony with God's revealed plan of salvation? A passage in Peter is quoted as authority for such a faith. Peter prefaces this passage by saying one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and that he is not slack concerning his promise, nor willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. After this gracious statement of mercy for the salvation of all men, he says the day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night, in the which (or during which day) the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

The qualifying term here in the which day plainly shows it is a gradual work for the day, and to claim a vast destruction takes place at the beginning, the text does not warrant. It is the works therein to be burned up, not man nor the earth. Christ came to destroy the works of the devil. He came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. Our object in this article is to see if God's revealed plan of salvation is in harmony with such a theory. Does not such a construction of this text make Peter contradict himself, and does it not defeat the very object and work for which the day was appointed? Peter in speaking of this day in another place calls it the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, (he being present) and also the times of restitution of all things God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. This gives us a wide field of research for restitution events.

THE OATH CLAD PROMISE.

We will quote first the parent promise, which is the father of all promises. It needs no additions nor subtractions made to it, and anything that militates against literal fulfilment must be another gospel. "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The great object of this promise is to subdue and bless all nations—not destroy, and the seed is the means through which the blessing comes. Paul quotes this promise, and calls it the gospel, and says the seed is Christ and those that are in him.

James says Simon (Peter) hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name (the seed) and to this agree the words of the prophets. After this I (Christ) will return (the second time) and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down (Jerusalem), and will build again the ruins thereof, and will set it up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called. This agrees with the parent promise as to the seed being perfected first. Then the blessing comes to all the families of the earth in times of restitution. Some claim the tabernacle is a figurative representation of the church, but the church has never fallen down to be rebuilt.

CHRIST'S NOTED PRAYER.

He prayed not for the world till all (not a part) the Father had given him were made one, as he and his Father are one, and then he included the world in his prayer, and says it is that they may believe. Such a oneness cannot obtain till bitter sectarianism is in the past, and they are immortalized. Here we have another confirmation of the literal fulfilment of the original gospel promise, from the highest authority. The fact that Christ did not pray for the world till the elect were made one and perfect is proof that the world will then believe, for he never prayed in vain. This shows that then is God's due time to enlighten the world by the gospel, and dispel the gross darkness that covers the people, and to destroy the veil (of ignorance) spread over all nations.

As the seed only are saved when Christ comes, and they form his body of rulers as joint heirs, and sit with him in his throne, the blessing of the nations to have a fulfilment must be in the future. If not, there would be no peoples, nations, languages, tongues nor dominions to serve him, as the prophets have said, and the great object of the oath clad promise would prove a failure and be a deception and a fraud.

Christ speaks of the world in his prayer as being a separate class from the elect ones the Father had given him, and as the means through which they were to believe, and yet not one of this class have believed when he comes, for the seed only are taken. Does this not turn their promised blessing into a curse and make Christ's prayer for their belief a failure? Most certainly unless it is still in the future.

THE GROANING CREATION.

Their future blessing as given by Paul, is in perfect keeping with the Abrahamic promise, showing that they are waiting in hope till the manifestation of the sons of God, for the blessing. The creature was made subject to vanity (death), but not as a finality, for they were subjected in hope in God's purpose, though they are left in darkness and ignorance concerning it in this life. In God's arrangement, they are waiting for the manifestation (or resurrection) of the sons of God first. Then the creation also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption (death) to the glorious privilege of having the gospel light that they may be perfected by obedience, and made subjects of the kingdom. Not only the groaning creation are waiting, but we ourselves also which have the first fruits of the Spirit, are waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body.

NATIONAL FAILURE OF ISRAEL AND THE LESSON IT TEACHES.

By God's dealings with the children of Israel, we may learn why he has in his wisdom placed the great work of blessing the nations with a saving knowledge of the gospel in the coming age, where both rulers and laws will be perfect. Israel is the only nation God has ever attempted to govern and bless by a written code of laws, and rulers of divine appointment.

Though they were signally blessed by special protection and miraculous deliverance, and instructed by inspired prophets as to their duty and privilege, yet the human prevailed, and all tended to harden rather than soften their hearts, and they became a wicked and rebellious nation. In this, God has practically demonstrated to the world the impossibility of governing nations by human rulers, though inspired of God. While the world lies in the wicked one, and the earth is in the hand of the wicked, God is taking out pilgrims and strangers, and qualifying them as a tested and tried people to be with Christ their head and have power over the nations.

THE PROMISED NATIONAL BLESSING.

This blessing is always spoken of as being given in the restitution times, and the nations as being ruled over, and obeying, while the seed are spoken of as ruling and having authority. For proof we refer to the prophets as Peter directed. Christ has not received the kingdom. Yet he is now an heir to the throne of his father David — a prince waiting for it. He has gone into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and we are still praying for it to come. Christ is given dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him. These are not the seed, but the world Christ prayed might believe. Here it is fulfilled after he comes, just as he prayed, and as Paul and Peter predicted. The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the most high. These elect ones—the seed, being joint heirs with Christ—sit as priests and kings with him in his throne, to reign over the nations. Those that have been faithful will be given authority over many things, and over cities, and judge the world. All kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him. All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

These nations, peoples, languages and tongues that serve and obey cannot be the people God is now taking out of the nations, for they are never called the nations. There can be no government nor kingdom without subjects, territory, rulers, and laws.

CHRIST SPEAKS PEACE TO THE HEATHEN.

We will now quote another class of Scriptures that apply to the world at large, and teach the same promised blessing. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. An inheritance is supposed to be something desirable—a possession to be enjoyed, and certainly Christ would not ask for the heathen on purpose to destroy them, and that according to this fire theory is done before he comes in possession of them, or they have had even a chance to be saved. Many suppose because he breaks them with a rod of iron, and dashes their selfish powers in pieces, that it means the destruction of the people. Earthly governments show more mercy and wisdom than that. They only destroy and conquer sufficiently to get control—the people are not destroyed. Iron represents power to conquer—subdue—break in pieces. When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. Christ is to reign in the midst of his enemies. He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth. He shall wound the heads over the many countries. He shall rebuke strong nations afar off. He shall speak peace to the heathen and have dominion from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth. The heathen shall fear the name of the Lord and all the kings of the earth thy glory.

When Christ sits on the throne of his father David and is governor among the nations. All the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him. All the nations thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord. Look unto me all the ends of the earth, and be ye saved. The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

We have taken Peter's word for authority and gathered up a few among the many prophetical blessings promised to the nations, and find their fulfilment a certainty, and their location in the restitution times.

(To be Concluded.)

Queries, Objections, and Theories.

I am asked by a brother in Canada the following questions:—"Will Bro. B. Wilson tell us through The Restitution what evidence he had for stating in Diaglott that Luke gives us Mary's ancestry? Some deny the authenticity of the first two chapters of both Matthew and Luke. Do you consider these chapters as genuine as the rest of the New Testament? —P. H. Bouk."

With respect to the genealogical table given in Luke iii. 23-38, being that of Mary's ancestry, I think there can be no reason for denying. The name of Mary is not mentioned, probably because a woman's name was not permitted by the Hebrews to be entered upon their genealogical tables. Jesus, is here stated to be, (as was supposed,) the Son of Joseph, who was the son of Heli; while in Matt. i. 16, we read that Jacob was Joseph's father. The only reasonable way of solving this seeming difficulty is by understanding Joseph to be Heli's son-in-law by marriage—Jacob being his real father, and Heli his father-in-law. Thus the line of descent on Mary's side, as given by Luke, is upward to Nathan, the son of David, thence to Abraham, and from Abraham to Adam, son of God by creation. Matthew gives the pedigree of Jesus from Abraham to David, and from David through Solomon to Joseph, the LEGAL father of Jesus. Hence the two lines of descent from David through Solomon and Nathan, come together in Mary and Joseph, and thus Jesus becomes emphatically "the son of David"—or if we can receive it, as he so frequently called himself "the son of the man." What man was he the son of, if not of him with whom Jehovah "made an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure," concerning a son who should sit upon his throne forever?

As to the genuineness of the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke, I have no reason to doubt. They are given to us as genuine by the most learned editors of the Greek text, such as Griesbach, Lachman, Tischendorf, Tregelles, etc., and are found in the oldest Greek MSS., as well as the Syriac version of the New Testament.

Another brother writes me from Clinton, Ark., as follows;—"Brother, I have just read your "Thoughts about Christ," in The Restitution for Feb. 14, and in your thoughts on "As He now is," third column, I mean the words "He was raised to an immortal life"—now it is one thing to make a statement, but quite another thing to prove it. If Paul be right in 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16, then Jesus the Christ, will not be immortal until after that time at least."

I trust that I am not too old to learn. I really thought that I was scripturally correct when I wrote the sentence—"He was raised to an immortal life." The only passage, however, quoted to prove that Christ is not yet immortal is 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16, "Who in his times shall show, the blessed and only Potentate,—the King of kings, and Lords; who only hath immortality," etc. Immortality may be inherent or derived. Its meaning is deathlessness. Deity is the only being in the universe possessing inherent life, and absolute deathlessness. If other beings become immortal, they derive it from God, the great fountain of life. The one spoken of in the above text is our Lord Jesus Christ, who at and after his appearing, in his own times or seasons, will show or exhibit the only Potentate. We may ask here, how can Christ show the invisible, immortal, and incorruptible God, except it be in his own person? Is he not the image or likeness of the invisible God? Col. i. 15; 2 Cor. iv. 4. If so, then is he not immortal? What did Jesus mean when he said—"As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself," John v. 26; that life or immortality is inherent in the Father, and given to the Son? And did not Jesus say to the beloved disciple—"I am the first and the last, and the living one; I was even dead, but, behold, I am living for the ages of the ages; and I have the keys of death and hades?" Rev. i. 17, 18 (Diag.) "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. vi. 9. "Christ is the first-born from the dead;" "the first-fruit of the sleepers;" Col. i. 18; 1 Cor. xv. 20; Rev. i. 5; implying that there are others like him who will be raised to the same kind of life. Hence Paul says of him, "that he might be the first-born among many brethren," Rom. viii. 20. These are those who bear his likeness; like him they are sons of God; "for both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one (Father;) for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the congregation will I sing praise unto thee." Heb. ii. 11, 12. These brethren being children of God, by faith and obedience, are "heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ." Rom. viii. 17; Gal. iv. 7. So whatever is promised by the Father to his beloved Son, is also given to and shared with his brethren. Hence they are likewise called "first-fruits" and "first-borns." See Rev. xiv. 4; Heb. xii. 23. As such, they are the blessed and holy ones who have a portion with Christ in the first or chief resurrection—the resurrection to immortality—on whom the second death hath no power, and reign as king-priests for a thousand years. Christ, the first-fruit, was raised up from the dead to die no more, so also, those who are Christ's at his coming. Jesus told the Sadducees that those "accounted worthy to obtain that world, (age,) and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are like angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," Luke xx. 35, 36. Is not deathlessness taught in this language? If Christ was not raised up to an immortal life, why is it said of him, "that after the similitude of Melchizedec there ariseth another priest who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life?" Heb. vii. 15, 16. And this great high priest, "because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Verses 24, 25. If Christ then ever lives, continues ever, and now has endless life, when he comes he will give the same deathless nature to his brethren. "Because I live, ye shall live also;" "when Christ, our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory;" "we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." John xiv. 19; Col. iii. 4; 1 John iii. 2. Christ has now a glorious body, as Paul writes in Phil. iii. 21; into which likeness, he says, our vile or humiliated body is to be transformed. This change he showed the Corinthians would be effected at the resurrection. "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. xv. 42-44. This change is wrought upon the "dead in Christ." "As we have borne the image of the earthy (Adam,) we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (Adam.) Not only the dead, but also the living in Christ will experience this transformation. "Behold, I show you a secret! We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible (dead) must put on incorruption, and this mortal (living) must put on immortality." Verses 51-53. This great, important, and glorious transformation promised to those in Christ, whether dead or alive, will take place at his coming, as Paul wrote to the Thessalonians; or when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God;" "the last trump," as above; or the seventh trumpet of Rev. xi. 15-18. Then both those who "sleep in Jesus," and those who remain over, (the living) will be caught away to meet the Lord in the air. 1 Thess. iv. 14-18.

The above Scriptures reveal the important truth that our blessed Lord is now clothed with or possesses a glorious incorruptible body of life, and is therefore immortal or deathless—that in this respect he is a copy or an exact likeness of "the incorruptible God," Rom. i. 23, "the King eternal, the incorruptible, the invisible, the only God," 1 Tim. i. 17; and that therefore "in his own times, (the age to come,) he will exhibit the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in light inaccessible; whom no man hath seen, nor can see." 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. And we are also taught to believe that the body of Christ, will participate with him, the head, in his glory, and therefore will be incorruptible, immortal, spiritual, powerful, and glorious. And this dignity they will possess while reigning with Christ as a kingly priesthood for a thousand years.

Without further remarks, I submit the foregoing for the consideration of the reader. I leave others to judge as to whether or not there is Scripture proof that "Christ was raised to an immortal life," as our brother thinks to be a mere unproved statement. I have preferred to make these remarks through The Restitution, than to write a private letter, thinking that others perhaps might be benefitted.

Our brother in his letter gives a theory in support of his position, that Christ is not now immortal, as follows:—

"1. The natural man—70 years or flesh life.

2. The spiritual man—1000 year life.

3. The immortal man or unending life

Again, our first father, the flesh father; next, Christ our father, 1000 years gift life; then God our father—immortal life. In natural life our flesh father, the head; then Christ our father and head during 1000 years; then God our father, head even over Christ. So even Christ will not be immortal until the end of 1000 years."

The above theory unsupported by Scripture proof, and the deduction drawn therefrom—"So even Christ will not be immortal until end of 1000 years"—being illogical, I have nothing to say, but leave the reader to form his own conclusions.

He's So Obliging.

"I can't make out how it is that Jim Johnson always gets such good places," said Harry Smith, the carpenter's son, to another boy, as they were returning home one afternoon.

And Harry was not the only one who thought thus, for "Jim's luck" was the talk of the neighborhood. Jim was certainly no pattern of cleverness, of beauty, or strength; he could not do more than others, nor could he do it as well as many; but for all that, it was quite true he always had good places, good wages, and a good character.

When he left one employer to go to another, it was generally said, "I would not part with him, if I could help it: he is a good boy, and so obliging."

This was the secret of his good luck—he was "so obliging." Did the merchant or the wagoner want an errand boy, or did any one want a job done at a moment's notice, it was only to get a sight of Jim, and it was as good as done; for Jim would hurry through his own business, in order to help.

When he was at home, he kept the wood-box full of wood, and his mother never had to ask him to bring a bucket of water, and many other little things did he do in a cheerful manner; so that he was a great favorite. And if he saw younger boys in trouble, he would try to help them out; and he put on his shoes after having taken them off one pouring, rainy night, to walk two miles to the town for a parcel containing a new gown the carrier had neglected to bring the kitchen girl, who was crying her eyes out because she could not have it to wear next morning at her sister's wedding. But it was not so much what Jim did, as how he did it, that was so agreeable.—American Agriculturalist.

Have You Read It?

It was told of Franklin that at one time in Paris he was greatly ridiculed for his love of the Bible, and that he made up his mind to find out how many of the scoffers had read it. He informed one of the learned societies, of which he was a member, that he had come across a story of pastoral life in ancient times, that appeared to him very beautiful, but he would like the judgment of the society upon it. On the evening appointed, Franklin had a reader of finely modulated voice to read them the book of Ruth. They were in ecstacies over it, and one and another rose to express gratification and admiration, and the desire that the manuscript should be printed. "It is printed" said Franklin, "and is part of the Bible."—Ram's Horn.

Amen to This.

Some people fail entirely to pray for the thing they most need. A brother was praying with much noise for faith—"soul-saving faith, sin-killing faith, devil-driving faith." Just then a brother, to whom the noisy man owed a large bill, shouted out, "Amen, amen, and give us a debt-paying faith too." It may be as well to pray at others less and pray to God more about our own sins and weaknesses, and not cut short our prayers if they hit our own pocketbooks.

FEAR of man will make us hide sin; but the fear of the Lord will cause us to hate it. •

"HEAD-FOREMOST toward the world would seem to be the right thing; and heart-foremost toward God." •

As long as the sea was calm the disciples suffered Christ to sleep; but when they were liked to be drowned, they awoke him with a "Master, save us, we perish." •

"AN humble man is like a good tree; the more full of fruit the branches are, the lower they bend themselves. Through much tribulation ye must enter into the kingdom of God." •

HERE is an item that is worth saving, whoever wrote it:—"He who reluctantly attends, pointedly asks, calmly speaks, cooly answers, and ceases when he has no more to say, is in possession of the best requisites of Man. •

IT was Carlyle who said, "Show me the man you honor. I know by that symptom better than any other, what kind of a man you are yourself; for you show me what your ideal of manhood is—what kind of a man you long to be." •

THE duration of one's life should not be estimated by his years, but by what he has accomplished—by the uses he has made of time and opportunity. By inuring our mind and body to exercise and activity, we double the years of our existence." •

THE condemnation which comes upon all men by one man's offence, Rom. v. 16, 18, consists of the Divine decree, "Thou shalt surely die," "unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. ii. 17; iii. 19. To be redeemed from that condemnation is to deprive the death which it brought of its permanent power. •

WE often meet with those who are waiting for something to turn up to their advantage, instead of turning something up. This may not be so much amiss if, while waiting they were training themselves for their chance when it came. This is seldom the case, however, with waiters; and hence, when the chance comes they are seen to be greater simpletons than ever. Opportunities are worth only what one's antecedents enable him to take advantage of. This is true, we think, of every industry or profession, and every project, religious or secular. •

THE Rev. Dr. Thomas Spurgeon, the papers say, has been elected as pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, to succeed his father. The papers also say that this will disappoint many American [illegible] of the Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, whom it has been frequently [illegible] and never publicly denied [illegible] Presbyterian clergyman, th[illegible] baptized by immersion in order to qualify himself for election to that position. We think the Tabernacle people did just right. The Doctor deserves to be left severely alone if this be true. This incident reminds us of a colored man in the South who once informed us that he was "gwine to get 'ligion" so he could be a preacher; he had rather fallen out with work. •

"REDEEMING the time," hardly receives the attention its importance demands. The Spirit evidently regards it as so much capital entrusted to us. It has to be wisely employed or it will prove a curse. The Christian is expected by the great head of the church to be a bearer of light to others. He has no light of his own. His must be a reflected light,—God must shine into his heart before he can lumine others. If these responsibilities were realized it would produce a marked change in the average believer; time would never hang heavily upon him, and frivolities would grow more and more distasteful; the work assigned him would cause him to bend all his energies to fit himself for it. •

"THE severest of all conflicts is his who strives to subdue himself." •

"THE earth and air feed the plants, the plants feed the animals, the animals feed the air and earth." This is the way Whittaker speaks of the great circle of nutrition in nature.

BRO. J. S. Hatch wishes it announced that he will be at Argos, Ind., on Saturday night before the third Sunday in April, to hold meetings as long as it is thought best to do so. He was at this place before and held meetings for nine days, covering the third Sunday in March.

IT argues strangely for the moral department of man's nature when we read such sentences as these from a man who had no ray of divine light: "The superior man will watch over himself when he is alone. He examines his heart that there may be nothing wrong there, and that he may have no cause for dissatisfaction with himself." So wrote Confucius. •

SAM Small once said that some preachers claimed that if they opened their mouths the Lord would fill them. He admitted this to be true, but explained that he would only fill them with wind. This trusting to the Spirit, when the Word of the Spirit has been neglected is a great piece of pious folly. The command to "seek ye out of the Book of the Lord and read," shows that we must help ourselves to what God has furnished, before we ask for more. •

EVENTS are summoning God's people to their posts with every faculty awake and every energy engaged. What with this din of business, and politics and science and fashion, and clamor of parties and mad pursuit of pleasure, they must speak loud or they will not be heard, and speak earnestly or they will not be listened to. They will have to put forth all their strength or no heed will be given to their message, and even then, little enough. The banner of Truth will be pushed aside, overborne, trampled down in the jostling crowd if they do not put forth their mightiest efforts to keep it afloat. Would to God the friends of God and truth would concentrate their efforts and manifest the zeal of some I know who, without half the truth, and no good hope at all, persistently go from house to house at great expense, to propagate a mere dogma, that to them comprises the whole gospel. Truth zealously handled is what these times call for. The Saturday night of the age is rapidly approaching; —the pay-day is at hand,—and when the Master rises up he shuts to the door into the kingdom no more kings and priests to God are made. Brothers and sisters all:—are we living and acting so that it will be said of us, we have done what we could? What are we doing for God?

"They Follow Me."

Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my Father's hand." What a delightful passage for those whom Jesus calls my sheep! It is literally packed with gems. What an intimate relation of shepherd and sheep! Shepherds have the care of sheep,—direct them to good pastures, lead them to wholesome waters;—gather them into the fold; —protect them from danger, and tend them when sick. He wants his sheep to realize just what he is to them, and what they are to him. He calls them, "My sheep," says he knows them, and they know him, and he elsewhere tells us how they become his—the Father gave them to him; and later he tells why, or on what condition they were given him. "I am the good Shepherd; the good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." No wonder he cherishes for them the tenderest regard. No wonder he promises to raise them at the last day.

WE are wondering how many of our readers can with the heart say as the Psalmist, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want?" This is the privilege of all who by the door have entered the fold; for it is not only as a flock he knows them; —he knows them individually, knows every one of them; knows all about them; knows them exactly as they are, not merely as they appear. And it is because he knows them that he is able to guide and feed them. And because of this knowledge, too, he is able to proportion their duties, and trials, and advantages, and drawbacks to their real needs, capacities, and characters. Yes; because of this he is able to succor them.

"My sheep hear my voice and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life." They heard him say, "Come unto me," in the first place, and they came—they responded to the call. They became, by a divine foreordination, children of God and heirs of God; candidates for divine nature. What a destiny for earth worms! They, however, [illegible] Jesus. This tests their loyalty. He does not drive them before him as the shepherds with us, but walks before them as the Shepherd of the East. They can follow or not, just as they please. This decides whether they love in deed as well as words. If they follow him it is evidence of deep-down, heartfelt love and gratitude for the sacrifice of himself.

In the 4th of John he shows his sheep how he expects his sheep to follow him; "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." In this way their lives are moulded in harmony with his life, so that they can follow in his footsteps, though at a distance. Beginning at the waters of baptism they follow him through that symbolic death and resurrection, and henceforth their whole life is to be a continuous journey over the road he traveled. And as they meet with temptations within and snares without, and persecution, and scorn, and sorrow, and mourning, they remember that he has experienced all this. Tempted in all points like as we are, touched with the feelings of our infirmities, acquainted with grief, bowed by sorrows, he knows every step of the way, and asks the sheep to follow him.

It would be well for all who claim to be of his fold to remember how all his disciples forsook him and fled except Peter and John, and they only followed him at a distance, and presently one of them thrice denied all knowledge of him. It becomes us to examine ourselves to see how matters stand. Are we halting along in the rear, thinking to escape the notice of the enemies of the cross, and the crown Jesus is [illegible] to wear? If so we are ashamed of Jesus and his words, and unless we mend our ways, he will be ashamed of us when he comes.

For ourself we say, as the wheels of time hurry us on, we see plainly enough what the great regret is going to be presently—that we have done so little for him who has done so much for us, died for us, washed us in his own blood, rose again for us, intercedes for us, and who is soon coming again for us. Great God help us to occupy, to redeem the time, to be ever watchful, prayerful, faithful, so that we may hail his advent with joy —Amen.

Jacob's Epistle.

1. Jacobus, a bond-servant of God and the Lord Jesus Christ unto the twelve tribes in the dispersion greeting.

2. Account it all joy, my brethren, when ever ye fall into divers trials;

3. Knowing that the approved value of your faith is working out patient endurance;

4. And let the patient endurance have a complete work, that ye may be complete and with full allotments failing in nothing.

5. And if any of you be lacking in wisdom, let him ask from God who giveth absolutely and reproacheth not, and he will have given it to him.

6. But let him ask in faith, wavering in no respect. For the one who wavereth is like to sea-waves blown and tossed by the wind.

7. Let that man not think that he will get anything from the Lord.

8. A double-minded man unstable in all his ways.

9. And let the brother of low degree boast in his exaltation:

10. But the rich in his humiliation, because like a flower of grass will he pass away.

11. For the sun hath arisen with its scorching heat and it hath withered the grass, and the flower thereof hath fallen off and the comliness of its face hath perished. In this wise also the rich man in his goings will have withered away.

12. Blessed-happy the man is he who patiently endureth trial, because when proof of value hath occurred he will take the garland (crown) of the life which he hath promised to them that love him.

13 Let no one when being tempted say, I am being tempted from God. For God is one who cannot be tempted with evil things, and he tempteth no one.

14. But each one is being tempted when he is being dragged away and enticed by his own inordinate desire.

15. And the inordinate desire when it hath conceived bringeth forth sin; and the sin when it hath been performed produceth death.

16. Be not ye deceived, my brethren,

17. All good giving and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no parallax nor shadow-turning.

18. Having designed it he generated us with a word of truth, to the end that we be a certain first-fruits of his generated creations [illegible]

19. Know ye, my beloved brethren, and let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath.

20. For man's wrath doth not work God's righteousness.

21. Therefore laying aside all filth and excess of evil accept ye in meekness the implanted word, that is enabled to save your souls.

22. And become word-doers, and not hearers only deluding yourselves with false reasoning.

23. Because if any one is a word-hearer and not a doer he is like to a man who contemplateth (the face of his origin [illegible]) his natural face in a mirror.

24. For he hath contemplated himself and gone away and straightway ignored what sort of a person he was.

25. But the one who hath stooped to look into the perfect law of liberty and continued at it, not having become a hearer of something to be ignored, but a word-doer, he will be blest-happy in the doing of it.

26. If any one thinketh he is religious—having reverence for the [illegible] (the same expression of [illegible] especially) and not bridling his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, that man's religion (religious folly) is vain.

27. Pure and undefiled religion (same word) in the estimation of the God and Father is this, to take an oversight of orphans and widows in their affliction, and to watch to keep (esoteric watch) oneself unspotted from the cosmos.

COMMENT.

"Jacobus" instead of "James" R. V.

"A bond-servant" instead of "servant" R. V.

"In the dispersion" instead of "which are of the dispersion" R. V.

"Divers trials" instead of "manifold temptations" R. V.

"The approved value" instead of "the proof" R. V.

"Patient endurance" instead of "patience" R. V.

"Complete work" instead of "perfect work" R. V.

"And with full allotment" instead of "entire" R. V.

"Failing in nothing" instead of "lacking in nothing" R. V.

"Absolutely" instead of "liberally" R. V.

"And the comliness of its face" instead of "the grace of the fashion" R. V.

"Trial" instead of "temptations" R. V.

Trial includes "temptations" and is a broader term. The Lord does'nt tempt any one we learn later here; but he has created us in such a way that we can be tempted. Otherwise we would be of no more account than any other machine that can only go the way it is made to go.

"Proof of value hath occurred" instead of "when he hath been approved" R. V. which leaves out the idea of the process going on; and we have in this immediate connection the process fully given.

"Inordinate desire" instead of "lust" R. V. meaning any inordinate desire. The word "lust" in its general acceptance is too narrow to cover the ground meant here.

"Produceth" instead of "bringeth forth" R. V. which spoils the figure here used.

"All good giving and every perfect gift" instead of "every good gift and every perfect boon" R. V. The process and the result—the process is the idea of the text.

"The lights" instead of "lights" R. V.

"No parallax nor shadow-turning" instead of "no variation neither shadow that is cast by turning" R. V. for obvious reasons.

"Having designed he hath generated us with a word of truth" instead of "Of his own will he brought us forth by the word of truth" R. V. a very different thought it seems to me.

"A certain first-fruits of his generated creatures" instead of "a kind of first-fruits of his creatures" R. V. which also fails to bring out the true meaning of creature, it seems to me.

"Ignored" instead of "forgotten" R. V. Hasn't tried to remember is the idea.

"A word-doer" instead of "a doer of the word" R. V. The author is asserting a general principle, not specific teaching merely true in general as well as in the spiritual order of things.

"But the one who hath stooped to look into the perfect law of liberty" instead of "but he who looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty" R. V.

"A hearer of something to be ignored" instead of "being a hearer that forgetteth" R. V. We can't help forgetting more or less and the writer is not speaking here of lapses of this sort, as the reader will see.

"To take an over-sight of" instead of "visit" R. V. Too indefinite, a word to translate [illegible] the text.

"And to watch to keep oneself" instead of "to keep oneself" R. V.

If the reader will compare the C. V. & R. V. translation carefully with the one given here throughout I think many incongruities and difficulties will be removed. God never demands impossibilities of us and we learn this when we understand half, what he has said through [illegible] inspiration.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

The importance of the grand truth of the resurrection of our Lord from the grave cannot be too strongly insisted on by us who maintain that he was and is the only-begotten Son of God—begotten not of man, but by the power of the Highest—by that same Holy Spirit which raised him from the dead because he pleased the Father. That fact is the source of our hope of eternal life. If, or rather since, he rose from the dead, he is thereby constituted Lord, both of the living and the dead, entrusted with the keys of death and of Hades, so that we can have full confidence that the gates of Hades, i. e., the unseen, will not have power to retain those whom he decrees to set free. His resurrection is the great central doctrine of our holy and elevating religion, and it is no wonder that sceptics of all classes attempt to throw doubt upon it. Their feeble attempts are all in vain, and any one has only to read over again calmly the beautiful and simple accounts of the event transmitted to us by the evangelists to satisfy a candid mind. Take, for example, that story of the interview of the two disciples on the way to Emmaus with their risen Lord, as recorded in the last chapter of Luke's history of our Lord. How simple, natural, and touching that account is, as showing the workings of the human mind in a state of doubt and perplexity! How well calculated to meet their doubts and fears, and to prepare them for meeting those doubts that should afterwards rise, when he would be no longer with them bodily to silence their doubts! Could any word express more clearly the various conflicting suggestions of their minds than those they use? Let us look for a moment at the simple story (Luke xxiv. 14-35). We have the two disciples walking along the high-road leading out of Jerusalem to Emmaus, and there could scarcely be anything within the range of their vision that would not recall some incident in the brief but wonderful public life of their Master. No wonder then the conversation turned on what had happened to [illegible] all their hopes so rudely to the ground. In the warmth of their discussion, with its attendant depression, no wonder they did not [illegible] It was now the stranger who [illegible] which had oppressed him during the latter part of his career [illegible] apparently resultless labor [illegible] strength parted with to strengthen others, so that he could scarcely be recognized as the "Man of sorrows." His voice, his appearance, was such a contrast to their own [illegible] no wonder they did not at once recognize their Lord, whose decease they were lamenting. So when he asked them "What statements so depressing in their effect are ye bandying with one another?" it seems the most natural thing in the world that they should stop, just as if hopeless that this interesting stranger might throw some light on the matters that were so troubling them, since he seemed even ignorant of them. Yet even in the deepest grief, we are glad of any opportunity of interesting the greatest stranger in our calamities. In astonishment they ask, "Do you only reside near Jerusalem and not know what events have happened there during these last few days?" How well does the curt question, "What things?" at once evade the superfluous inquiry and, at the same time, unloose the tongues of his hearers. They confess their faith in their Master as a prophet mighty both in speech and act, acknowledged as such both by God and man, and tell of the execrable conduct of those occupying the highest positions in church and state in getting him to death. "Now," said they, "we were hoping that it is he who is about to ransom Israel for himself." Note that this refers clearly to their recent conversation and does not imply that they had lost hope altogether, though they were evidently trying with difficulty to retain hold of it. "But yet, in addition to all these considerations, the third day is now expiring since these things happened, and," it is implied "if some tangible proof does not [illegible] very soon, we will have to give up the hope. But, too (on the other hand), as if to consummate our hopes) certain women of our company astonished us, because going early to the tomb and not finding his body, they came saying also that they had seen a vision of messengers who say that he is living. And some of those with us went off to his tomb and found exactly as the women told, but they did not see him." How like, then, to Jesus' former sharp and incisive rebukes was his comment, "Oh, thoughtless and slow of believing with the heart in all things which the prophets said. Was it not necessary for the anointed to suffer these things and to enter into his glory?" And we can well understand how he would show that all the great men of old had to go through a period of trial and rejection before they were advanced to a high position, whether it were Abraham, or Jacob, or Moses, or David; but that it was necessary that he, who was to occupy the highest position of all, should suffer more than any, and go down to death itself. No wonder their hearts beat within them as they listened to the living words of truth that fell from his lips, and that they blamed themselves for their stupidity when they woke to the knowledge of whom their interlocutor really was.

Does not the whole story, in its simplicity and its truth to nature, bear testimony to the veracity of the narrator in a way that no mere forgery could do? It is true we can for a short time yield ourselves up to the witchery of many of our best composed fables or novels, but how soon they pall upon us and show their hollowness and falsity on deeper investigation. Not so here, the longer we study it the more lifelike we see it to be.

Another remarkable corroboration of the truth of the gospel narrative is to be found in the case of Thomas. I do not refer to the fact simply that he insisted on such tangible proofs of the personality of Jesus, as on the fact that it was he who insisted on this proof. Few notice that the words Thomas and Didymus both mean "a twin," and thus it is hinted at rather than dwelt upon, as in many similar instances of Holy Writ, that Thomas had often been mistaken for his own twin brother. So provision was made, in the wisdom of God, against this which was almost the only possible source of mistake or deception, by the fact that one of the apostles was a twin, and consequently stood out last against the recognition of Jesus. But the evidence was too overwhelming of the identity of Jesus when he got the proofs he wanted—the only completely satisfactory proofs that it was in reality the very Jesus who had hung on the Cross. The fact being merely hinted at and not dwelt at any length upon is confirmatory proof of the truth of the Scripture story. But it requires to be looked at minutely to see the matter in all its bearings. As it is written, "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing (and yet so that it is a mystery or open secret) but the glory of kings to search out a matter."

The great and convincing proof, however, of the truth of the Resurrection story is the wonderful correspondence between the life of Jesus as recorded by the evangelists and the result of that life in so pleasing the Father that he could not suffer his beloved to remain under the power of death. If we believe, as all must believe, that compliance with the laws of the Great Ruler of the Universe tends to procure longevity, surely we must believe that one who "made it his meat and drink to do his Father's will," who so loved the world of mankind as to suffer himself to be put to death rather than injure his enemies, who bore meekly and uncomplainingly all that the malice of men could do to him, and died with the prayer on his lips "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do," and I say surely we must believe that such a one was not only "a Son of God," but the unique begotten Son of the Deity, and that the time must come when he shall in reality, as he is already in figure, be hailed as Lord of all. All civilized nations already reckon their time from his wondrous birth in the stable in Bethlehem, and the time must speedily come when he and his will enter on the possession of the possession he has purchased amid the plaudits of a humbled and revering world.

MARRIED.

At the home of the bride's father, Samuel Osborn, in Stark Co., Ind., March 25th, 1894, by the writer, Brother Benjamin F. Fetters, and Sister Cora R. Osborn.

Poetry.

The Light of Hope.

The course of the weariest river
Ends in the great gray sea;
[illegible] forever and ever,
[illegible] up and to be free.
[illegible] rainbow, the sky adorning,
[illegible] promise beneath the storm;
The glimmer of coming morning
[illegible] midnight gloom will form.
[illegible] all [illegible] are riven,
[illegible] the shadows be,
And peace will at last be given,
[illegible] to you and me.

[illegible] the path be dreary,
[illegible] to the goal;
[illegible] the heart and the head are weary,
[illegible] the soul;
[illegible] wrought temptations,
[illegible]
[illegible]
What [illegible]
[illegible] strong hand and keen eye be ready
[illegible] plain and unbounded fame;
[illegible] steady
[illegible] the close.

[illegible] heavy [illegible] may be tolling,
[illegible] the coming comes the light;
[illegible]
Yet [illegible]
And love [illegible]
For the [illegible] and the pure;
And time gives the fullest measure
[illegible]
And the Word that no law has shaken
Has the future [illegible];
For we know that when we "awaken"
We shall be "satisfied."

Answer to Reviewer's No. 7.

Reviewer says, "Oh, but we pity from our heart those who have a mere man for their Savior." It is a great comfort to find him at last confessing that Christ was more than a mere man; for this, in my humble opinion, is equal to confessing that he was partly divine. But reviewer's definition that "a mere man is one begotten by man" is illogical and unsound, for certainly Adam was a mere man, yet never "begotten" by man. If reviewer would correct his definition, he would find himself on firmer and more permanent footing.

But why did not reviewer answer my other question,—"whether he regards Christ as an object of worship?" Why keep me so long begging for the answer of such a vital question? The delay injures his cause more than mine. Also I inquired, why does reviewer say of Christ that "his foundation was in the dust." Was he intentionally applying to him words applied to those who die without wisdom? Job iv. 19, 20, 21.

Reviewer says, "We have shown, we think, conclusively, that it was Jesus who was Christ, and that there was no Christ till Jesus was baptized?"

When I used the word "think," reviewer upbraided me and said, "A resort to thinking shows disbelief of God." May I venture, therefore, to remind reviewer that he has never yet offered the slightest apology for taunting me with the use of "think," unless his own adoption of it is intended as some sort of apology?

Of course, the Word, and Jesus, and Christ are not three separate persons, but three names or titles of the same Being. If "there was no Christ till Jesus was baptized," why does the universal common sense of mankind say that all the period "B. C." (i. e., before Christ) ends at Messiah's birth in Bethlehem? According to reviewer it did not end till 30 years after, at the baptism in Jordan. The angel told the shepherds, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Luke ii. 11. The angel knew better than my reviewer. So did good old Simeon, for he could testify that "He had seen the Lord's Christ" after seeing the infant Savior that was brought into the temple. Lu. ii. 26. His birth was "the birth of Jesus Christ," and therefore he was "Christ Jesus" when he "came into the world." 1 Tim. i. 15. He is "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and for ever." Heb. xiii. 8.

The charge that the Son's creation of the world "necessitates the monstrous conclusion that the Son was as old as his Father," is another specimen of bad logic. The correlative terms father and son always imply (1) priority of the father, (2) duality of persons, and (3) similarity of nature.

The heavens and earth which the Father created through and for the Son contain "things visible" or "things seen" (Diaglott), and they shall "wax old" and be changed. Heb. i. 10; Col. i. 16. Hence, they are not the new heavens and earth for which we are hoping, for "what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for?" The new will never wax old and be changed, but will "remain." Isa. lxvi. 22. The world that "He was in" is, therefore, the identical world that "was made by him." Jno. i. 10.

Reviewer makes very sad work of Greek and Hebrew criticism. In his anxiety to exclude Christ from any hand in the creation, he surmises that angels were used as "agents" in that work; and to bolster up this opinion he takes the divine name Elohim which belongs to the Father and the Son as the one God (Gen. i. 1; Psa. xlv. 6), and bestows it on hosts of angels who worship the Son.

The personality of "the Word" I have shown in a former article, and we have been requested by editor of THE RESTITUTION, not to repeat, but to advance "new arguments." [illegible]

Can reviewer show where I have brought Prov. viii. into this discussion? He ought to know that [illegible] "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;" and the Greek lexicons say that three of these words are feminine and one masculine. And in our Lord's expression, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life," all three of these are feminine, in the Greek language. 1 Cor. i. 7; Jno. xiv. 6. Yet all these names belong to the one personal Christ. He is even called "a Lamb as it had been slain;" and the Greek there used for Lamb (arnion) is in the neuter gender. Rev. v. 6; xiii. 8. There is no need then of any irreverent remarks concerning "son and daughter." Is there any danger that any one will ever be so unaccountably silly as to suppose that the two or three genders of these names require two or three separate persons! ! ! I have heard that Purcell in debate with Campbell, tried to bring the latter into ridicule by saying that he charged the Papacy inconsistently with being both the man of sin, and the scarlet-clad woman, and that Purcell's attempt at wit actually succeeded in raising a laugh against Campbell, among the more ignorant portion of the audience. Yet Campbell was right, for both names belong to that church. And so it is contrasted with the true church which is called "one new man" and also "a chaste virgin." Ephes. ii. 15; 2 Cor. xi. 2.

Reviewer is again mistaken in his efforts to explain Hebrew. The word olam does not occur in Mic. vii. 20, for mimey kedem is the expression there translated "from the days of old." In Mic. v. 2 we have mikkedem, translated "from of old;" and in Hab. i. 12 the same Hebrew word is spoken of the Father's own existence, where the prophet says, "Art thou not from everlasting (mikkedem,) O Lord my God, mine Holy One?" In Mic. v. 2 intensity is given by the duplex form, "from of old, from everlasting." The whole verse might well be rendered word for word, "And thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, small to be among the thousands of Judah, from thee unto me he shall come forth to be ruler in Israel; and his goings forth (are) from everlasting, from the days of eternity." If his coming forth from Bethlehem was personal, why not also his goings forth from of old? Reviewer ought to know full well that interpolating words of our own to make a text suit our theory is strictly forbidden by the Scriptures, and is death to the theory that requires it. Prov. xxx. 6; Rev. xxii. 18.

Reviewer seems not to see the inconsistency of his quoting Young's translation and objecting to my quoting Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown. Has he any proof that one of these knows any more than the other about the gospel of the kingdom?

How did reviewer or any of us learn the gospel of the kingdom, if not from the common version, translated into our mother tongue over 250 years ago by scholars whom he calls "Trinitarians?" Balaam's beast "rebuked the madness of the prophet" and taught him some things. Much more, then, may Trinitarian scholars teach us many things about Greek and Hebrew, if we be teachable. 2 Pet. ii. 16.

But why does reviewer repudiate the Diaglott's rendering of Jno. viii. 58, after extolling that useful version so highly and enthusiastically as he did in RESTITUTION of Jan. 24th? Is it because he has found out since then that both the Diaglott and the Revised Version call Jesus Christ "our great God and Savior?" Scholars, long before either version was published, knew this to be the true reading in Titus ii. 13. Does reviewer call the Diaglott a Trinitarian work?

Bagster's Analytical Greek Concordance, a standard work used in colleges, says that genesthai is of the second aorist tense. Perhaps, therefore, reviewer is mistaken in calling it "Aorist 1." The aorist belong to the "historical tenses," as Bullion's grammar says. "The Aorist represents an action or event simply as past." Kuehner's grammar says it is used "when the speaker wishes to represent the action by itself as completed." In its historical use, however, it is sometimes so modified by other words in the sentence that the past tense is nearly lost sight of in an English translation.

Reviewer seems to think I ought to give an analysis of every mood, tense, and case in Jno. viii. 58. But the result of this would be exactly the same rendering seen in the Common and Revised Versions. And if neither the revised nor the common version, nor the American Bible Union, nor even the Diaglott will convince him, I don't see how my opinion could.

When God said, "Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you," did it not mean One who existed before Abraham? How then can the same title mean any less in Jno. viii. 58? See Exodus iii. 14. Can any one suppose that Pharisees who believed in the future resurrection of Abraham, would be such idiots as to accuse a man of blasphemy and try to stone him to death for affirming that he was living, as all of them were, before that future resurrection of Abraham! ! !

I did not know that Smith and Nesbit are of our faith, nor that Young "was one of the greatest philogists"—philologists(?)—"of this generation." But even if this be so, it does not make them infallible.

Reviewer says that Jno. viii. 58 is the only instance where genesthai is rendered was. But this is another serious mistake, for it is so rendered in Acts xxii. 17—"I was (genesthai) in a trance;" and xxvii. 33—"while the day was (genesthai) coming on;" and in the Greek of Gen. ii. 5—"Every plant of the field before it was (genesthai) in the earth." And, I suppose, in many other instances that might be cited.

As to lexicons and commentaries, they are serviceable to one who will use them judiciously. Their definitions must always be tested by the Bible, and all their sayings rejected that militate against that criterion. This I have expressed plainly enough in preface to "Key-Words" and "Twelve Words."

I have nearly completed the last page of a tract to be entitled "HONORING THE SON OF GOD." It will make about 32 pages in print, and as soon as 500 copies are subscribed for, at 10 cents a copy, I hope to put the manuscript into the printer's hands. It will be a serviceable piece of literature to all, even to those who do not agree with it. Who will help me to publish this much-needed work? Some could easily order 100 copies.

ANSWER TO REVIEWER'S NO. 8.

I have been notified by Bro. Underwood that this answer must conclude my side of the question in the present discussion, and that my reviewer will be allowed one more article in reply. This gives him the last word in the discussion; but the testimonies which I have quoted from the Bible are invulnerable fortresses that "abide forever;" so that it need give us no concern as to the last word of man's writing, "for all flesh is as grass . . . . but the word of the Lord endureth forever." 1 Pet. i. 24, 25.

Reviewer's No. 8 complains that no notice has been taken of his objections to the Common Version of Col. i. 16. This version speaks of Christ as the agent by and for whom "the things visible" ("the things seen," Diaglott) were created. The things visible or SEEN must mean things that NOW exist, and therefore not the future new heavens and earth for which we are hoping: "for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" Rom. viii. 24. So of the parallel in Heb. i. 10, the earth of which he "laid the foundation" must mean the present order of things, for they shall "wax old" and "be changed;" but the future or "new heavens and earth" shall "REMAIN." Isa. lxvi. 22. Is this notice enough?

Scripture calls Christ "the Root and Offspring," not the Offspring and Root. Any theory which requires a reversal of the Scriptural order must, of course, be unworthy of our confidence. Reviewer, with a strange confusion of terms and ideas, says, "The divine root already lives, the branch does not yet live." What a shocking statement! and what a shocking theory that requires it! Does he mean that "the man whose name is the BRANCH" has never yet been born!! ! See Zech. vi. 12; Jer. xxiii. 5. It was unreasonable to suppose that he means this. And yet the question comes back to us, what does he mean by saying, "The branch does not yet live?" Has reviewer lived so long and yet not learned that "The Branch" is one of the titles of Christ?

It is very tedious to have to tell my reviewer that by "infinite merit" I do not mean "infinite sacrifice" nor "infinite victim."

At last reviewer expresses himself, though somewhat obscurely, in reference to worshipping Christ. If I mistake not, he is opposed to it. But the early Christians used "in every place to call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord." 1 Cor. i. 2. And these words, "call upon the name," denote the worship paid to the Father, as in Joel ii. 32, "whosoever shall call on the name of the LORD (Jehovah) shall be delivered." Compare Rom. x. 13; Acts ix. 14, 17; vii. 59; Luke xxiv. 52; Matt. xiv. 33; xxviii. 17; Psa. xlv. 11; Heb. i. 6. All men should "honor the Son even as they honor the Father." Jno. v. 23.

Would reviewer deny that the Son made "even the winds and the sea obey him?" Matt. viii. 27. Can he not harmonize this with Job ix. 8?

Reviewer has not yet answered whether in saying of Christ that "his foundation was in the dust," he meant to quote what Job iv. 19, 21 applies to those who "die without wisdom."

Does reviewer mean to tell us that the Septuagint version is higher authority than the original Hebrew! and that the R. V. errs in saying "son" instead of sons! Reviewer says, "Before the foundations of the earth were laid Jehovah had numerous sons." But has the reviewer forgotten that in RESTITUTION of Nov. 15th he told us that God "had no Son" when Isa. xlii. 8 was written? Would it not be a capital idea for my reviewer to make haste and be "terribly in earnest" to drop a theory which requires such contradictions?

He rails at me for quoting Clarke, and then himself quotes Clarke, Westcott, Hort, Tischendorf, etc., as though all this were consistent.

The "scholarship" of the Revisers led them to retain the expression, "the church of God," as in the Common Version of Acts xx. 28. The Diaglott says "the phrase church of the Lord nowhere occurs in the New Testament."

Reviewer seems anxious to make it appear that I believe the Son to be personally and absolutely coequal and co-eternal with the Father. And this after I have so plainly and pointedly said that "The Head of Christ is God." 1 Cor xi. 3. Common sense ought to teach every man that the correlative terms father and son imply (1st) personal priority of the father; (2nd) duality of persons; (3rd) similarity of nature.

Reviewer says, "We are next told that the Lord of glory was crucified. This mistake is corrected in Acts ii. 36."

But it was the inspired Paul who said that the princes of this world "crucified the Lord of glory." 1 Cor. ii. 8, C. V., R. V., and Diaglott.

Now, IF he means to say that Paul was mistaken, how can I hope that he will be convinced by any more of my arguments, however clear or strong?

I will now give a concluding summary which the reader will do well to cut out of the paper and keep as a reference tablet on this great subject.

The Scriptures teach concerning our great Mediator 1st, That as to his divinity he was one with the Father, Jno. x. 30; was with God at the creation, Jno. i. 1; was in the form of God, Phil. ii. 6; was called God, Heb. i. 8; was before Abraham and John, Jno. viii. 58; i. 15, 30; was the Root of David, Rev. v. 5; xxii. 16; came down from heaven, Jno. vi. 33, 38, 51; was worshipped by the church, Psa. xlv. 11; Matt. xxviii. 17; 1 Cor. i. 2; was the manifestation of the Father, Jno. xiv. 9; is the first and the last, Rev. i. 17, 18; has all the fulness of the Godhead, Col. ii. 9; and should be honored even as we honor the Father, Jno. v. 23.

2nd, That as to his humanity he was a [illegible] miraculously born of the Virgin, Matt. i. 23; Galat. iv. 4; was the seed of Abraham, Gal. iii. 16; was the Son of David, Luke i. 32; Acts ii. 30; had a body, ate, drank, slept, increased in wisdom and stature, Luke ii. 52; was weary in travel, Jno. iv. 6; groaned in spirit, was troubled. He wept, Jno. xi 33, 35; he poured out his soul unto death, Isa. liii. 10, 12; and his body was made an offering for sin, Heb. x. 10; he died in agony on the cross, was buried, rose, and proved his identity by physical signs, and was seen bodily "ascending where he was before," 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4; Luke xxiv. 31 to 41; Acts i. 3, 11; Jno. vi. 62.

And now to every reader, reviewer included, I beg leave to say in the memorable words of Paul, "I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Acts xx. 32.

WILEY JONES.

OBITUARY.

Died, in Westville, Mich., Feb. 13, 1894, Elder A. F. Servis at the age of 69 years, and 5 days. He was born in Huron Co., Ohio, Feb. 8, 1825. He has preached the gospel of the kingdom for 40 years, and many have been converted under his preaching, among whom were Brother Joel A. Simonds, and the writer, who was a half-brother. He came to Crawfordsville in 1863, and held meetings six weeks, and wife and others were convinced and immersed. He preached for the Methodists many years, but some way he got hold of George Storr's Six Sermons and they gave him a good start in the truth, and he was expelled from that church for preaching heresy. He went to work in earnest. He leaves two children to mourn his loss, besides many friends. His daughter Hattie, and son Frank, became obedient to the faith a short time ago. May they hold out faithful to the end, and meet their dear father in the kingdom of God's dear Son.

J. S. HATCH.

Hester, wife of J. R. Chamness, died at her home near Ingraham, Ill. March 3, 1894, aged 30 years, 8 months, and 3 days. She was born in Morgan Co., Ind. July 5, 1863. Was married to J. R. Chamness July 8, 1883. They came to Ill. June 20, 1891. They heard and believed the things concerning the kingdom of God and united with the Church of God and was baptized by Brother J. D. Rawlings, May 3, 1892.

Sister Chamness was one of the many sufferers of that dreaded disease, consumption, and during her long illness suffered much, but was patient till death released her.

She was the mother of four children, three of which the enemy, death, has taken and hushed their little voices. She leaves a husband one little daughter, father, mother, two brothers and two sisters to mourn her death, but not without hope.

The dear wife and mother now sleeps. Sleep on, dear sister, it will not be long. The trumpet will soon sound, and the dead in Christ shall arise. Brother Chamness, you have lost a dear companion, but do not weep as those who have no hope.

God is not only the God of the living, but also of the dead in Christ, and at the great gathering day will gather the waking and the sleeping ones together and give them an inheritance that is incorruptible and that fadeth not away. Only a little while and the tearful scenes of our mortal existence will all be over. Then we can sing the song of victory in that bright and beautiful land where the immortal inhabitant will never say, I am sick. O blissful age, may it soon come.

The funeral service will be held in the future, as there was no preaching brother present. After prayer we sang that beautiful hymn "We shall sleep but not forever," and then we laid her to rest to await the coming of the Master, when we hope to meet her where parting will be no more.

Sleep on, dear one, till Jesus comes,
We know it will not be long,
[illegible] trumpet sound,
[illegible] the sleeping throng.

EVANGELIST FUND.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed, prompted by a love of truth, and prayerfully desiring the salvation of our fellow beings, agree to pay into the hands of our Conference Treasurer L. B. Rogers, Argos, Indiana, the several sums herein pledged as free-will offerings to a fund to be devoted to sounding out the Word of reconciliation by the tongue of the earnest Evangelist. These contributions to be paid within one year from Nov. 18, 1893.

J. L. Wince	$25.00

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

Farms for the Million.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming, within the last few years has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth, for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are lands which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical features that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of farm products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North-Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill.—a. 7. 21, m. 5. 19.

Vandalia Line Excursions.

[illegible] reading a sermon on Samson the other day. There was nothing very original in it, but the thing that struck me was the persistency of error by reason of the fact that it is so much easier to think with other peoples brains than it is to think with our own.

The same statements are made over and over again—not true!—no matter how they go, the same lessons are drawn from the same stereotyped plates—false!! Oh thats no difference, good enough and then the plates are worth something.

That sermon was a good illustration of the imitation faculty of humanity, its statements amounted to something like the following—Samson's character was lacking in "true piety." His life promised well but turned out a failure, and he was held up generally, not as an example, but a failure.

Now when we consider that Samson was one of the very few whom God had announced even before his birth, when we also note that his name is listed with the notables in the New Testament who "through faith put to flight the armies of the alien," we may begin to be prepared to see that there is a discrepancy somewhere, a large discrepancy. I am free to say for my part, that in comparing the grandeur and dignity of Israel's hero, with the cuffs and collars pietism of the passing hour, the descent from the sublime to the ridiculous is too sudden to be safe.

In order to properly understand the life of Samson (or any other) it is proper to consider the times and circumstances in which they lived.

Now, Samson was born in a very unfortunate time, in fact we might say that the tide of all future human affairs was verged to the balance at his birth. In the long struggle between civilization and barbarism, between the natural and spiritual, the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, there have been many such ties, when, if the scale had only turned the other way! If the Persian had won Marathon? If the Turk had swept Europe? if Napoleon had won Waterloo, or Lee Gettysburgh? ah, if!

The cause of God was at its lowest ebb at Samson's birth, and there was just such a hypothesis. The power and supremacy was attached to a nation cruel and brutal in the extreme, whose religion was superstitious, and as we see illustrated in the story of his life, they were as relentless as they were unscrupulous. On the other hand, the people of Israel, even in their lapsed condition, still had a regard for the true God and held to the sacredness of an oath or a bargain, and represented in fact human virtue in a latent condition as opposed to brutality in active power.

Yes, forty years had this state of affairs existed before the birth of Samson, and as he must have been twenty years old at least before he began to reign, the complete subjugation of Israel must have endured at least 60 years, probably longer, and the spirit of the people was entirely broken, as helpless were they as the southern negro before the war, and the arrogance and insolence of the ruling race was such as has been illustrated many times since, whenever the human animal has had a chance to strut.

Upon this scene and under these circumstances comes one lone man,—and let us get the idea fixed in our minds that there was only one of him. Some of the traducers of this one hero no doubt think if they had been there they might have gone in with him to help him out, or at least would have rallied the nation and would have preached, preached, preached, but just at that time there seems to have been no one of that mind, and I doubt if preaching would have done much good in this case as it has'nt in many others, so that what he did was not only without human aid, but without human sympathy, and the only parallel in history is the story of the Son of God, "who trod the wine-press alone."

Of course the high spirituality of the "Greatest among ten thousand and the altogether lovely," cannot be predicated upon Samson. He was human in erring, but he was not [illegible] his circumstances and the mis-translation of a word has made him. Moreover he had none of the bully and swagger that is usually associated with great physical strength and for which he is sometimes blamed.

Samson's first error was falling in love with a woman, a Philistine. How much of an error is that? She was no doubt a fair woman, and also a pure woman, as far as the story goes. How far he erred in this case I am unable to say, suffice it to say that his God did not depart from him on that account.

David ate the shew-bread that was not lawful for any but the priests to eat, and yet was blameless, which goes to show that circumstances alter cases.

The father and mother were opposed to the union, and there is nothing more touching in the history, than the way the young man gets around the old folks prejudices; he coaxes them to see the young lady herself and escorts them on the way. He feels that that will decide the matter, and nothing must stand in the way, and when the lion roars out at them from the bush and startles the old people, he just goes in to show it away, poor old mamma never knew what became of that lion, it might have made her nervous and spoiled the whole programme.

Then there was the marriage scene in Timnath some time after and there was the guessing school. In the era of church fairs one would suppose that the guessing bee at Timnath would be appreciated. I cannot see much in Samson's riddle myself, it was not intended as a literary effort I suppose. The circumstances that gave it birth we can only surmise, but we know what a party of young men and women is, and the thing was given out in good humor and faith. Unto the pure, all things are pure, and here is one illustration how evil hearts can make trouble out of a thing the most innocent. That the crowd he invited, or invited themselves, to his nuptials held him and all his nation in abject contempt and considered no treatment too infamous, is apparent in the outcome, but joyfully heedless, feeling no doubt in the repose of his strength able to take care of himself in any and all circumstances, he perhaps was not sufficiently circumspect, and God help the poor unfortunates in this world who are not circumspect, it matters little how "spect" he may otherwise be, he may manage to push through with a tight lace and a straight face.

Samson's first wife was not deceitful, she was unfortunate in her associates. She evidently loved him and he loved her. She was weak however and had no confidence in her husband to take care of her. She was threatened with death and treachery, Jud. xiv. 15, by thirty big bullies. We know now that her husband was quite capable of taking care of her and would have made short work of any that would have harmed a hair of her head, but at that time his power was unknown to any but himself, and it was impossible for her to imagine how she could be delivered, and he could not have told her and have been believed.

Samson in this instance was not deceived, but disgusted with his wife's very natural distrust he gave her and them all the stern proof of his ability, 19th verse, and flung contempt on their treachery and defiance at their power and left in anger.

But he relented, his anger being a trifle unreasonable any how, and so he went down to see her again after his heart softened and lo, they had given her to some one else.

The idea of marriage to the true Israelite was sacred, and we see it illustrated here. Samson declared public war on the whole nation of incorrigibles and took the entire responsibility. No necessity to enquire at present as to the natural history of the animals that carried his fire brands with such fatal effect into the grain of the Philistines. Suffice it to say that he did not do it in a corner, and private vengeance although the ostensible reason for the action was by no means the ultimate object. Mere private vengeance would have expended itself on the immediate object of offense, the fatherinlaw, but so far from this when the cruel and dastardly Philistines poured [illegible] wrath on the old man and his daughter, and burned them and their houses. Samson attached their cause to his own and "smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter." Moreover, speaking about private vengeance, which is cast up so often as characteristic of Samson, what other plea could he have for fighting his nation's enemies, he in no wise represented his nation They not only never authorized him, but objected to his action, Jud. xv. 11, so that when he won the victory for them he won it alone and presented their freedom to them as a gift.

And right here is the turning point in ancient history. The dual between a nation armed with all the enginery of war known at this period, counting its trained warriors by the thousands with their "shields their spears and their habergeons" and a lone man unarmed, for it would seem that in all his exploits he used no "tools of war" the ass's jaw being a notable exception, and here also comes the nobleness of the hero, and the dastardliness of his enemies.

Upon the rock of Etam he sat and waited for them. They knew where he was and they might have made a cordon about him to take him, but well they knew that military tactics would avail nothing against the strength of God, so they threaten his whole people, and hence three thousand men of Judah waited upon him, explained their abject condition and reproved him for his conduct in getting them into such trouble. Samson speaks for himself though and considers the matter his business. To their reproach he offers none. He doesn't rally them behind him and offer to lead them on to "victory or death." He simply warns them to lay no violent hands on him, and makes them swear a promise to that effect. He then submits to be bound at their pleasure and delivered over to the enemy.

Samson in many ways is a type of the "Man of Nazareth" and in thus being bound and delivered up to his own and his nations enemies the parallel is particularly striking.

The scene of this lone man with his hands bound behind him leading a humiliated procession of three thousand brethren down the slope of Etam. The shout of the Philistines, the snap of cords that bound him, the seizure of the jaw-bone, the leap forward, the slaughter and the route, what a scene for a picture! what a study for a poem!

His greatness is only more strikingly illustrated in his appeal to God immediately after to deliver him in his distress of thirst. Thus ended the supremacy of the Philistine in Israel for twenty years, and never again did they recover their lost power entirely, and during all the period of Samson's reign we have no record of even any attempt at war. He took the land under his own private guardianship. He raised no standing army and had no militia, he was the home guard as well as the foreign squadron and in this particular his rule pre-figures the reign of the Greater Judge that is to be when armies, arms, and armaments of war will be rendered ridiculous.

I can also understand that Samson acted as a spy to gather information in the enemies countries. It was on such an exploit as this no doubt that he visited Gaza, and this incident reveals the fact to us that he was not a man of extraordinary stature as he was traveling incognito so to speak, and it was told the Gazites who he was. It is altogether improbable that this was his only venture because of his accurate knowledge of the little local details concerning, for instance, the construction of the gates which he lifted quietly off in the dark, a huge practical joke that shows that all the humor of the man was not exhausted at the Timnath guessing bee, and it was also a majestic hint that he bore them no ill feeling if they would keep quiet. As to the woman of Gaza that he visited we all know now, or ought to know, that the keepers of public houses in these days were defamed by a naughty name and the one righteous woman in Jericho as well as the mother of Jeptha have suffered in the scandal. But when the Savior of the world told the self-righteous Pharisees that harlots and publicans would enter the kingdom of God before them, he did not propose to "let down the bars" to [illegible] and we must look for another meaning to this.

Concerning the last episode of the life of Samson and his connection with Delilah, a great many sanctimonious attitudes have been assumed quite at variance with the necessities of the case. It must be understood that whatever mistake Samson made, to him Delilah was a pure and noble woman, one that was ever ready to give him timely warning, "the Philistines are upon thee." Her little tyings up were love knots that only endeared her more, and then he was a man of humor, and we can forgive almost anything to good humor. With all the events and sequences before us now it is easy to see the deception, but when a man admires a woman, when love is blind, when we see the same thing occurring in our midst every day after several millions of unfortunate experiences who is he that shall cast the first stone. We all have our blind side and that's the side our neighbors see.

Milton in "Samson Agonistes" pictures his hero as threatening his faithless wife with personal violence for her treachery, but the true record gives no hint of such a thing, and it is not natural. Men who have suffered by the brutality of men have been fain to excuse and ascribe the conduct to any thing but the right thing, every body smiles, but every body pities and forgives.

God forgave Samson. So far from his life being useless and void history contains only one other so fruitful of result. God ordained before his birth that he should "begin to deliver Israel" had he failed God had failed. From his grave sprang such a band of heroes as the world has not since seen, Saul, Jonathan, David, and a long list of mighty men. The wave of brute power that then threatened to culminate in the destruction of virtue and humanity was rolled back, but it first broke on the devoted head of Samson.

The grand lesson of Samson's life is individual effort. Fearless advance in the cause of God. Alone if necessary take up the fight and assume the responsibility, modestly and firmly. Samson never shouted when he went into the fight. The Philistines made all the noise.

Let them roar, pick up your bone and wade in. The God Jehovah provides strength by the way and water for refreshment when you are done if the earth has to be cleft to get it.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Wounded.

Only a look and a motion that nobody saw or heard,
Just a moment and over, with never the sound of a word;
Ripples of converse around me smoothly and cheerily flow,
But a terrible stab has been given, a silent and staggering blow

Only the hand that gave it hardly a tithe of the smart,
Nothing at all of the anguish that fiercely leapt up in my heart,
Searching and scathing its peace, while a tremulous nerve to the brain
Flashed up a telegram sudden, a message of quivering pain.

They must be merry without me, for how can I sing to-night?
They will only think I am tired, and thoughtfully shade the light;
Finger and voice would fail while the wound is open and sore;
Bleeding away the strength I had gathered for days before.

Only a look and a motion! Yes, but we little know
How from each dwarf-like only a giant of power may grow;
The thundering avalanche crushes, loosened by only a breath,
And only a colorless drop may be laden with sudden death.

Only a word of command, but it loses or wins the field;
Only a stroke of the pen, but a heart is broken or healed;
Only a step may sever, pole-wide, future and past;
Only a touch may rivet links which for life shall last.

Only a look and a motion! Why was the wound so deep?
Were it no echo of sorrow, hushed for a while to sleep,
Were it no shadow of fear, far o'er the future thrown,
Slight were the suffering now, if it bore on the present alone.

Ah! I would smile it away, but 'tis all too fresh and too keen;
Perhaps I may some day recall it as if it had never been;
Now I can only be still, and endure where I cannot cope,
Praying for meekness and patience, praying for faith and hope.

Is it an answer already that words to my mind are brought,
Floating like shining lilies on waters of gloomiest thought?
Simple and short is the sentence, but oh! what it comprehends!
"Those with which I was wounded, in the house of My friends."

Floating still on my heart, while I listen again and again,
Stilling the anxious throbbing, soothing the icy pain,
Pressing its sacred mission healing and balm to bring.
"Coming?" Yes, if you want me! Yes, I am ready to sing.

When and How are the Nations Blessed?

THE FUTURE GATHERING OF ISRAEL.

The future gathering of Israel again to their own land, under the new covenant to be made with them then, is a subject that has a very prominent place in prophecy. Christ after calling the Pharisees hypocrits, whited sepulchres, serpents, etc., said, Your house is left unto you desolate, for I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Considering his berating language to them and his rejection of them, such a merciful promise excells anything human, but God's ways are not our ways. The same spirit was manifested on the cross when he prayed for their forgiveness, on the ground they knew not what they did. Paul says if they had known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. God had given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see. Blindness in past is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. Then there shall come out of Zion the deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob.

THEY WERE LEFT BLINDED BECAUSE GOD'S DUE TIME FOR THEIR ENLIGHTENMENT HAD NOT COME.

In Zechariah God speaks of pouring upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplication, and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced (when resurrected) and they shall mourn as a man mourneth for his only son. Ezekiel says when they are restored they shall remember their evil ways, and be ashamed and confounded, and never open their mouth any more, when I am pacified towards them. In Ezekiel xxxvi. and xxxvii. when the living and the dead of Israel are gathered to their own land they loathe themselves for their iniquity, and they are forgiven, and a new heart is put within them, and they are united in one nation on the mountains of Israel, and they shall dwell in the land I have given to Jacob forever. I will make an everlasting covenant with them and set my sanctuary in the midst of them forever more, my tabernacle also shall be with them, and the heathen (who still exist) shall know that I do sanctify Israel. These positive predictions of inspiration concerning the future blessing of Israel, of which we have quoted only a few, cannot have a fulfilment if all are destroyed at Christ's coming.

THE STATE OF THE WORLD AT CHRIST'S COMING.

We will now consult the prophets to learn what condition the world is in when Christ comes to the earth with all his saints. Ezekiel speaks of Gog (Russia) of the north country having an evil thought, and it is in the latter years, when the land of Israel, that has been desolate, is brought back from the sword. He comes with a great army to the land of unwalled villages to take a spoil of silver and of gold. It shall be against my people Israel that are gathered, out of the nations in the latter days. Then God's fury comes up in his face and causes them to turn on each other, and God then sets his glory among the heathen, and the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord from that day onward. The early and latter rains have already returned as predicted, and Israel with its vast wealth of gold and silver are being gathered back, and Gog (Russia) is fast getting ready for the fray. This synchronizes with Zechariah's prophecy. He speaks of the day of the Lord as coming when all nations are gathered against Jerusalem to battle. Christ then comes with all his saints and puts his feet on Mount Olivet, from whence he ascended. It cleaves apart and there is a very great valley for safety. Thus the mustard seed kingdom commences, and increases gradually till the whole earth is filled with the glory of the Lord. The stone cut out of the mountain, though small at first, grows to fill the whole earth. The times of the Gentiles being fulfilled Jerusalem is rebuilt and there is no more night there. Isaiah 60th chapter says in speaking of the restoration of Jerusalem, Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." Then the Lord shall be king over all the earth, and the living waters are restored. Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited and there shall be no more utter destruction. Joel agrees with these prophets in this event. He speaks of the times when the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. Behold when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem I will bring all nations into the valley of Jehosophat. Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears. Assemble yourselves and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves round about. Then the mighty ones come down as in Zechariah, and the restitution events follow. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion. Then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no stranger pass through her any more, and a fountain (the water of life) shall come forth of the house of the Lord. These prophets are evidently picturing the same events and scenes that have now commenced, and will soon by their dark and bloody results terminate this age, and introduce the day of the Lord, when Christ with all his saints will commence his glorious reign in the midst of his enemies. These plain, explanatory predictions concerning the closing scenes of this dispensation and the initiation of the new age, cannot be reconciled by such a theory of destruction.

To make this contrast still plainer we will quote the fulfilment of one restitution promise. In the last days many nations shall say, come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

This important prophecy, recorded by two prophets, shows the change there will be between earth's present selfish, tyrannical rule and Christ's future reign, with the gospel power of love to subdue and bless the nations and fill the earth with peace.

How could many nations come up to Jerusalem, or strong nations afar off be rebuked, or swords and spears be made into plowshares and pruning hooks, if all things have a previous destruction by fire?

CHRIST MELCHISEDEC REIGN.

To claim when Christ comes, his work is finished, and probation ends, is reversing God's order. Having received the kingdom he will be both priest and king after the order of Melchisedec forever, as Paul says. Then with his joint heirs he is in God's purpose ready to bless all the nations of the earth. Instead of the door of mercy being closed then it will be thrown open world wide. The future salvation or condemnation of all men, depends on a voluntary accepting or rejecting of the gospel. One ends in life, the other in death.

FINAL JUDGMENT IS BY THE GOSPEL.

The secrets of men are judged by Christ according to his Word or the gospel, consequently all men must be truly enlightened by the gospel, before they can be judged, which necessitates a future for the benighted mass of past ages. Christ is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, that they may believe, for he tasted death for every man. The groaning creation with the blinded idolator—the slumbering Israelite and benighted world are waiting in God's order for that merciful day of hope, and love, and gospel light, when the blind shall see, and the deaf hear, and darkness shall flee away, and all the ends of the world shall remember and turn to the Lord.

ELECTION.

This doctrine as revealed is a most glorious doctrine, for it gives hope to the world, but when it is so construed that it cuts off, and destroys the hope of the world and saves only a select few, it is a dark problem to solve. We elect men to make our laws and to justly administer them. It is not merely to exalt this few, but to bless the many. It is in God's order. So God in mercy to the world is taking out a tried and tested people to bless all the families of the earth with, but the due time does not come till the seed are perfected, and that is the reason why all efforts to evangelize the world thus far have failed. God is now wisely taking out and preparing rulers for that great work.

LITERAL FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

So far prophecy has had a literal fulfilment, and that is proof that future prophecy will have the same. Israel has been literally scattered among all nations as foretold. Their future gathering to their own land must be just as literal, for it is as plainly foretold. Jerusalem was destroyed just as predicted. It must be just as literally restored to everlasting excellency, and joy and glory, for it is as plainly foretold. Christ's first advent, and work, and death, and resurrection, was foretold and personally fulfilled. His second coming and work is as plainly revealed and will be as literally fulfilled. The literal taking out of the seed from all nations is sure proof that the national blessing contained in the same promise must be as literally fulfilled. A theory that stands in the way, or prevents a most literal fulfilment of any or all of these promises, is largely at variance with Scripture.

THE JUDGMENT DAY.

God has appointed a day in the which or during which he will judge the world (that Christ prayed for) by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance to all men in that he raised him from the dead.

The resurrection of Christ is here given as an assurance to all men that the world shall have a righteous judgment, and to accomplish this God is now taking out from the world a tried people, as joint heirs with Christ to judge the world with. Now if mercy ends with death to this class which Christ calls the world, they will be already judged as well as the elect seed. According to this theory they will all be judged and burned up before Christ takes the throne of judgment, thus defeating the greatest blessing promised to the world and turn it into a curse. This is the age of faith, and the election of the seed, a stepping stone, preparatory to the coming age of glory and salvation. The next is an age of universality, personality, literality, and finality, where faith is turned to sight and hope to life and fruition. When Christ appeared to Paul, he was converted at sight. He said he was as one born out of due time (an abortive, margin) born too soon. In Christ's reign the spirit of grace and supplication is poured out, and those wicked Pharisees he prayed for on the cross, and that he said should not see him till they should call him blessed, being raised, looked upon him whom they had pierced, and like Paul were changed to penitence and mourning for their sins.

God does not pour the spirit of grace on those who have done despite to the spirit of grace, and wilfully rejected Christ, the only way of life and salvation, for this is the sin, and the only sin, that hath not forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come. Unbelief is the condemning sin of the world.

We have been quoting a class of Scriptures that apply to the world at large, and for that reason they are all the more important. Now the question arises, shall we believe in the literal fulfilment of these inspired promises, so numerous throughout the Scriptures, or shall we believe in a theory that belittles them, or sets them aside without any fulfilment, thus making them a fraud, a deception, a thing of naught? By the teaching of Scripture the many are saved and the few lost. But by this theory, the many are lost and the few saved. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

B. C. SIMONDS.

The Coming Bride.

A brother through THE RESTITUTION asks my views relative to "The Bride, the Lamb's Wife." He did not mention what phase of the question he desired my views upon, therefore I shall treat the topic in a practical manner.

As yet, Christ has no "Bride." Baptized believers of the gospel of the kingdom, occupy the relationship of an espoused Virgin to Christ.

See 2 Cor. ii. 1-3: "Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly: and indeed bear with me. For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtility, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

The grand and heroic Paul was so anxious that those with whom he had labored should be faithful to their betrothed vows, that he may realize his heart's dearest desire, and present them to Christ as a "chaste" and faithful "virgin." It is only the chaste, pure, and faithful ones that can ever be united to Christ as his loving "Bride." Oh, my Brother! my Sister in the Lord! whoever you may be, have you ever thought seriously about this matter? Will your life and mine bear the inspection of him to whom we are espoused? Are we fit to become his "Bride?" Does our heart condemn us? Rev. xiv. 1-5, describes the meeting of the espoused "virgins" and the "Lamb" on "Mount Sion," "and in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God." Let us read it, meditate upon it, and may our heart be set to seek the purity which is from God.

"And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Zion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their forehead. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: and they sung a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts (living creatures) and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

One notable characteristic of these "virgins," is, that they "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth."

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: And I give unto them eternal life: and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all: and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." John x. 27-29.

It makes no difference where the Lamb leads, the true and faithful "virgin" will be sure to follow. She will follow him both in his holy life, and in his doctrine, believe what he says, and do as he directs. In so doing the heart may be chilled by the jeers and derision of a cold, unsympathetic and unbelieving world, but never mind it, let the pure and fervent love of the coming Bridegroom warm your heart, pulsate through your veins, and banish forever its chilly damp. He loves you purely, as none other can, if you will only "follow" him "whithersoever he goeth."

Dear, pure Virgin of Christ, let us wake up! the wedding nuptials draw near, the day of glory is near at hand! Warm up the heart! Cry out, the Bridegroom comes! Hark! the gospel bell peals out from the Everlasting Chimes that he is coming right soon.

"Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. To her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God." Rev. xix. 7-9.

Oh, joy to the world, when he does come, attended by his glorious "Bride," he will then roll back the dark thunder-clouds of death. Its dismal pall will never more cross the threshhold of our homes. Our frail bark will no more be cast to and fro upon the adverse billows of a stormy life, because the Bride's Beloved, will speak peace to the stormy sea, and say: "Peace be still!" And lo! what a calm! it is like unto that of a still night, when the moon peers from behind the fleecy cloud, and illuminates the landscape with its silvery sheen. Then will sorrow flee away like a passing cloud, the eyes of the blind will ever feast upon the glories of the evergreen shore. The ears of the deaf will listen to the melodious music of the song of the redeemed; the lame man will leap as an hart for joy; the tongue of the dumb will shout for gladness of heart; all nature will rejoice: springs and rivers will break forth in the desert, and flow onward through fertile plains to the ocean's bed, causing the earth to rejoice and blossom as the rose. Oh what joy! tongue cannot tell it!

This indeed will be the happy spring time of life, and the time when the "beloved" will call for his "fair one," his "love," and say: "Rise up my love, my fair one, and come away," "for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." "My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone? The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." Song ii. 10-13.

"For lo, the winter (symbol of death) is past." "The flowers appear on the earth"—(symbol of new life) "the singing of the birds is come"—(symbol of joy and melody). It will be a time of ecstatic joy, all nature will respond "the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands." Yes,

"He shall come down like showers
Upon the fruitful earth;
And joy and hope, like flowers,
Spring in his path to birth."

The prospective "Bride" waits in anxious expectancy, that she may embrace her "beloved." With this hope in view, even now, glory peers from behind the cloud, and gilds its edge with a beauty rendered more resplendent by its contrast with gloom. Only think of it, there will at this time be no more death, the doleful funeral cortege will no more be seen winding its way to the city of the dead, under the measured and solemn peals of the bell which tells of sad bereavements and desolated homes. Is not this joyous news? "Praise the Lord, O my soul!"

There should be an intense interest at this time with regard to these things, for driftwood is seen floating upon the ocean of time, indicating that we are now, at this very hour, approaching the continent of glory.

It should indeed exhilarate the mind, gladden the heart, dispell gloom and despondency. What matters it though darkness may now envelope the landscape, and from the cloud lurid lightnings leap, and thunders roll, the "beloved" in his beauty will break forth from the cloud, and laugh at the storm.

"Would you to the end endure?
Keep the wedding garment pure—
Claim ye still the promise sure—
Faithful is the Lord!
Let your lamps be burning bright,
In God's Word is beaming light,
Live by faith and not by sight—
Crowns are your reward!"

W. H. WILSON.

"The Everlasting Arms."

"The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the Everlasting Arms." Deu. xxxiii. 27.

Our arm is too short is a serious compleint. The 17th of March I was to meet a brother in H. S., to convey me to the place of meeting, but I was 90 minutes late, so got left. But another brother found me, footsore and weary, and took me to his house "and his banner over me was love."

I fear that we are more careful about the things of this life than we are about the things that pertain to our eternal salvation. These things ought not so to be. We should fear him who hath power to cast into Gehenna. Mar. R. V. Luke xii. 5.

Friends let us be mindful, i. e. have our minds full of the things which pertain to our eternal salvation. "For how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." Heb. ii. 3.

Some are "faring sumptuously every day," while others are in destitute circumstances. My brethren let us be careful, or the beggar may be found at our gate. Luke xvi. 21-25.

Bro. Gardner's translation, "With all these objections, a great gulf hath been filled."

"Ye who are bound for Canaan's land, Come on without delay," and we'll all shout victory in the kingdom. 1 Cor. xv. 55.

There are too many excuses to hinder us in the way that leads to God.

And some may say that Luke xvii. 21-25 is not applicable to us. How do you know? "As often as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," said the Savior. Matt. xxv. 40.

Let us make unto ourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, so when we fail here, as we are sure to do, we will be prepared to enter the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Luke xvi. 8-12; 1 Peter i. 11. Our means and strength are almost gone, and will it be said "Oh ye of little faith."

May the good Lord pity and help us to trust more in his Word and less in the god of error.

Yours in hope of immortality.

Be Watching.

In Edinburgh, when our Queen first came, the vessel that brought her landed in the evening. It was concluded, "Oh she will not come ashore till nine in the morning!" and our Lord Provost had that idea. What happened? The Queen was very famous for taking people by surprise, and she landed between six and seven. The chief magistrate was sadly ashamed of himself. He did not lose his place, but he bitterly regretted that he had not been waiting for her, when she set foot on the shore. I think it will be so with those who are not looking out for Christ's coming. They will regret not being ready to give him a hearty welcome.—Bonar.

UPRIGHT walking is sure walking.

It has been truthfuly said that youthful follies lay the foundation for aged sorrows.

ZEAL without knowledge we know to be bad; but why is it bad? The latest reason we have seen is, "That it is fire without light."

IT has been beautifully said that "Truth is immortal;—the sword cannot pierce it, fire cannot consume it, prisons cannot incarcerate it, and famines cannot starve it."

MAN without a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures is as a soldier without weapons, a horse without a bridle, a ship without a rudder, a writer without a pen, and a bird without wings."

"WHAT man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil and do good; seek peace and pursue it."

THE Rev. Dr. Israel Aaron of Buffalo lectured before the Young Men's Hebrew Association at the Scoville Av. Temple in Cleveland on April 1, on "True Culture." In the course of his remarks he said that true culture was received under the influence of religion, and that culture and religion went hand in hand. He declared that it was vastly easier to be cultured in the present age than it was a thousand years ago, and for that reason all should possess a certain amount of it. The lecturer, singularly enough, took the life of Jesus as an example of the truest culture that could be obtained, and the audience was directed to the divine source of truth and holiness.

IT would be well if every one who has named the name of Christ would keep in mind the words of Hagar, "Thou God seest me!" and the words of the Psalmist, "O Lord thou hast searched me and known me; thou knowest my down sitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thoughts afar off; thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways; for there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether." These passages and their importance were forced upon our attention by reading about some pleasure-loving professors. The editor of a religious journal told of a visit to a family that belonged to the same church that he did. As he approached the door, which was open he looked through the first room into the second, where four persons were seated around a table. As soon as they became aware of his presence, they sprung up in confusion and haste, at the same time grabbing cards from the table. The visitor rapped at the door and the man of the house came out flushed in face and confusion on his countenance, but tried to talk religious! Presently his wife came, then his sister, all members of the same church, and a gentleman visitor, who was an undisguised man of the world. Why were they so disconcerted by the presence of one of their brethren, and not disconcerted in the presence of God? They had forgotten God. Evidently he was not in their thoughts; love of pleasure had crowded him out. They were doing nothing to his glory; they were not redeeming the time. An accident had exposed their hypocrisy to one who lived on a higher plane, and they were chagrined. Deceiving and being deceived may be written almost everywhere in the religious world. Beloved in the Lord, let us strive earnestly to be found with the wedding garment on when Jesus comes. Let us so live, so that we could hail his presence with joy at any time; we must remember that there will be no putting of things out of sight when Jesus comes. Now is the time to put away fleshly desires.

[illegible] seventy [illegible] only 18,500 days. A man at forty, however, has but 90,000 hours left,—and adds that a man of sixty has so few hours left that he did'nt want to shock them by mentioning their number.

"DIG deep young men; you are now digging your wells, and if you want good water you must go down deep." This is the way Dr. Cooper talked to the students in Woodstock College, Ontario, but it is good advice to all everywhere, especially to young Christians. There is a wonderful mine—an inestimable mine of wealth for them to explore.

IF we "shut the glorious Book of God, blot from memory what we have learned from it, we quench the day-spring: the whole world lieth in darkness, and to man there remains no Savior, no guide in life, no support in affliction, no victory over death,—the grave becomes an unfathomable abyss, and eternity spreads around like the ocean, dark illimitable, fearful! Open now again that Book, and lo, the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in its wings."

BAPTISM.

A Presbyterian tract, entitled "Bible Baptism," says, after exhorting some young people, who were solicited to submit to baptism by immersion and join the Baptist Church to remain steadfast in the Truth (Presbyterian truth), it says to them, "The reasons you gave for turning a deaf ear to the invitation do credit to both your head and heart. . . In yielding you would reject your present baptism. This is very sinful. You have already been baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This work cannot be undone. 2. You would cast an insult on your pastor, on the church and the whole denomination, and on the great mass of Christians in all the world; for all evangelical denominations except one, baptize not by putting the person into water, but by putting water upon the person. Besides this they bring division and discord into their families, and exchange a true Bible baptism for a sectarian baptism."

It then goes on to say that the meaning of the word baptizo in the scripture sense is very easily ascertained, and illustrates this by reference to the words of John that Jesus would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire, which he did by putting fire upon them instead of putting them into fire; and that the Bible never speaks of baptizing in water, but always with water; and that these young people would smile to hear a boy say he went into swim with water; and in reference to Philip and the Eunuch it says they wore no stockings, and it was easy to gather up their flowing robes, having removed their sandals, and stepped to the margin of the stream, and that Philip then took water in his hands and caused it to fall upon the Eunuch, and there was no need to strip naked nor be immersed in his dress and sent dripping on his way: and that the multitudes baptized at Pentecost could not undress themselves, and "it would have been strange to see them going about wet to the skin."

It makes one feel sick at heart to see how easily men can see proof of what they want to believe, and how blind to the clearest testimony against their prepossessions.

By request of a subscriber in New York state we make a few remarks on this matter. And first, we call attention to the authoritative way of settling the matter, by this tract: Immersion is a sectarian baptism. To baptize with water is to cause water to fall upon the person. The Bible never speaks of baptizing in water, but always with water. They took off their sandals and holding up the loose garment stepped to the margin of the stream. They took water into their hands. They could not undress,—it would be strange to see them go about wet to the skin—therefore they were not immersed. One would think that either the writer was on the spot and took notes of what transpired, or else that these details were matters of divine history. Neither of this being [illegible] when the proof offered is based upon mistranslation of the Greek preposition (en) in which the credulity of the uninformed reader is imposed upon, and the intelligence of the informed grossly insulted. In Matt. iii. 11 the sense requires in instead of with; further than this, of nearly 1300 occurrences of the Greek preposition (en) it is translated in ten times where it is once translated with. True, the Spirit was poured upon the Apostles, but the pouring was not the baptism. Baptism was the effect of the pouring. As it was so poured that it filled all the house where they were sitting, they were immersed in it,—overwhelmed in it; entirely under its influence, and spoke the words of the Spirit, being also filled with it. And it may not be amiss to mention the baptism of our Lord in sufferings—he was overwhelmed by them.

The Scriptural meaning of baptism is said to be easily ascertained; then how comes it necessary for Presbyterians to issue tracts to prevent the loss of members on account of doubtful baptism, when [illegible] any for that reason?

If those who reject their present baptism are very sinful, then all immersionists are very sinful because they reject sprinkling as no baptism at all. And if divisions in families warrant people in adhering to error, what must we do with the words of Jesus, who had men forsake all and follow him; and in addition to his intimation that division of families will be one of the results of it? We think it very inconsistent of the author of this tract to show further on that these very sinful people are to be fellowshipped as Christians.

A few facts might perhaps serve to show the absurdity of the points made in this tract more apparent.

1. "Our translation was made by 47 Pedo-baptists under strict orders from King James to change none of the ecclesiastical terms in common use.

2. The American Bible Society, and the British and Foreign Bible Society forbid the translation of the Greek word baptizo, by their foreign missionaries, and require that it be transferred into the foreign tongues; and even reject good translations where this rule is not obeyed, as may be seen by the preface to Dr. Conant's work on baptism.

3. Every Pedo-baptist commentator of note has said that immersion was the ancient mode of baptism, when commenting on such passages as Rom. vi. 4 and Col. ii. 12.

4. All Greek lexicons give immerse as the primary meaning of baptize.

5. Even learned Roman Catholics say that baptizo means immerse, and was changed by the authority of the Roman Catholic Church.

6. The Greek language contains words which mean sprinkle and pour, yet they are never used by Christ or his apostles as equivalents of baptize.

7. Dr. Conant has shown from Greek literature both sacred and profane that baptizo always means immerse and nothing else.

8. If the word baptizo had several meanings some passages in the New Testament would suggest the idea of modes of baptism, but this is not the case, the word like triangle suggests its own meaning."

But no matter whether people are sprinkled or immersed if they do not believe the gospel of the kingdom of God. What we mean is, that immersion is of no account unless preceded by faith in the gospel Jesus and the apostles preached,—the goodness of a kingdom of peace and righteousness under the whole heavens, with eternal life to enjoy it. This faith must be followed by reformation of life—repentance toward God, and then baptism is in order. The belief of heaven for immortal souls is not the subject of promise,—contains, therefore, no good news, and makes no one a fit subject for baptism. We regard it as great folly to discuss the mode of baptism with those who believe another gospel. He who believes the gospel of the kingdom knows he has to be buried with Christ—planted in the likeness of his death, an impossibility with pouring or sprinkling.

My Old time Friend, Mrs. S. U. C.

I will write you some of my views on the Sabbath question. You know that I told you once that there was no proof that the Sabbath was kept by the Jews until you found it spoken of in Exodus.

You sent a tract here once, that said it had been kept, but it gave no Bible quotations. I told you when you were here that I could find no proof that the Sabbath was kept until we read of it in Ex. xvi, when the people commenced to murmur. Read the whole chapter.

The 5th verse says, that on the sixth day they shall prepare twice as much as they prepare daily. This is what the Lord told them to do. Notice this. "And it came to pass on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man. And all the rulers came and told Moses." These rulers knew that they were only to gather enough for one day, and when they saw that the people had gathered twice as much on the sixth day they thought they had disobeyed Moses.

It looks that way does it not? But hear Moses' reply. "And he (Moses) said unto them, this is that which the Lord hath said, to morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord, bake that which ye will bake to day, and seethe that which remaineth over, lay up for you to be kept until the morning." Now here is the point. If the rulers had known of a Sabbath day to be kept before this time, would they not have known why they gathered twice as much on the morning of the sixth day as they did on any other day?

In Exodus xx. we have the ten commandments, where it says, remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

In the 31st of Exodus we find something like this. "Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever."

In Deut. we read, "The Lord our God made a covenant in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us even us who are all of us here alive this day.

You will see that Moses refers back forty years to the time that the ten commandments were given. He called all Israel and reiterated the statutes and judgments that the Lord had given them. What for? That they might learn them and keep them. Read all of Deut. v.

In the 15th verse you will read, "And remember, that thou west a servant in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm, therefore, (or for that reason) the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day.

All this about the Sabbath was thrown in when Moses was repeating over the ten commandments to them to show them why they were to keep it. Do you not see there is nothing of the kind when he repeats the other nine?

Now, dear friend, in all candor I will ask you this:—Where in the Bible do you find a change in the mode of keeping the Sabbath? You know that Israel could not even build a fire and if one was found picking up sticks on the Sabbath day they were put to death.

You will go more than a Sabbath day's journey. You build fires and do a great many things that would have been death to the Israelites.

I asked you that question once, remember your answer. You said that the Lord knew that it could not be kept as straight now as then. Your answer was correct.

We will go to the New Testament and give a few texts concerning the Sabbath, as you say we want the Word of God for it. I have given it so far, have I not?

In the "Sermon on the Mount," we read, "think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, [illegible] shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

Now at that time the law had not been fulfilled, but it cannot be denied but that the Christ did fulfill both the moral and ceremonial law, that is he carried it out or obeyed it. That is what I understand by the word "fulfil" as it is used in that place.

In Matt. xix. 18, 19, Mark x. 19, and Luke xviii. 20, where our Lord enumerates the commandments to the ruler, who wanted to know what he should do to inherit eternal life he did not mention the Sabbath at all.

Now I almost hear you say, "neither did he mention the first or the second commandment." I know at least this is the way you people talk. We know that some of the commandments are transferred into the gospel dispensation in a changed condition.

We do not find the 4th in the New Testament, but we do find the 1st and 2nd in several different places, though worded differently.

In Acts xvii. Paul taught at Mar's Hill that they should not worship any image graven by art and man's device, and the whole of that sermon was to teach that people that God was not like unto gold or silver or stone.

In Matt. iv. 10, we have the word of Jesus for it that we should worship the Lord our God.

In 1 Cor. viii. 5, Paul says, "For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many and lords many) but to us there is one God the Father, ... and one Lord Jesus Christ."

In Mark xii. a scribe came to Jesus and asked him, which is the first commandment of all? And Jesus answered him, the first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy mind and with all thy strength! This is the first commandment. And the second is like unto this, that thou love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."

Now dear friend, the Savior of the world said these words. If he makes a statement we ought to take it and not try to put something else ahead of it. Do not say again that the first and second commandment is not mentioned by Christ or the Apostle Paul.

I have just read this in the "Signs of the Times," the July number of 1883. "Paul in Romans says, render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom is due; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor; owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet, and if there be any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in this, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Of course Jesus kept the Sabbath day, but not as the Jewish tradition wanted him to keep it, but he kept the whole law as I said before.

"Judge not that ye be not judged. Therefore let no man judge you in respect of an holy day or of the new moon or of the Sabbath days, which are shadows of things to come."

We should accept the advice of the inspired apostle. If one man esteems the seventh day above others, let him practice accordingly.

If another esteems the first day, or Sunday above all others let him be fully persuaded in his own mind.

I for one do not claim it is a command. But we do well if we keep one day in seven unto the Lord, to engage in worship together, and so long as we do not think there is a command for it we would rather keep the day as near as we can that the Christ burst the bonds of death. I think we have ample evidence that the apostles observed it, but we know that they taught on the Jewish Sabbath too, because it was on that day that they found the Jews.

You know that we as a people do not think it a command, neither do we think that the day has been changed. If the Roman Catholics claim to have changed the Sabbath I am not going to quarrel with them about it because it is not the only thing that they claim that is not true, but it is the only thing you people seem to have any trouble about. I do not believe that the United States fits in, or fills out prophecy as nicely as you seem to think it does.

I will add just a few more words, then hasten to a close as I see my letter is going to be too long.

I was reading this morning the 21st of Rev., and when I came to the 8th verse I read, "But the fearful, and the unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake of fire," but it does not say a word about Sabbath breakers.

In another place it speaks of truce breakers, but where in the New Testament does it speak of Sabbath breakers, or of breaking the Sabbath only where it relates to the Jews? The law even the ten commandments was given expressly to Israel as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ, but after Christ came and fulfilled the law they were no longer under a schoolmaster.

Our Lord and Savior tells us in Luke xvi. 16, that the law and the prophets were until John, since then the kingdom of God is preached.

You will see that Jesus preached the kingdom of God from his baptism. Matt. iv. 17.

I think I have proven to you that the Old Jewish Sabbath was to be kept by the Jews only, because as God said, he had brought them up out of Egypt.

The Gentiles were never in bondage in Egypt, therefore we do not have to keep the Jewish Sabbath. Let us not put a yoke upon ourselves, which we cannot bear. Jesus, Paul, and James enumerated all the commandments that are binding upon us. The Sabbath was left out by all these.

I appreciate your zeal and feel that you are honest in your belief, but my dear friend do not worship the day, which it does seem to me that some of you do.

Read over what I have quoted, carefully. All we want is the truth. If we lack wisdom let us ask of God who giveth to all men liberally, but let us ask in faith nothing wavering, for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven by the wind and tossed.

Your old Friend.

How Readest Thou?

In THE RESTITUTION March 28, V. E. O. makes a good criticism on the statement that "the word Satan is applied to God." In the same letter, as an example of the blunders of translators, Psa. lxviii. 6 is quoted thus: "And God sitteth the solitary in families;" and it is said: "As the above quotation now stands written in King James' Bible, who among all the children of men can see any sense in it?"

I might not have noticed this through THE RESTITUTION, had that writer been the only one making this mistake in reading that verse. I have heard it so used in public prayer, God himself being told how he "sat" in the midst of the assembly, yet so high and lifted up that he was "solitary" and alone in unapproachable majesty. Something like this is expatiated upon in prayer, at least occasionally; and it shows how few read the Bible carefully for themselves. I suppose some minister blundered sometime, and his hearers followed him ever after, and their hearers again followed them, reading "sitteth," "sitteth;" whereas the word in the Bible is a different word, of a very different meaning: "setteth." To sit is what one does himself on a seat; to set is to place some object. The Psalm says, (no "And"): "God setteth the solitary in families;" or in equivalent words: God places the lonely ones in households. The margin gives, "Hebrew, in a house;" but house here means household or family, not an empty building. "God makes the neighborless dwell at home, or "in a home;" that is the idea. It is in consonance with the preceding verse: "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation." The Psalm is a grand one. Its (uninspired) heading is, "A prayer at the removing of the ark." It begins: "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered;" the words which Moses said when the covenant was to move forward to another encampment. Num. x. 35. God, in his manifested presence, called the Shekinah (from dakun, to dwell), was with the ark. The Psalm recounts God's past dealings with Israel; but it also has plain reference to a coming day, when again, "God shall arise, his foes shall be scattered, and his haters before him shall flee." Then, in the full and final sense, shall God cause the solitary, lonely, isolated ones to dwell in a home; no longer strangers and sojourners, "looking for a country," a "fatherland," a "home land," as the word means.

It is a pity to spoil even one sentence of this Psalm by misreading that word setteth. The translators have enough to answer for, but they are not to blame in this.

A. ANSON.

Dear Household of Faith:

We left you at our last visit going from Prairie Grove (Southern Mich.) where several had expressed a desire to live a better life, and three young men had taken the name of Christ in baptism. From there we went north about 60 miles to Byron township where we held meetings two years ago, held 5 meetings there, then back to Vicksburg. Bro. Barney who was converted at the Byron meeting two years ago, had moved to Vicksburg and it was at his earnest solicitation that we visited them there. Many doubted the advisability of renting a hall, thinking they could not possibly pay for it long enough to do any good, but Bro. Barney was determined that his townspeople should hear the gospel, so he payed for the hall several nights in advance. From the first the interest and attendance increased, the brethren gained courage, and came with money to defray expenses for two weeks, by that time it was almost impossible for us to leave, so many anxious ones urging us to stay, so many questions to be answered, texts in subject form to write off for different ones. How could we leave them, and how could we stay, for the money was gone? Take up collections every night was urged on us, so we ventured and every night the needed amount was given. Our Odd Fellow friends here we found to be the same as in other places kind, courteous and obliging, and when the churches refuse to let us in they always come to the rescue. Mr. Barney secured their rooms for one dollar a night ready for use, and the days and nights flew by until we had been there over four weeks. Two were baptized and more almost persuaded. We left them studying their Bibles as they never had before. How strange and new it all seemed to them, they would look in wonder and amazement to hear so much Bible quoted, and such clear points made on questions they had often desired to have answered before. One gentleman, and a Christian when first attending the services, remarked that he was sorry for Elder Woodward, he seemed like such a zealous, earnest, hard worker, but said he had to know so much about the Bible and History to make his points. A little later on he rejoiced that one man in Michigan knew something about the Bible, and was not afraid to tell it; and thanked God before the meetings closed he and his good wife saw a beauty in the gospel they never had before.

When the three churches saw the interest and how many came every evening to hear the Word, they put forth every effort to stop their coming. As a last resort the three churches united their forces, sent for two evangelists and started a union protracted meeting with five ministers to work, but still the crowds came to hear those "despised Advents," still the interest increased. Vicksburg is the headquarters of Spiritualism. They have a camp-ground there where meetings are held every summer. Several of their number attended our meetings and we were never used better by any class of people. Mr. Dent their president was in attendance nearly every evening with a paper and pencil taking texts, and expressed himself as pleased and benefitted by the meetings, and now lest I weary you, I will stop and finish in another number. We are to go to Vicksburg again April 14th. Pray God, dear ones, that others by that time may be ready to accept the gospel. Yours, working earnestly for the upbuilding of truth.

A Wasted Day.

The day is gone,
And I, alas! have wrought no good,
Performed no worthy task of thought or deed,
Albeit small my power and great my need;
I have not done the little that I could,
With [illegible] o'er forfeit hours I brood,—
The day is done.

One step behind,
One step through all eternity—
[illegible] what I might have been,
Because the trespass of my life stole in,
And [illegible] this day away from me;
My [illegible] height can never be—
One step behind.

[illegible]
[illegible] day,
[illegible] gone,
[illegible]
[illegible] my way,
[illegible] say,—
[illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible] where,

Why We Rejoice in Christ Jesus.

It is a pleasure to us to give some of the principal reasons why we rejoice in Christ Jesus. But before proceeding to do this, let it be distinctly understood, that we have no confidence in the flesh. For if Paul, who was by birth a son of Benjamin, the beloved son of Jacob, prince of [illegible] educated under Gamaliel (the most distinguished Pharisee of his day), by which he profited in the Jews' religion above many his equals in his own nation; his character as touching the law blameless, did not trust in the flesh; then we say it is of no use any man, however noble his origin, well brought up or pious he may be, relying upon it. For Jesus said: "The flesh profiteth nothing." Hence Paul's willingness to renounce it, with all its advantages.

The first reason why we rejoice in Christ Jesus, is because this stone is become the Head of the corner; neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Acts iv. 11, 12. Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you forgiveness of sins: and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts xiii. 38. And to him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins. Acts x. 43.

One of the testimonies referred to by Peter is to be found in Joel ii. 32, And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered.

This is often quoted to prove that it is not necessary to believe the doctrine of the Scriptures, to be saved. But Paul settles the question, for in Rom. x. 13 he quotes the words of Joel, and then says, How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? &c. So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God.

Paul believed the Gospel of the kingdom of God, and when Jesus had satisfied him that he was the Messiah of that kingdom, Ananias instructed him how to call on the name of the Lord. Acts xxii. 10. Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

Peter said to the Jews on the day of Pentecost, in reply to their question, Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.

This was repeated afterwards to the Gentiles, and since that time, the salvation of God is confined to those only who have put on Christ by burial with him in the water of baptism.

This salvation is deliverance from an eternal grave. It is at present located in Jesus, and the only way in which we are connected with it is by an obedient belief of the truth in him. Hence our rejoicing in Christ Jesus.

He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life—as a promise from him who cannot lie; and therefore if we are accepted in the Beloved, will surely receive.

Jesus says: I am the true Vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the Vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

No one who understands fruit trees ever expects a branch to thrive and bring forth fruit after it has been severed from the stock. There is no such thing apart from miracle. And yet people talk of men and women being religious apart from Christ! It is a mistake. There can be no such thing. Jesus confirms this. We are wild branches by nature. He says, severed from me ye can do nothing. John xv. 5.

But as all the branches on a vine are not fruit-bearing boughs, so in Christ, you must not be surprised that some even in him are not religious, being only wild branches, which, after they have flourished for a time—using the goodness of the roots—are cut off, being good for nothing but to be burned.

If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love.

Paul, like John, declares that the promise of life is in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. i. 1. And to obtain this prize he ran in the narrow way, throwing aside every weight, counting all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 8. For whom I (Paul) have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him. That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection. This one thing I do. . . . I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. The reward is an incorruptible crown—eternal life. 1 Cor. ix. 25. Rom. vi. 23.

So run, that ye may obtain. Imitate Paul. Be temperate in all things. Keep under thy body.

This crown will be received from Christ at his appearing by those who are accepted in him; (1) then the saints are dead, having crucified the flesh, and their life is hid with Christ in God. Phil. iii. 4. When Christ who is our (the saints) life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

When any who are in Christ Jesus even fall asleep and return to dust, we sorrow not as others who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him, from the grave in the appointed order—Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. 1 Cor. xv. 23. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not precede them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. 1 Thess. iv. 11. &c.

And when the dead who have abode in Christ (John xv. 5) are thus raised to life, they will rejoice that they have walked in him. 1 John ii. 6. For John heard a voice from heaven, at this epoch in his vision of the future, saying unto him, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them. Rev. xiv. 13. Jesus will then give them the promised rest for which they have labored—the rest which remaineth for the people of God. Matt. ii. 28. Heb. iv. 9-11.

But Paul speaks of something else in Christ which we have as another reason for rejoicing in him. He says, I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory. 2 Tim. ii. 10.

This eternal glory is the excellent majesty and power, and unspeakable joy, which will be realized in the fulfilment of the promises, which God has covenanted to us in Christ, in whom they are centered—for all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen (faithful and true), unto the glory of God by us. 2 Cor. i. 20.

A glance at these promises will give us an idea of the eternal weight of glory contained in them.

The land of Canaan and possession of the world, to the uttermost parts of the earth—in a state of blessedness—is promised by God to Abraham's seed—Christ. Gen. xii. 7; xxii. 17; Gal. iii. 16; Rom. iv. 13; Psa. ii. 8.

And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

The permanently restored throne of David over Israel—the kingdom of God, and all the kingdoms of this world—when the knowledge and glory of God, and peace and amity among men, will embrace the globe—are promised to David's seed—the Holy One of God—Christ. And of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. Luke i. 32; Dan. vii. 14; Rev. ii. 15; Psa. lxxii.; Jer. iii. 17; Micah iv.; Isa. ix. 7.

And if ye become Abraham's seed by faith in these promises and obedience to Christ, then are ye children of God; and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ of this brilliant dominion. For if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him, and be glorified together. Rom. viii. 16, and ix. 8.

Hence, when we rejoice in Christ Jesus, we rejoice in hope of the glory of God, which will be manifested in the fulfilment of these exceeding great and precious promises, and fill the earth.

A stranger to these two covenants is godless. Eph. ii. 12.

Out of Christ there is no hope.

To be in Christ we must put on Christ. Therefore put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ.

There is only one scriptural course—through the water—preceded by belief of the things of the kingdom and name. Acts viii. 12. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and ye are all one in Christ Jesus. Gal. iii. 27.

In this exalted position of divine favor we have every reason for intelligent rapture; for the Apostle says, All things are yours; the world, life, death, things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's. 1 Cor. iii. 22.

Reader, think on these things, and act promptly your part in becoming Christ's. The door is still open. We invite you in the name of Christ to come into his mystical body, and share with us in his self-sacrificing love; and our Father's beneficent provision, for our present and future preservation, and well being.—T. Howe.

The Bible.

A nation must be truly blessed, if it were governed by no other laws than those of this blessed Book. It is so complete a system that nothing can be added to it or taken from it. It affords a copy for a king (Deut. xvii. 19) and a rule for a subject.

It gives instruction and counsel to a senate, authority and direction for a magistrate, it cautions a witness, requires an impartial verdict of a jury, and furnishes a judge with his sentence.

It sets the husband as lord of the household, and the wife as mistress of the table; tells him how to rule, and her how to manage. It entails honor to parents, and enjoins obedience to children.

It prescribes and limits the sway of the sovereign, the rule of the ruler, and the authority of the master; commands the subject to honor, and the servant to obey; and promises the blessing and protection of its Author to all who walk by its rules.

It gives directions for weddings and for burials; regulates feasts and fasts, mournings and rejoicings, and orders labor for the day, and rest for the night. It promises food and raiment, and limits the use of both. [illegible] ful and eternal Guardian to the departing husband and father, tells him with whom to leave his fatherless children, and in whom his widow is to trust. Jer. xlix. 11.

It defends the rights of all, and reveals vengeance to every defrauder, over-reacher, and oppressor. It is the first Book, the best Book, and the oldest Book in the world.

It contains the choicest matter, gives the best instruction, and affords the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that was ever revealed. It contains the profoundest mysteries that ever were penned. It brings glad tidings, and affords the best of comfort to the enquiring and disconsolate.

It exhibits life and immortality, and shows the way to eternal glory.

It reveals the only living and true God, and shows the way to him. It is a book of laws, to show right and wrong; a book of wisdom that condemns all folly, and makes the foolish wise; a book of truth, that detects all lies and confutes all errors; a book of life, that gives life and shows a way of escape from everlasting death.

It is the most compendious Book in the world; the most authentic, and the most entertaining history that ever was published.

It contains the most ancient antiquities, strange events, wonderful occurrences, heroic deeds, and unparalleled wars. It describes the celestial and terrestrial worlds, the origin of the angelic myriads.

It will instruct the most accomplished mechanic, and the profoundest artist; it will teach the best rhetorician, and exercise every power of the most skillful arithmetician; puzzle the wisest anatomist, and exercise the nicest critic.

It corrects the vain philosopher, exposes the subtle sophist, and makes diviners mad. It is a complete code of laws, a perfect body of divinity, an unequalled narrative, a book of lives, a book of travels, and a book of voyages.

It is the best covenant that was ever agreed on, the best deed that was ever sealed, the best evidence that ever was produced, the best will that ever was made, and the best testament that ever was signed.

To understand it is to be wise indeed; to be ignorant of it is to be destitute of wisdom.

It is its own interpreter.

It encourages the wise, and promises an eternal reward to the faithful.

It promises freedom to all who embrace the truths it contains,—freedom from sin and death; and except a man accepts these truths, he never will receive the gift of eternal life.

And that which crowns all is, the Author is without partiality, "in whom is no variableness or shadow of turning."

The Spirit of the Bible directs its readers to a "Glorious Kingdom," and to Christ who is the "way" to it.

"To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth the gospel (of the kingdom) and is baptized, shall be saved."

The Mysterious Side of the Gospel.

Among the many social and political changes that are taking place in the present day, there is none more noticeable than the decay of the ancient clerical power. Nations have grown weary of authoritative assertions, and of intolerant despotism. They complain that the ministers of religion have abused the mysterious element to be found in the gospel. Too many errors have indeed been introduced under the cloak of Christian mystery; and the pure gospel shuns that superstitious adoration which only endangers and delays the progress of truth. Blessed be God, our glorious gospel asserts itself before mankind as a supremely rational doctrine, and as the wisdom of God himself. Its only aim is to solve the mystery which, as Paul tells us, "hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to the saints."

Protestantism cannot flourish unless it advances with resolute tread in the path which the reformers marked out. Let us by all means study and revere ecclesiastical tradition, and cultivate Chris[illegible] worthy [illegible] to explore the past; but let us beware of substituting sacramental efficacy, vain formula, magical ceremonies, and the absolute authority of any man, for the moral power of faith and the Word of God. Such a course would bring down upon our Protestant Churches the destruction that threatens more ancient establishments than ours: whose days are numbered, in spite of their grandeur, unless they return to the purity of primitive faith.

If, then, we acknowledge that the evangelical religion does contain some mysteries, we hasten to add that it explains more than it possesses, and that it contains fewer than any other religion, or any system of philosophy. We may go still farther, and add that we expect a new religious era to result from the freedom of thought that was inaugurated by our fathers of the sixteenth century. The same careful and painstaking study of proofs which has regenerated natural and historic science in our day, will also transform our understanding of Christian truth, and will prepare the way for that day when all from the least to the greatest shall be able to give a full and most positive proof in support of "the hope that is in them," and when "they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother saying, Know the Lord:" for the law of the Lord shall be written in every heart. In the crisis through which we are passing, imperfect knowledge is shaking the faith of many, but riper knowledge shall change faith into sight.—E. Petavel.

Live in To-Day.

There is no illusion so insidious and persistent as that which introduces into the future some element of luck, which stores up for us in the future something which we have not secured for ourselves. We are always dreaming of having more time in the future, and of doing things with a strong hand in consequence; today we have but fifteen minutes, and what can be made of such a fragment of time? Next year we shall have hours, and then we will read the new books, learn the languages we need to possess, accomplish the larger tasks of which we dream. But the hours never come, and the achievements are made, if they are made at all, in these odds and ends of time that come to us by the way. The wise man is he who knows the value of today: he who can estimate today rightly may leave the future to take care of itself. For the value of the future depends entirely upon the value attached to today; there is no magic in the years to come; nothing can bloom in those fairer fields save that which is sown today. The great aim of Christianity is not to teach men the glory of the life to come, but the sacredness of the life that now is; not to make men imagine the beauty of heaven, but to make them realize the divinity of earth; not to unveil the splendor of the Almighty, enthroned among angels, but to reveal deity in the Man of Nazareth. He has mastered the secret of life who has learned the value of the present moment, who sees the beauty of present surroundings, and who recognizes the possibilities of sainthood in his neighbors. To make the most and the best out of today is to command the highest resources of the future. For there is no future outside of us; it lies within us, and we make it ourselves. The heaven of the future, and the hell also, are in the germ of every human soul; and no man is appointed to one or the other, for each appoints himself. To value today, to honor this life, to glorify humanity, is to prepare for eternity, to seek the eternal life, and to worship God. The harvest of the future is but the golden ripening of today's sowing.—The Interior.

How his Child led Him.

Several years ago my brother was in Springfield one cheerless day, with about half an hour on his hands before train time. Strolling along near the depot, he noticed a tidy restaurant, and went in for lunch. A bright boy came to take his order, and as soon as he brought it, sat down to his lessons, [illegible] with a [illegible] propped up in a chair. When my brother had finished his meal, he approached him, saying:

"You have a bright boy to wait on your customers."

"Yes, indeed," said the man, with parental pride, "I couldn't hire so good a boy as that; he is my son, and was the means of my opening this place instead of keeping a saloon, which was the way I got my living for some years; and I'll tell you how it was. He came from school one day heavy-hearted, and when I asked him what was the matter, he began to cry, but couldn't speak. After I had urged him, he said that in recess some of the boys asked each other what their fathers did. One said his father was a plumber, another, that his was a carpenter; and when they came to my boy, who said his father kept a saloon, one of them said, 'That's the meanest kind of business.' 'And I could see they all felt the same way. That made me feel awfully ashamed; so, father, if you will only give up the saloon, I'll do anything I can to help you.' With that he threw his arms around my neck, and, sobbing, begged me to give it up. Well, the end of it was, I sold out. I don't make so much money as I did selling liquors, but it goes farther, and we have a happy home; my wife can help along, because decent people come here for their meals, but before, I did not like to have her around, there was so much low talk. My boy has been as good as his word. I couldn't ask for a better son."

My brother thanked the man for his confidence, and after giving his hearty approval, went his way.—The Little Christian.

Acquaint Thyself with God.

An Agnostic, being present in a refined circle, was told that a certain noted lady believed firmly in the Sacred Scriptures. He ventured to ask her, "Do you believe in the Bible?" "Most certainly I do," was her reply. "Why do you believe in it?" he queried again. "Because I am acquainted with the author," she answered, confidently. Poor souls, that know not God in Christ as their Savior, think, like Spencer, that he is "unknowable," and so reject his word. But true believers have a blessed acquaintance with both.

OBITUARY.

Wallace W. Jameson, was born in Adrian, Mich., Nov. 7, 1848. He lived with his grand-parents until the age of 15, they moving to Grand Rapids in 1851. He then went to Ill. with his father, remaining there two years. Soon after his return to Grand Rapids he went to Cleveland, Ohio. He was married to Maria Antoinette Dixon of La-Grange, Ohio, Dec. 31, 1868. Three years later he returned to Grand Rapids and went into the dairy business on his uncle's farm near that place and remaining there until his death, March 12, 1894. He leaves a widow and one son to mourn his death, also a blind uncle, M. B. Anderson, with his adopted sister, Mrs. Margarette Groynne. The later two being the only ones left of the Anderson family.

Brother Jameson was converted to the gospel by hearing the writer preach fourteen years ago, and through all the discouragements of life was a firm adherent to the faith. At our last visit to him he said, "Brother Woodward if this should prove to be my last sickness I want you to tell the people what my hope was. Leave my faults with God, whatever they may have been, but tell my friends I died in the hope." We laid him to rest in the beautiful cemetery on Fulton St. Grand Rapids to await the Master's coming. Our hearts ached and tears would come as we thought of our warmhearted impulsive brother laid away, and the place he had filled would know him no more forever. We will wait for that morn of bright glory to meet him again. His last words to his stricken wife and son were, "meet me in the kingdom." Rest on, dear brother, and we will all try to meet in that glad gathering. The writer spoke to a large circle of friends from Rom. viii. 22, 28.

The [illegible]

We frequently hear and see it said that baptism represents the death, burial, and resurrection of our Savior. Some sects even go so far as to claim from this triad or triune statement an obligation to practice a certain peculiar mode in baptism which shall represent the dying of Christ, his descent into the tomb, and his rising from the tomb. They enter the water with bended knee and bowed head "in forward action" because Jesus "bowed his head and expired."

The Apostle Paul says to us in Col. ii. 12—"Having been buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from among the dead." In baptism, with respect to Christ, we are buried and we rise. There is but a dual action.

It is from Romans vi. 3, 4 that the deduction referred to above is derived, "know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with (respect to) him through baptism into death; that as Christ was raised from among the dead by the glory of the Father, so also we should walk in newness of life." Here again we see that we are buried into the death, from the which we are raised as Christ rose. Could this be meant to represent the death of Christ on the cross, the act of dying, into which he was not buried? The emblems of his broken body and spilt blood represent his dying for us. In baptism, the old is buried into the death-state, the tomb-state, the hades-state, from which the renewed body rises, with sins forgiven and legally adopted into the household of faith.

If we must include the term "death" in our description of baptism, let us use it in the Bible-given order. We are buried into death and rise in resurrection therefrom. There are but two actions, the burial and the resurrection, and between them is the death-state, limited here to the grave-state.

[illegible] Chap. 2.

[illegible] brethren, hold not the [illegible] of Jesus Christ our Lord of the glory in acts of partiality (lit. face-takings.)

2. For if a man in sumptuous apparel with a gold finger-ring shall have entered into your synagogue, and a begger also in filthy apparel shall come in;

3. And ye look upon the one wearing the sumptuous apparel and shall have said, Sit thou here in an honored way; and to the beggar shall have said, stop there and sit at the foot of my foot-stool.

4. Have ye not indeed shown preferences among yourselves and become judges of wicked discriminations?

5. May ye have heard, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen out the beggars of the cosmos, rich in faith and heirs-at-law of the promise, which he hath promised to those who love him?

6. But ye have dishonored the beggar. Are not the rich asserting their ability against you and dragging you to judgment-seats?

7. Are they not blaspheming the noble name that hath been invoked upon you?

8. If ye are carrying out the royal law according to the Scripture, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," ye are doing well;

9. But if ye are face-taking (showing partiality) ye are sinners convicted by the law as invaders.

10. For whoever shall watch to keep (exoteric watch) the whole law, but shall fail (stumble) in one particular hath become amenable for all (the particulars.)

11. For the One who said, Thou shalt not commit adultery, said also Thou shalt not commit murder; and if thou do not commit adultery but dost commit murder, thou hast become an evader of law.

12. In this wise talk and in this wise do, as though ye were destined to be judged through (the instrumentality of) a larger liberty.

13. For the judgment-trial without mercy is for the one who hath not been a doer of mercy.

14. What doth it profit, my brethren, if any one saith he hath faith, and have not works (lit. deeds.) The faith cannot save him, can it?

15. If a brother or a sister be naked and in lack of their daily sustenance,

16. And any one of you say unto them, Go in peace, Be warmed and full-fed, But ye do not give unto them the things requisite for the body, what doth it profit?

17. In this wise also the faith, if it have not works (deeds) is dead by itself.

18. But some will say, Thou hast faith, and I have works (deeds.) Show me thy faith apart from thy works and I will show thee my faith from (source) my works.

19. Thou art showing faith in the fact that there is one God. Thou art doing well; and the demons put faith in the fact and shudder.

20. But wilt thou become aware, O vain man, that the faith apart from works (deeds) is dead?

21. Habraam our father, was he not justified on account of works? after he had offered Isaac his Son upon the alter?

22. Thou seest that the faith worketh along with (co-operateth) his works and that faith was completed from the works.

23. And the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, And Habraam put faith in God and it was accounted to him for righteousness, and he was called God's friend.

24. Ye perceive that a man is being justified on account of works and not on account of faith only.

25. Ask likewise also Hraab the harlot was she not justified on account of works (deeds) after that she had entertained the messengers and sent them out another way.

27. For even as the body without (apart from) breath is dead, so also the faith without the works is dead.

COMMENT.

"Stop thou and sit at the foot of my foot-stool" instead of "Stand thou there, or sit under my footstool" R. V. This would be a queer place to sit anyhow under a footstool would it it?

"Have ye not indeed shown preferences among yourselves, and become judges of wicked discrimina-[illegible] with evil thoughts?" R. V.

"Heirs-at-law of the promise" instead of "heirs of the kingdom." R. V.

"Asserting their ability against you" instead of "oppress you" R. V.

"The noble name that hath been invoked upon you" instead of "the honorable name by which ye are called" R. V.

"Evaders" instead of "transgressors" R. V.

"Shall watch to keep" instead of "keep" R. V.

"Amenable" instead of "guilty" R. V.

"Commit murder" instead of "kill" R. V.

"Mercy boasteth over judging" instead of "mercy glorieth against judgment" R. V.

"Completed" instead of "made perfect" R. V.

"Breath" instead of "Spirit" R. V. This word frequently used in the Old Covenant Scriptures of the breath of life, even of the animal creation.

Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. OBITUARY.

Died March 22nd, 1894, in Oregon, Illinois, Mrs. Elizabeth Middlekauff, aged 71 years, 6 months and 5 days. The deceased was a daughter of John and Elizabeth Ridenour, she was born September 17, 1817, at Hagerstown, Md., and married Elias Middlekauff January 17, 1839. They came to Illinois together in 1840 and settled in Ogle Co. She was the mother of 14 children, of whom but 4 survive. She left to mourn, an aged and afflicted husband, 4 children: Hezekiah, Josiah, Mrs. F. S. Burchell and William; also one sister, Mrs. Michael Lyster. All these have been with her constantly to minister to her wants the last week of her sickness. Sister Middlekauff was baptized into Christ more than thirty years ago and enjoyed the Christian's hope to the day of her death. The funeral services were held in the house of mourning, conducted by the writer. We laid her to rest in the cemetary three miles south of Mt. Morris, there to await the coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the just.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to send you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 18, 1894. NO. 15.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end [illegible] the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortality of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Way of Salvation.

"These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation." Acts xvi. 17.

These words, though spoken by a woman who was possessed with a spirit of divination, were true. Those men were Paul and Silas, accredited and qualified preachers of the gospel. Paul had been chosen by the Lord Jesus as the apostle to the Gentiles, and Silas accompanied him from Antioch to Philippi, where they spake to the people, and suffered persecution for Christ's sake. They were brought up before the magistrates, charged with troubling the city, and teaching customs not lawful for Romans to receive and observe. Then they were sentenced to be scourged and imprisoned, with a charge to the jailor to keep them safely. He, receiving such instructions, in order to secure his prisoners, put them into the inner prison, and made them fast in the stocks. But behold, the hand of God in the deliverance of his servants,—

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

While Paul and Silas were praying and singing, at midnight, an earthquake occurred, the prison shook, the doors opened, and every one's fetters were loosed. The jailor awakening, and perceiving the state of things, was about to commit suicide, supposing the prisoners had escaped, when Paul cried out, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." Then calling for a light, he sprang in and trembling fell down before Paul and Silas; and having brought them out, said, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Whether this question was asked from fear of temporal punishment from his Roman masters, or from fear of the wrath of God, is uncertain, their answer, however, was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

The doctrine of salvation is of the most momentous importance to the sinner. It is felt to be so by many noble and earnest men who are engaged in what is called evangelistic work. In various sections of our great country they are holding revival meetings for the purpose of rousing the church to action, and for the conversion of sinners. They express sanguine hopes of taking the world for Christ. But how I lament and feel pained at heart, when I see the unscriptural means employed to save sinners. I can say truly of such devoted men of the present time, as Moody and Sankey, Fay Mills and Greenwood, Crittenden, Yatman, and many others, adopting the language of the apostle Paul, "For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Rom. x. 2.

Let the intelligent reader only carefully compare the methods adopted by these men, and by preachers in general, to convert and save sinners, with God's plan as practiced by the apostles and evangelists as recorded in the Acts of Apostles, and the contrast will show that present methods are only human, and therefore are powerless for salvation.

Perhaps it may be interesting to ask, What is salvation? and How to obtain it? But in order to be correct, I shall ask no man's opinion—the Bible shall be my only guide in such an important matter, remembering what Paul said to Timothy—"from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. iii. 15. Let us inquire.

1. What is Salvation? It may be defined as deliverance from evil—whether temporal or spiritual—present or future. We read that the name of Jesus signifies a Savior in Matt. i. 21; and Paul wrote, that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," 1 Tim. i. 15. And again, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 17. Sinners are in a state of danger. They are under condemnation. Read Rom. iii. 9-19 for a statement portraying the character of both the Jewish and Gentile world, and as being subject to the judgment of God. Those who commit sinful acts are worthy of death, Rom. i. 32, and the end of those things is death, vi. 21, "for the wages of sin is death," vi. 23, "and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." James i. 15. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men," Rom. v. 12. The reader by these few quotations will see that death, not endless misery in an orthodox hell, is the doom of sinners. To die without hope in Christ is to perish. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. Jesus has promised eternal life to those who hear his voice, and follow him, and he adds, "they shall never perish, neither shall any one pluck them out of my hand." John x. 27, 28. And in order that he may be able to fulfill his promise to his followers, the Father has given his Son power to raise the dead, and to make alive whom he will, and to execute judgment also. John v. 21, 27-29. Hence he declared to Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John xi. 25, 26. Jesus said at another time that the Father's will was, "that every one which seeth the Son, and believing on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. None but the believers have this promise of a resurrection to life. "He that believeth on the Son hath (in promise) everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John. iii. 36. And the apostle John confirms this testimony when he says,—"And this is the record that God has given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that has the Son has life: but he that hath not the Son of God has not life." 1 John v. 11, 12. The life here spoken of is not now in possession,—it is a future life—a life beyond death and the grave. The present life is only animal life, and liable to pass away. "For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Jas. iv. 14. "All flesh (mankind) is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." 1 Pet. i. 24, 25; Psa. ciii. 15, 16; Isa. xl. 6-8; li. 12. "But he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." 1 John ii. 17. Why will he abide? Because he has the promise of being saved from perishing as the grass of the field—saved from death. "This is the promise that he has promised us, even eternal life." 1 John ii. 25. His future life is in the hands of his Savior. "The gift of God is eternal life." Rom. vi. 23: and this sacred treasure is deposited with Christ who has become the life and the hope of those who are his. Col. iii. 4; 1 Tim. i. 1; 2 Tim. i. 1; Titus i. 2, 3.

What a deplorable state the world is in because of sin! "The whole world lieth in wickedness." and therefore is under condemnation. The seeds of unbelief sown in Eden have produced an abundant crop. The lie that was then told, and the belief of it has been very disastrous to the race. It turned man out of Paradise, and by cutting off access to the tree of life he was deprived of perpetuating his existence; and so when he returned to the ground from whence he was taken, it was a finality to him, and unless another way to life was opened, he became as though he had never been. Obad. 16. And even now, nearly six thousand years after the lie was given to God's word—"Ye shall not surely die:" and nearly two thousand years after Jesus brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10, that untruth is believed and preached as the truth of God. The doctrine of an immortal soul in man is held as common belief by Christians and pagans, Jews and Mahommedans: in fact very few of the human race believe the Bible doctrine of the complete mortality of man, and that immortality can only be obtained conditionally through Christ. Is it not surprising that Protestants who profess to have discarded the traditions of Romanism, and to take the Bible alone as the basis of their faith, should believe and teach such an unscriptural dogma? The phrase "immortal soul" or "never-dying soul" is foreign to the Bible. The word immortal only occurs once in the English version, 1 Tim. i. 17, and there it is applied to God; but even that ought to be translated incorruptible, as in Rom. i. 23. Immortality is found only three times in the Greek Testament 1 Tim. vi. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54—once applied to God; twice to those who will be changed from mortality to immortality. In Rom. ii. 7 and 2 Tim. i 10 in common version ought to read incorruptibility instead of immortality. Thus there is no foundation for this belief in the Bible.

The important question asked by Job, xiv. 14, "If a man die shall he live again?" can only be answered by Christ and his gospel. Christ came to save the lost and the perishing; but only conditionally. Salvation is provided for all. "The Son of Man came to serve, and to give his life for a ransom for many." Matt. xx. 28: 1 Tim. ii. 4. 5. And through his teachings, death, and resurrection, "he has become the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," Heb. v. 9. The Father has given all authority into the hands of his Son, over all flesh, (mankind,) to judge, or to give life to those who come unto him for salvation. John v. 22, 27; xvii. 2; Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. As the Father has inherent life, and raises up and makes alive the dead, so also has he given the Son to have life in himself, that he may make alive whom he will. And his pleasure is to give eternal life to his sheep—that is those who hear him, and follow or obey him. John v. 21, 26; x. 26, 27. Jesus said to his disciples, "because I live, ye shall live also." John xiv. 19. This is no vain promise—he has power to perform his Word; for "the Father loves the Son, and has given all things into his hand." John iii. 35. God has manifested his love for his Son, for though he was crucified from weakness, being then in the power of his enemies, yet he raised him from the dead, and he now lives by the power of God. He now is the living one, who once was dead, but now is alive for the ages of the ages, and has the keys of hades and of death. Rev. i. 18.

Enough has been produced from the Scriptures to show that salvation is to save sinners from perishing, by giving him the hope of eternal life, by a resurrection from the dead, through Christ Jesus our Lord. The hope of escaping hell and going to heaven at death is a delusion, and not taught either by Jesus or his apostles. To heaven where Jesus now is we cannot go. John vii. 34; viii. 21; xiii. 33. He did not go there until raised from the dead, and has entered heaven for us—his church—as high priest. Gone beyond the veil, where it would be death to follow him, even if we could. The earth is our abode, and given to the righteous forever. Read Psalm xxxvii; Matt. v. 3-10. Let us now learn from the Scriptures how to be saved, by learning.

2. The Way of Salvation. We cannot obtain salvation without Jesus. He said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," John xiv. 6. Again, "I am the door: by me if any one enter in, he shall be saved," etc., John x. 9. In answer to the question, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" he replied, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Luke xiii. 23, 24; Matt. vii. 13, 14. The strait gate and narrow way lead to life, but few find it; and some seeking to enter are not able. How is this? Probably the reason is, that they follow the teachings of men instead of the Word of God. This is a very serious matter. It is a question of life or death—salvation or destruction; therefore it is important to know the right way. As Paul and Silas were authorized preachers of the gospel, they were able to show unto men the way of salvation. When the jailor asked what he must do to be saved, he was directed to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. Of course, this is only a general statement. Paul asks in Rom. x. 16—"How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" "So then faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God," ver. 17. In order then for the jailor to believe, he had to hear the Word of God. And so of every one else. Paul and Silas "spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes, and was baptized he and all his, immediately." Peter says, "and this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you," 1 Pet. iii. 25. The apostle James calls this gospel "the word of truth," and "the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." Jas. i. xviii. 21. It is necessary then to hear the gospel, or the word of the Lord, preached, before a person can believe. The gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16. "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are being saved, it is the power of God." 1 Cor. i. 18. Hence faith is essential, and that comes by hearing the gospel. Salvation is thus connected with the gospel. It is called God's power, because by it he saves men. It was sent first to the children of Israel, and was published by Jesus and his disciples, throughout all Judea, beginning from Galilee. Acts x. 36, 37; Matt. iv. 23; Luke iv. 43; viii. 1; ix. 1. 6; x. 1-9. These references show that Jesus, his twelve apostles, and seventy disciples, were preaching the gospel, or the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, before the crucifixion. They called upon the people "to repent, and believe the good news." concerning the kingdom of God. Mark i. 14, 15. But when Jesus was rejected by the Jews, as their Messiah, and was crucified, the nation proving themselves unworthy of the kingdom, and of salvation, the gospel was sent to the Gentiles, Mark xvi. 15, 16; Luke xxiv. 47; Acts i. 6-8; xiii. 44-48. The same word that Jesus and the disciples preached—"the word of the kingdom." Matt. xiii. 19—was offered to both Jew and Gentile, after the resurrection, by the apostles, in connection with "those things which concern our Lord Jesus Christ," Acts viii. 12; xxviii. 31. The kingdom spoken of was a literal one, and will be when re-established on the earth. It was promised to Jesus, the future Son and heir to David's throne, Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 31-33. The kingdom is called the kingdom of heaven or of God. Originally, the Lord was King, and he intended the nation of Israel to be his priests, Exod. xix. 6, but they rejected him when they desired a king like the nations. 1 Sam. viii. 6. 7; Acts xiii. 21-23. When David died, "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord instead of David his father." 1 Chron. xxix. 23. The twelve tribes of Jacob were the subjects of the kingdom, and will be again. Hence it was called the kingdom of God—of David—and of Israel.

Without further enlarging on this point, I may say that "this gospel of the kingdom," Matt. xxiv. 14, was preached everywhere by the apostles, after the resurrection, but always in connection with the name of Jesus. And why? because "neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," Acts iv. 12. These words were spoken by Peter, when filled with the Holy Spirit, therefore they are God's words. To Peter, Jesus gave the keys of the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xvi. 19; and as all must pass through the door (Jesus) into the sheep fold in order to be saved, and enter in at the strait gate, and walk in the narrow way, to obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God, the apostle Peter was chosen to use these keys to open the door of salvation to both Jew and Gentile, by directing inquirers what they must do to obtain salvation. Acts ii. 38; x. 43, 48; xv. 7-11. And also to open the inner door into the kingdom, by exhorting those who have been purified from their old sins by obeying the truth, to make their calling and election sure. 2 Pet. i. 5-11. Out of Christ there is no hope of salvation—no hope of life. His precious blood was shed for the remission of our sins, and we must be washed from our sins in his blood, Rev. i. 5. How? Only by the means which he has appointed,—faith, repentance and baptism. Faith, or belief of the gospel, which is apostolically defined to be, "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." Acts viii. 12; xxviii. 31. These things were made known by preaching; and "faith comes by hearing" the Word of God. Repentance, or reformation, is a change of conduct; ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well; turning to God, and doing works meet for repentance. Isa. i. 16, 17; Acts xxvi. 20. Baptism, or immersion in water in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts ii. 38. This is the only appointed means for becoming connected with the name of Jesus, "justified by his blood," "washed from our sins in his own blood," and thus "we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins," Rom. v. 9; Rev. i. 5; Col. i. 14. Thus it is not by faith alone that we are justified, have peace with God, are forgiven, have condemnation removed, and become the children or God. How may a sinner know positively when he is saved, or pardoned? Does the Savior tell him so with an audible voice? No! No! Jesus never spoke to any sinner—"Thy sins are forgiven thee"—since he left the earth for heaven. Before he ascended on high he gave "the word of reconciliation" into other hands. 2 Cor. v. 18-20. The apostles became ambassadors for Christ; and he speaks now through them to sinners, saying, "Be ye reconciled to God." Jesus said to his disciples, "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me, and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me." John xiii. 20; and the beloved disciple wrote—"We (apostles) are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." 1 John iv. 6. And hear this, you despisers of apostolic authority! "As My Father hath sent me, even so send I you. * * * Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained," John xx. 21-23. The Son of Man had power on earth to forgive sins, Luke v. 20-25; vii. 47-50; but he delegated that power to his disciples, and placed it in connection with his all-saving name in the ordinance of baptism. Hence repentant believers of the gospel are immersed into his name for the forgiveness of their sins. It is thus that obedient believers know positively that their sins are forgiven them for his name's sake. 1 John ii. 12. The knowledge of salvation is not dependent on fancy, or emotional feeling, but on the Word of God. Luke i. 76, 77.

In conclusion, let me say, that the way of salvation is only correctly taught by the apostles. Those who teach sinners that they may go direct to Jesus in prayer, and obtain pardon, are only deceiving them. The apostles never directed those inquiring what they must do to be saved, to pray for salvation to Jesus, as modern teachers do. When Peter answered those believing Jews on the day of Pentecost, he said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins;" "and with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying save yourselves from this untoward generation." Acts ii. 38-41. Saul of Tarsus, is the only believing repentant sinner that we can read of, who prayed to Jesus, saying, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The Lord sent him into Damascus, and directed Ananias to go to him, to restore his sight, give him the Holy Spirit, and to baptize him. He was not forgiven only as others were; "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts ix. 1-18; xxii. 6-16. Jesus does not forgive sinners now in a direct manner, as he did when on earth. He told his apostles what to do. Preach the gospel "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Mark xvi. 15, 16. This is the only way of salvation. It has not been abrogated. This is God's "way of righteousness," but both priests and people reject it; and like the Pharisees of old, they will not submit themselves to the righteousness of God. They have taken away the key of knowledge—the Bible—by perverting the right ways of the Lord. Acts xiii. 6-12; Luke xi. 52; Matt. xxi. 32.

The tower which is being erected by the Russians on the highest point of the Mount of Olives, at Jerusalem, is already several stories high, and but one more is to be added. It is to be so high that both the Mediterranean and Dead seas can be seen from the top.

Shake Hands.

I have often gone to church in strange places and gone away without a single person having come to speak to me. It makes one feel that they are not wanted, or at least the space which one occupies would be more acceptable than one's presence. Dear brethren and sisters, it should not be thus among the children of God. Christ's people of all others should set the example, and be friendly and sociable to all. Let us not be so cold and indifferent, but speak words of comfort and cheer to the stranger who comes into our midst. Give him a cordial shake of the hand, make him feel you are interested in his welfare, and invite him back again. He may stare at you in some surprise, but it is simply because you are so different from the rest of the world, who have either forgotten or neglected the duty of handshaking where he is concerned. You may be sure that in spite of the stare, he will be grateful to you for the handshake. A kind word and a hearty shake of the hand may be the means of bringing many a weary, sin-sick soul to find refuge in the blood of Jesus. Let us work in earnest and scatter seeds of kindness all along our pathway. Now is the time to shake hands and do all the good we can, for tomorrow may not be ours. A kind word spoken in season is as balm to the weary heart. Let us strive to live so that the world may be made brighter and better by us having lived in it. Shake hands with the aged. There is danger that in the present enthusiasm over young people and their work, the old will feel themselves forgotten. There is the gray-haired man in the corner who seems to be unnoticed. Now did you ever realize, earnest, glad-hearted young people, that one of the saddest things of growing old is being left out of the life and stir of the day? The aged like the touch of a warm, young hand and the interest of a warm young heart. No matter whether they remember you or not, shake hands any how. Shake hands with the children. Nothing dignifies a child more in his own estimation than to be remembered and treated with consideration by persons older than himself. Such attentions will never be forgotten. By all means shake hands with the children.

Shake hands with the pastor. There are times when he needs the sympathy and encouragement of his congregation. Stand by him and give him a helping hand in times of discouragement. You need not chose the moment when he is hastening to the door to greet a stranger, or at the close of a brilliant sermon, his hand has been all but shaken off at such times by the admiring members of his congregation. But you can watch for the time when he is burdened with care and anxiety, such as come to every pastor's heart, and then slip your hand into his, tell him what he has done for you, ask God's blessing to rest upon him, and hasten away while he is breathing an inward blessing upon you.

Shake hands with the janitor. Please remember he has more than his share of the snubs and corrections of those about him. Remember that a courteous Christian greeting would look a great deal better on your part, and may dispose him to think more kindly of refined Christian people.

Let us write our names in kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of the thousands with whom we come in contact year by year.

"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Every body shake hands. Hope cannot scatter shadows. When this brief life is past. Speak now your words of comfort. The end is coming fast.

The Spirit seems to have indited this prayer for the aged saints of every age: "Oh God, thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared thy works: cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth." Psa. lxxi. 9, 17.

"In the 45th Psalm we read: my heart is (margin) bubbling up or overflowing with a go[illegible] [illegible]ter." That good matter is the things concerning the King. In the 3rd verse the Psalmist says to the [illegible] sword upon thy thigh, O, Most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty; and in thy majesty ride prosperously because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies, the people fall under thee." Read Rev. xix. 15, 16 as a parallel passage.

"Life only in Christ" is a grand and glorious truth, and [illegible] conspicuously set forth in the Bible. But what benefit is to accrue to the human family from the preaching of it unless the way to obtain it is demonstrated? It is necessary for men to know how to obtain life in Christ; in other words, what they shall do to be saved. One ignorant of the gospel of the Kingdom cannot tell men what they must do to be saved. The great covenants of promise under which that kingdom will be establish are the gospel. It is because Jesus the Anointed to be King of that kingdom preached its coming that the Gospel of the Kingdom is called the gospel of Christ: and when it is also called preaching Christ. [illegible] Christ is to preach [illegible] has been anointed to be King of [illegible]. He who secures the kingdom [illegible] complying with the God-exact[illegible] conditions is sure of the life. Fa[illegible] in the covenanted kingdom. Reformation of life obedience from the heart to the faith [illegible] make one an heir [illegible] ensures the life Jesus procured for him, providing he observes the commandments of Jesus to the end of the journey of life. It is useless to tell of the riches of God's grace unless the way to [illegible] is made plain.

At the Ministers' Meeting at the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Cleveland on Monday, Prof. Conklin of the Ohio Wesleyan Ministry at Delaware, Ohio, delivered an address on "The Relation of Biology to Christian thought." He [illegible] the theory of evolution to be the grandest generalization of biology that had been made, and gave the arguments for evolution in detail,—declared that it was not atheistical, but on the contrary, it lent a dignity and grandeur to God and his works. With regard to the human race as to its physical features he said "man undoubtedly came from the lower animals," and he even thought the higher faculties might have come from the development of a soul germ in the lower form because some of the domestic animals, as the horse and dog posses intellectual traits." "Soul germ," is the latest; we see from this that the first murderous lie is vigorously working. Moses will have to go, if the Lord does not soon come,—and the prophet like unto Moses will soon be a useless appendage. What need will there be for him if of itself, the soul can, does, and will eternally progress? Progress is all an immortal germ needs; no need of a Christ to give life.

We are shocked every day with some new gospel nullifier; and we earnestly exhort those who have named the name of Christ, to be ever on the watch-tower, ever prayerful, ever studious of the Word, ever occupying,—redeeming the time, or else they will drift into the rushing current of popular opinion that will hurl them over a precipice ten thousands worse than Niagara, and their life go out in the blackness of darkness forever. "To him that overcometh," says Jesus, "will I grant to sit with me in my throne."

"Hagenbach's History of Doctrines" says, that the Socinians denied that immortality belonged to the original endowment of man. This is doubtless why they have always been held in supreme contempt by the populars.

Would it not be good for adopted ones to sometimes do what we [illegible] in Mark v. He told the dispossessed one to do instead of constantly arguing with their associates and friends?—"Go home," said he, "to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee."

Life, death, resurrection, all center in the redemptive work of Christ. He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification. If Christ be not raised our faith in him is vain. If we ever live beyond the grave it will be because he lives—he says [illegible] [illegible] of these plainly revealed truths [illegible] resurrection [illegible] little room in the theology of the day. Th[illegible] [illegible] the death of Christ as if his resurrection was not necessary for our justification. But [illegible] these poor deluded leaders and [illegible] will soon be discovered that their Christ never died at all. Nothing but the body the Christ lived in. [illegible]

As there is but one true Gospel there can be but one true hope: hence it is called "the hope of the Gospel" because contained in and declared by the Gospel. The hope of the Gospel is the hope of wh[illegible] the Gospel invites men to posses[illegible] and we learn what this is from what Paul said to the Thessalonians,—"God hath called you to his kingdom and glory." What an invitation! A[illegible] this kingdom only exists in promise[illegible] the offer is still good. The Message [illegible] this kingdom and glory [illegible] to Israel as a nation by[illegible] through Jesus was rejected, although it had been their hope for ages. Why was this? Because the message bearer [illegible] heir to the [illegible] Man of Sor[illegible] [illegible] by his [illegible] [illegible]stone which [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Gentiles now [illegible] Messenger [illegible] his message [illegible] was "If ye [illegible] on He ye shall die in your [illegible]." The test to the Gentiles is, "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness." It will [illegible] all who believe it witness [illegible] all who disbelieve.

The Gift of God.

"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Here is a picture with two sides—death and life are set before us. If we serve sin, death is the wages; and most people seem to think they can receive eternal life as wages if they serve another master, or become servants of righteousness. This is a mistake. Our obedience is due to God, so that it cannot be credited as part pay for eternal life. The Scripture commencing this paragraph tells the whole truth in a nutshell, and there would be no need to write a word of explanation if people would, "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it. 1. Eternal life is a gift. 2. The Giver is the eternal Father. 3. The Medium is his Son Jesus Christ. 4. The happy recipients of the gift are the faithful in Christ Jesus the beloved, and elect of God. Jesus is the Great Shepherd of the sheep; and he said, "My sheep hear his voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." They cannot possess it before he bestows it. In the mean time they are recipients in hope. On its reception they are made partakers of the Divine nature, whereby they become equal to the angels, and can die no more."

Blessedness of Death.

The latest up to date is from the Rev. Chancey [illegible] on Rev. xiv. 13. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." He says, "In these words our Lord reveals to us a truth which we are slow to learn, and still slower to familiarize to our thought, and assimilate to our feelings as a blessed reality. He presents death as something to hope for, as a new step in life, as an attainment surpassing all that is possible to us while we remain in this world......Death is a blessing, therefore, because it is a [illegible] of the Divine love and wisdom; because it is carrying out the purposes of the Divine love.

How we should rejoice and magnify the name of God for the light of the glorious gospel of the [illegible] of God that is [illegible] when we see the midnight darkness of the religious world! So far as God's redemptive scheme is concerned they are none the better for the Bible. They turn it [illegible] down and outside in—every way but the right way—every way but [illegible] plain and natural ways. Their [illegible] time seems to be occupied in seeking out inventions of their own and trying to find plausible support for them in the Word of [illegible]. Reverend [illegible] revered and honored in proportion to their skill in nullifying the gospel of the grace of God. [illegible] wages of [illegible] blessing world [illegible] the very climax of [illegible]

One Gospel.

"[illegible] is one God, one Lord, one [illegible] one baptism; and there is one hope." Says Paul, "ye are called in one hope of your calling." [illegible] hope of the [illegible] the one Gospel here for which he was bound with a chain also called [illegible] of Israel and was where [illegible] good things which Jehovah [illegible] promised unto the house of Judah." The fact that Paul would suffer bonds and imprisonment rather than give up [illegible] strong evidence that he expected [illegible] promised would become a glorious reality through Jesus, in whom all the promises centered. We labored for hours a few days ago to convince a "Minister" [illegible] wished to [illegible] the gospel [illegible] preached to [illegible]

Original.

Do They Differ?

I would like to ask Bro. Wilson to reconcile [illegible] how why there seems to be a difference between Matthew's account of the time that the women went to the sepulchre and the account of Mark, Luke, and John. I ask because I can't understand how it was. Yours for the truth.

J. R. Lent.

The above is a very proper question, and one that has troubled many minds. I contribute the result of my own study with pleasure.

These four gospels contain sublime strains of heavenly music which fire the heart of God's children with rapturous joy. At the introduction of the grand Hero of their marvelous story, the old hills of Judea resounded with the melody of the heavenly choristers, as they sang "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

The above is too grand, and too lofty for any but the children of his love to grasp. As has been well said: "The shafts of the conceited sceptic, aimed at these impregnable bulwarks of our faith fall at his own feet, harmless as the school-boy's arrows aimed at the extinction of the sun."

For centuries able scholars have searched old libraries, and ancient monasteries, for manuscripts musty and faded with age, and have found only trifles by way of variations and discrepancies. It is also well said: "No book on earth has ever stood the test of such searching criticism as the New Testament; and after all that has been said and done, this book has emerged from the flames of historic criticism, scathless as the Hebrews from the burning fiery furnace."

"Although all the libraries in which ancient copies of the sacred books may be found have been called upon to give testimony—although the Arabic, Syriac, Latin, Armenian, and Ethiopian versions have been colated—although all the manuscripts of all the countries and ages, from the third to the sixteenth century, have been collected and [illegible] by countless critics, [illegible] eagerly sought out some [illegible] text as the [illegible] of their [illegible] although learned men [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] researches into [illegible] of Mont Athos, [illegible] Asia, and Egypt, they [illegible] new instruments of [illegible] a learned [illegible] been discovered [illegible] a single reading that could throw doubt on any one of the passages before considered certain."

"Consider the thirty years' labors of John H. Michaelis, [illegible] the great Critical Bible and the ten years' study of the famous Kennicott, who consulted 581 Hebrew manuscripts, [illegible] Professor Rossi's collection of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the New Testament [illegible] [illegible] Mill, [illegible] Wetstein, and Griesbach, who [illegible] 1357 manuscripts for the gospels alone; and, above all, [illegible] Scholz, with his 674 [illegible] 200 for the Acts, 256 for the Epistles of Paul, and 93 for the Apocalypse. All these [illegible] have so convincingly established the astonishing preservation of that text, copied so many thousands of times, that the hopes of the enemies of the Bible in this quarter have been abandoned, and, as Michaelis has said, "They have [illegible] henceforth to look for any thing from those critical researches which they at first so warmly recommended, because they expected discoveries from them that have never been made."

In the study of the gospels we are apt to err in supposing that events following each other took place in the order in which they are written, which is not always the case. Take for example the close of Luke's testimony, if [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] written [illegible] after the [illegible] of the Jewish and other ancient histories.

The accounts are very much condensed, and many connecting details are omitted. One gospel mentions details omitted by another. The leading facts are all the same. If we collect all the details and connect them with the facts, we can arrive at a more intelligible conclusion.

THE GOSPELS DO NOT DIFFER as to the time the women visited the sepulchre. The trouble arises from an unfortunate use of the word "came," in our Common Version, of Matt. xxviii. 1. The Word does not express to us the idea intended. A translation from the original Greek, by Doctors George Campbell, James Macknight, and Philip Doddridge, reads: "Sabbath being over, and the first day of the week beginning to dawn, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to visit the sepulchre." The Diaglott also harmonizes with this in the use of the word "went," in place of the word "came." The word "went" indicates that they started out to go and visit the sepulchre, at the time specified:—"Sabbath being over, and the first day of the week beginning to dawn." To illustrate, we might say, Bro. Lent "went" to Chicago, on the 10:30 train to visit the World's Fair. No one would for a moment suppose that he arrived in Chicago, and was visiting the Fair at 10:30, but that he started at that time.

Hence, Matthew mentions only the time they started to go to visit the sepulcher.

Now, turn to Mark xvi. 1, and you will find that Mark does not contradict Matthew, but states the time at which they arrived at the sepulcher, which Matthew omits. "And early, in the morning, the first day of the week, they come to the tomb about sunrise." The Diaglott also harmonizes with this. To illustrate further, we might say: Bro. Lent "went" to Chicago, on the 10:30 train to visit the World's Fair, and "came" to Chicago, "about sunrise" the next day. Here then we have the time Bro. Lent started for, and arrived at Chicago. So by taking Matthew's and Mark's accounts together we have the time the women started for, and arrived at the tomb.

Now turn to Luke xxiv. 1, and let us see if he harmonizes with Matthew and Mark. "[illegible] on the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre." They started [illegible] "very early in the morning." Matthew says "the first day of the week [illegible] began to dawn," [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in the morning." We have ascertained that Matthew, Mark, and Luke harmonize exactly.

Now let us try John as to time: John xx. 1: "The first day of the week, Mary Magdalene went early to the tomb, while it was yet dark." If they arrived at the tomb "about sunrise," or "very early in the morning," it is quite likely it would be yet dark" when they started.

We now have examined every one of the Evangelists, and have found no discrepancy as to "the time the women went to the sepulchre," which is the question asked by Bro. Lent. Some times the wrong use of a word leads us astray.

I well remember a writer in one of our Chicago daily papers coming out with an article declaring the New Testament unworthy of confidence, because it was contradictory. In proof of his statement he said they disagreed as to the place Christ ascended from. He said Luke affirmed that "he led them out as far as Bethany" and there ascended, and Acts said he ascended from Mt. Olivet, and that a book which made such contradictions as this could not be true. If this wise man had only known that Bethany was situated on the eastern slope of the Mt. of Olives, his supposed contradiction would have vanished like smoke.

Be loyal to the grand Old Book. The fires of direct criticism cannot scathe it; it stands as firm as the everlasting hills, and as true as God [illegible] One who inhabiteth eternity.

[illegible] saith unto them thy [illegible] rise again. And Martha said unto him I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day."

"Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live."

"And he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this? For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so (in this way) shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Whose Son is the Messiah? "They say unto him, David's son, Jesus said how then does David call him Lord."

"The Lord said unto my Lord sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

The Pharisees could not answer Rev. xix. 12, "His eyes were as a flame of fire and on his head were many crowns. And he had a name written that no man knew but he himself, and he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called the Word of God."

"Now we know in part and prophesy in part, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away."

Editor Restitution:

Say to the brethren that on last Sunday two more were added to the Body by baptism. Thus the Bride is making herself ready.

Our meeting house is being pushed along as rapidly as possible. The frame is up and almost enclosed.

OBITUARY.

Died in Clarksville, Butler Co., Iowa, March 25, 1894, Edward Duncan aged 66 years, 7 months and 8 days. Bro. Duncan was a man well known to the writer [illegible] than twenty years, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] gave [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] He was a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] at the service of the gospel [illegible] whose [illegible] his own [illegible] and [illegible] his own [illegible] Being honest himself he despised deceit and hypocrisy. He loved the gospel that appealed to his judgment and common sense. He heard it, believed and died in hope of living again. He sleeps in [illegible] and quiet rest awaiting the summons of the Lifegiver. He has not long to wait, for the morning light is breaking, the day star will soon appear, death will be vanquished and immortality will be bestowed upon the [illegible] believer. The funeral services were held in the Christian house of worship where a large concourse of citizens assembled to offer a tribute of respect for the dead, and their sympathy for the living. Elder Geo. Meyer spoke words of comfort to the afflicted wife and her four children. May the God of all comfort and consolation bestow the needed grace in this hour of affliction and may they be kept by the power of God unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time, is the prayer of the writer.

David R. Voreis was born in Preble Co., O., July 27, 1812. He removed with his father to Butler Co., O. After residing here for a time he removed to Union Co., Ind., at which place he remained until he came, in 1836, to Marshall Co., Ind., where he continued to reside until his death which occurred April 7, 1894, at the age of 81 yrs., 8 mos., and 14 days. In about [illegible] he was married to Mary A. Logan. She was taken from him by death a few years later, and in [illegible] he was married to Sophia Dixon, with whom he lived until her death, March 2, 1879, from which time he lived with his children at his old home until his death. Of [illegible] immediate family seven children, with a number of grandchildren survive to mourn his loss. Brother Voreis had been a faithful follower of the Master for many years, being an intelligent and obedient believer in "Life only through Christ" and kindred truths. He was one of the pioneers of Marshall County, and was one of its most honest and upright citizens. He died as he had lived—honored and esteemed by those who knew him. His life work is done. Unable to toil and bear the burdens of life longer, he laid his armor by and closed his weary eyes in death to rest from the labors of a well spent life.

Funeral services, conducted by the writer were held at his residence, where a large number of neighbors and friends assembled to pay their respects to a highly esteemed citizen and brother.

At his late home at Thompsonville, Benzie Co., Michigan, March 8, 1894, Brother James H. Winters died of Pneumonia, aged 60 years.

Brother Winters was born in the city of Rochester, N. Y., August, 18, 1833. He came with his parents to Michigan in 1854, his father at that time locating in Marengo Township, Calhoun Co., afterward removing to Athens. The family were residents of Calhoun Co., more than twenty years. The deceased was married to Miss Elizabeth Davidson, Feb. 3, 1856. They both heard the gospel of the kingdom, and received the truth, and were baptized into the All-Saving Name June 12, 1859, by Elder G. Chesebrough.

He enlisted as a volunteer on Oct. [illegible], 1861, and received an honorable discharge from the service June 21, 1865, with rank as Sergeant, having served three years and ten months. He then moved to Marcel Township, Manistee Co., being one of the pioneer settlers of that county, where he resided [illegible] 6, Oct. 1880, when he moved to Thompsonville, and took the position of Postmaster, which position he held at the time of his death. He had filled many places of trust with honor to himself and satisfaction to the community. He was [illegible] by his fellow-townsmen [illegible] upright man, strong [illegible] convictions and just to all. He was a great Sunday School [illegible] a good singer which [illegible] a great help to the [illegible]. He was superintendent in [illegible] and would teach singing [illegible]

[illegible] was no Minister of our faith [illegible] part of the country a Congregational minister preached the funeral sermon from Rev. ii. and a part of the 10th verse. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Brother Winters leaves a wife and five children, two sons, and three daughters and 15 grand-children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father, yet, they sorrow not as those without hope. The deceased was a cousin of the writer and had visited me in January and we talked of our hope, and the prospects for the future and said when we parted "that if we never met again in this life, we would try to meet in the kingdom of God." He was buried by the Mason's Fraternity, of which he has been a member since Sept. 26, 1856. He sleeps in Jesus. Blessed thought. My prayer is "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

Announcement.

The annual conference of the Churches of God in Iowa will be held at Nevada, Story Co. Nevada is on the C & N. W. R. R. 20 miles west of Marshalltown and 8 miles east of Ames. This meeting will last ten days, commencing June 7, 1894, and will be the most important meeting we ever had. The Young Men's educational work, tent work, new hymn book, and other important matters will be considered. Brethren and sisters, we need your presence and counsel. We are living in a time when the cause of Christ demands that every one do his duty. It is true we have [illegible] year after year and helped to carry the burden of work for our Master, but the burden was light and you found rest and peace in it. But there are some isolated ones to whom this privilege has not come in many years, to you we say come to the meeting. We want to see your faces and hear your voices in our social meetings. As you shall tell us of your faith and hope. Make an extra effort, begin your plans now. It may be the last conference till Jesus comes. Come, spend a week in the tented grove with those of like precious faith. It will rest you, and strengthen you in the Divine life. A full program will be published in due time.

For the Committee.

A. J. Eychaner.

Bro. Underwood:

I am requested by a good old preacher of the Christian church to ask you or some one to give an explanation of Dan. viii. 14. 1st what sanctuary spoken of or means. 2nd, when did the 2300 days or years begin? 3rd, when and what will be the fulfillment of this prophecy, etc. Will you give us through The Restitution an exegesis of this 14th verse, and what sanctuary is here spoken of. Yours for the truth.

I. D. Hatfield.

[We ask W. H. Wilson to give an answer to this.—Ed.]

To all the beloved ones, greeting:

The third Sunday in March, I visited the Big Creek Church in Neosho Co., Kansas, and six put on Christ by baptism, and the good work is still going on, for which give God all the glory. Brethren, hold on to the true gospel of Christ as it is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe, and it is the only power that draws to Christ. Rom. xv. 16. No man can come to Christ except he be drawn by the gospel of the kingdom of God: Many are giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, such as the immortality of the soul, sky kingdom, heart kingdom, church kingdom, going to heaven or hell at death endless suffering, just because they are popular. Brothers and sisters, let us come out from among them and use the Lord's money to send preachers in the field that will preach the truth. Read and meditate on these things.

Standing Alone.

There is neither virtue nor profit in standing alone, if our isolation is the result of our own disagreeableness, stubbornness, ugliness, or oddity. It is by no means certain that a man is out of bad company because no one else is near him; and his separation from others may be his fault instead of his duty. If his heart be sour and morose; if his hand be against every man in Ishmaelitish rage and controversial impertinence; if he can agree with no one, and would change his own course if he saw any one else agreeing with him; if he is alone as lions and tigers are alone,—because they are too fierce and selfish to have company—then his lonliness is his sin against the common ties of human brotherhood, against the sweet charities of Christian fellowship, against the unity of the "one body," and against the communion of the "one spirit."

But notwithstanding all this, there are times and circumstances which compel the servant of God to stand alone. The grace which has constituted him a son and an heir of God; the Holy Spirit which has renewed his heart and soul; the precious faith by which he has been saved and purified; the blessed hope to which he has fled for refuge from the storms of earth; the heavenly heritage which has weaned him from the world and made him but a pilgrim here; all these and other things which distinguish broadly between what he was and what he is, may prove sources of isolation in a world of sin and among a race of sinful men.

The Christian's isolation is far from being a mere local separation from the presence and occupations of his fellow-men. His is no cloistered virtue, shunning the walks and warfare of an active life; it is no separation from human sympathies and fellowships and tears. It is no going out of the world into trackless deserts or lonely hermitages; nor is it a passing by "upon the other side" when suffering humanity lies stripped and wounded and weltering in its gore. But it is rather a separation from sin, and from sinners in their sinning; a separation from the crafty in their craftiness; a separation from the blinded multitude and from their blind misleaders; a separation foreseen and foreshadowed by him who has chosen us out of the world, who hath said, "Thou shalt not follow the multitude to do evil," and whose message to his people is, "Come out from among them and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

This is a separation to which any child of God may be called, and for which every one should be prepared. Much as he may love the fellowship of brethren or the friendship of his associates, yet he must be ready to sacrifice all, forsake all, and deny self, if thereby he may stand approved of him who hath bought him with his blood.

For peace's sake he may concede much. For Christ's sake he may endure much. But he must not prove recreant to his trust. He must not see right trodden down and wrong exalted, and countenance the act. He may deny himself, but he must not deny his Lord. He may sacrifice his pleasure, but he must not violate his conscience. He may waive his opinions, but he must not forsake his faith. He may yield his preferences, but he must not abandon his principles. He may love his brethren, but he must follow his Master. He may consent to that which is expedient, but he must be steadfast for that which is right. He may respect man; he must obey God.

Such a man, impelled by such influences, must sometimes stand alone. He knows the right, and he cannot join hands with those who pursue the wrong. He sees the ditch, and cannot follow the blind leaders who grope along its margin. He perceives the guile of crafty men, and he cannot link himself with those who are their dupes and tools. He cannot strike hands with worldly policy; he cannot veer and vacilate with every changing wind; he cannot accommodate his principles to suit the times or to suit the tastes of selfish men; he cannot lend his influence to crooked policy, his sanction to sleek deceptions, nor his countenance to covert iniquity; and so, by every principal of his new nature, and by every impulse which comes to him from above, he is compelled to stand alone. He cannot strive or cry or cause his voice to be heard in the streets amid the brawling clamor of a thousand tongues; he cannot be a man of bitterness and jangling and disputation; he cannot mar the gentle charities of heaven by rude contentions with the crafty, the designing, and the bold;—and hence he finds himself withdrawn from the unquiet clamor to walk in lonliness and obscurity, to strengthen his heart in patience and fidelity, to await the changes which may occur in ways unknown to him, and to abide the call of God and the issues of his providence, whenever or wherever it may designate his labor and appoint his lot.

The man who is thus called of God, who listens to the instructions of the Bible, the teachings of the Holy Ghost, the voice of conscience, and the indications of Divine Providence, need not fear or faint, though he find himself standing alone. The truth which is trampled down and turned out of doors today, will soon be lifted up and welcomed back again. The Christ who was crucified on Calvary amid taunts and scoffs and mockings, will come to reign in Zion, while all the angels worship him. Today's minority is the majority of the future; today's majority will be the shame and stench of days to come. The top of the rolling wheel soon finds its place at the bottom, and the bottom climbs upward from the mire of the streets to the acme of the circle.

He who for company's sake has fellowship with wrong and sin, may find that living in Sodom is vexatious in itself, and may have to change his quarters at last with inconvenient haste; while he who, Abraham-like, consents to be a pilgrim on the earth, shall know the purposes of his heavenly Father, shall find audience with Deity for his intercessory petitions, and shall view in distant safety the smoke of Sodom's overthrow, or the tumult of Babylon's destruction.

He who is called to stand alone, may stand without fear. With truth, he is on the strongest side; with right for his buckler, he shall withstand his foes; with God, he has more than a majority. All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field; the grass withereth and the flower fadeth, but the Word of God endureth for ever. What shall he fear who rests upon that Word? All things are working for his good, and all things are his. Tribulation and sorrow, trial or temptation, life or death,—all are his. His are the changes of time; his the compensations of eternity. He need not fret himself because of evil doers, or because of him who prospereth in his way. The momentary vantage is the presage of utter and inglorious overthrow, and temporary defeats culminate in overlasting victories. Let but the humble Simon of Cyrene be forced to bear the Savior's cross, and his patent of nobility is sure, and a fame wider than that of kings and statesmen clings to him throughout the centuries of time and the cycles of eternity.

He who stands alone for God shall never lack for company. Though the thoughtless rabble around him cannot see his sun-crowned head above the fogs and mists that blind their eyes, yet he shall have fellowship with God and with his separated people through all the years of time. He is alone, but God is with him. He is alone, but angels guard him. He is alone, but the Holy Comforter abides within his heart. He is alone, and yet he is a member of that True Vine whose branches overspread the world. He is alone, and yet he is linked by living ties to that One body in which all the saints of God are fitly joined. He is alone, but what cares he for loneliness, so long as he walks with God?

Are you called to stand alone? What then? Did not Noah stand alone, when he foretold the flood, prepared the ark, and escaped destruction? Did not Abraham stand alone, when he forsook his kindred and his country to be a pilgrim and a stranger on the earth? Did not Joseph stand alone, when he was hated, sold, enslaved, and persecuted? Did not Lot stand alone, when he vexed his righteous soul from day to day with the ungodliness of the Cities of the Plain? Did not Moses stand alone, when he renounced the splendors of Egyptian royalty, to share the fortunes of a race of slaves? Did not Caleb and Joshua stand alone, when all the congregation bade to stone them with stones, because they followed the Lord fully, and brought no evil tidings from the goodly land? Did not David stand alone, when all the hosts of Israel quailed before the giant of Gath? Did not Elijah stand alone, when he confronted the prophets of Baal on the summit of Mount Carmel? Did not the Hebrews stand alone, when they braved the terrors of the fiery furnace? Did not Daniel stand alone, when he passed through the lions' den? Did not Paul stand alone, when Demas left him, when all Asia turned away from him, when his own converts denied his apostleship, and when all forsook him, and fled from the presence of his imperial persecutor? Did not John stand alone, an exile on the lonely shores of Patmos? And have not many of God's holiest, mightiest, truest, noblest sons, been called to this same loneliness, from age to age, from the beginning of the world until now?

And what of all this? Noah, though alone, survived a deluged world. Abraham, though alone, had God for his friend, his shield, and his exceeding great reward. Lot, though alone, escaped the fires of Sodom's overthrow. Joseph, though alone, attained to the heights of earthly greatness, and still held fast the hope of Israel as his own. Joshua, though alone, wrought victory for the armies of the living God. Elijah, though alone, prevailed with God in wonder-working prayer, and at last rode heavenward in a car of fire. Daniel, though alone, found an angel present to stop the lions' mouths. The Hebrews, though alone, had with them the form of the Fourth, like unto the Son of God, and escaped the flames unscathed. Paul, though alone, could say, "The Lord stood by me and strengthened me, that by me the preaching might be fully known; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion." And John, in exile on the rocky shores of Patmos, beheld the opened heavens, and read the unsealed scroll of destiny, and saw the splendor of the golden city and the glory of the world to come as man had never done before.

Thus places of loneliness have become places of wondrous blessing, and many who have reclined in solitude and darkness on a wayside stone, have arisen to call their resting place a Bethel because the Lord had there revealed himself to them. Within the camp of Israel we are far from the sacred tabernacle. It is only when we are "without the camp" that we can come "within the veil." "Let us then go forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach." And in our weariness and solitude and tears, we shall find a preparation for work which God may yet set before us, such as nowhere else is found.

Are you called of God to stand alone? Stand then where God has put you. Your trial shall be brief. Your triumph shall know no end. Held back from the protections of men, you shall be guarded by the angels of the Most High. Restrained by the Word and Spirit of God from fellowship with unrighteousness and friendship with the world, you shall find sweeter fellowship with the Father and with the Son, and the lost friendships of time shall be more than compensated by the sacred bonds that shall unite us for eternity. And when the weary years of toil and conflict shall be done; when the watchmen who so long have stood alone on distant towers and battlements shall gather to the hill of God; when the separated ones shall see each other face to face and eye to eye; when the voices that have chanted the midnight lays of sorrow shall uplift the awakening songs of everlasting joy; when all the loneliness of saints in this poor sinful world is forgotten in the meeting, the re-union, and the triumph of "the general assembly and church of the first-born;" when the hidden mysteries of all our sorrows is revealed, we shall rejoice that it has been given to us to follow in the steps of him whose heart was often lonely in this world, and who once said to his disciples, "Ye shall be scattered, and leave me alone; and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me."—*H. Dear Restitution:

Inclosed you will find $1.50 to renew our subscription for 94. It ought to have been sent sooner, but it is hard to meet all demands this year, but if the times demand any sacrifices of us, it must not be of our beloved paper, for it is all the preacher we have, and the grand medium of communication with our brethren and sisters. We feel that the Love Feast of letters this winter has been worth more than the price of the paper. How glad we were to hear from so many dear friends, especially some with whom we were acquainted long ago. Our dear old sister Plummer, one of Iowa's pioneers, a very veteran in the cause, and many others. I did not write, circumstances preventing me, but my heart was with you all. Surely ours is a glorious and grand cause, but I am wondering what we are doing here in Iowa for its advancement this year. We read cheering reports from Nebraska and other places, and our hearts are made glad by them, and we are assured that our workers are not idle; but what are we, the scattered members, doing? Error is steadily advancing, while it seems sometimes that the adversary is weaving a barrier of circumstances around us to prevent us from doing what we would for the Master. Oh, may He give us power to break them all, and contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and help some one near us to a saving knowledge of the gospel, if we cannot reach out to those farther away. And above all things let us strive both by example and precept to impress the vital thought, "Except ye have the spirit of Christ ye are none of his." Oh let us come close to the Master amid the throng of worldly followers, and humbly stoop down and touch the hem of his garment that we may be perfectly whole.

Libbie Palmer.

Dear Brother Underwood:

I have just read Bro. Wilson's article on Rev. ii. in The Restitution, and am so well pleased with it that I wish to thank him for it. I have long been convinced that his is the only intelligent explanation that can be given; and I do wish he would continue his effort in the same direction. I have given the same book very extensive study myself, and will say frankly that if we ever are to understand John's vision, we must search along the line of what he says, omitting our theories. By what authority should we say that by the expression, 1260 days, John meant so many years? In fact what use have we for the year-day theory at all? For my own part I find the Prophets more easily understood by the ordinary rules of interpretation; and hence, I commend this thought to all truth searchers.

A correct understanding of the prophets I know is difficult even when we go about our search aright. This is especially true of John and Daniel, yet by this common sense rule, we may learn much more than otherwise we could. While I am writing I will make a deduction which shall illustrate the result of adhering to this method: All agree that John's ten horned beast is Rome. It is also clear that the seven heads of this beast were seven kings of Rome. One head was wounded unto death, and the deadly wound was healed. A deadly wound is one that kills—a mortal wound. To heal a mortal wound is to raise the dead, for if the wound did not produce death, it was not mortal. Thus we have it declared that a king of Rome shall rise from the dead. And since he is declared in chapter 17 to be an 8th king, and yet of the seven, we learn he is to reign again after his resurrection—he is a beast that is to ascend out of the abyss—the grave—a beast that was, and is not, and yet shall be—the great Anti-Christ—the little horn of Daniel into whose hands the saints of the Most High shall be delivered for 1260 days—not years.

Thus we see old conditions will be renewed—Rome will be revived; and thus the power that crucified our Lord will again resist him in the great battle of that great day when the beast is to be slain. Amen.

Now, my dear Bro. Underwood, though a lone stranger in this far away Texas, yet may I speak. Let me ask Bro. Wilson to take up the same line and write on. He must understand or he could not have said what he did. I know my deduction will seem strange to many, but—the truth is frequently strange. I am yours in faith.

D. C. Nance.

Dear Restitution:

Brethren, I must make note of a pleasant visit given to us by Bro. D. M. Hudler of which he gave us a good pleasant week of preaching the Gospel to us in such a way that a child could understand. He is a master of his profession. He left us Monday last to go to Dixon, Illinois, where he has his regular circuit for the season. I hope when the good seed is sowed it may take good root and bring forth good fruit. This brother took me from the beggar-elements of sin years ago. I took to reading Bob Ingersol's works, and thought Bob to be the smartest man on earth, and I followed him until I was showed the road to eternal happiness through the gospel. I then burnt up Bob's books, and commenced anew and now owe my life and happiness to my brother. May God bless the brother and The Restitution in its glorious work in my prayer. Yours with respect.

F. M. Hudler.

P. S. Brother D. M. Hudler preached at Yankee Hollow School house, and the people took interest in the sermons preached, and I think there is a chance for a good work here, when Bro D. M. Hudler returns in September next.

Dear Restitution:

As our time expires in April herewith I inclose $1.50 in an express money order to pay for 1894. We like our paper too well to ever let it stop. We love so well to hear from our dear brothers and sisters scattered over the land. We often feel encouraged and built up from those letters. I was thinking today, if the Lord would come tomorrow how many would be ready. Let us ask ourselves the question, Are we trying to get ready? We should live every day as though we expected he would come tomorrow. May our dear Heavenly Father give us strength that we may so live that he may say to us, Well done thou good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of thy Lord. Your sister in the Blessed hope.

Mrs. R. J. Worthington.

Dear Restitution:

I do not care to appear in print by name, but should like a little more light upon some topics. Can Mr. A. J. Eychaner tell your readers why it was that the embalming was not arranged for Friday morning instead of Sunday, if Christ's crucifixion on the day of preparation, occurred on Wednesday, thus making Thursday (Wednesday eve to Thursday eve) the Passover day? Is there any evidence that the Passover did not occur on Saturday, thus making that Sabbath day a high day, John xix. 31? Can an astronomical or chronological calculation positively show on what day the Passover was due in the year of the crucifixion? Further, Can Mr. M. Joblin put in catechism-like, concise and decisive form, his explanation of the many texts which have been supposed to show the pre-existence of Christ. I am greatly interested in his arguments, but I fail to convince anybody else. For instance: Glory I had with thee before the world was—if I say this means the glory which was foreknown and fore-ordained by the Father before the creation, and foretold by the prophets before Christ's existence—no one believes me. Hebrews i. 10, particularly needs an explanation, and the fact that "I am that I am," (Ex. iii. 14) may properly be in the future tense, and is apparently Christ, the coming one. Hebrews x. 5, apparently shows a conversation between the Son and the Father, before Christ's birth, and not before his existence. "Let us make man," shows an apparent consultation. Are we to suppose that God consulted thus the angels? If God consulted with angels or Elohim, how do we learn that elohim were immortal, in view of 1 Tim. vi. 16? What shall we do with this string of verses that Trinitarians like: viz., Isaiah xli. 14; xliii. 3, 14; xlix. 26; lx. 16; lxiii. 16?

I greatly prize Mr. Chas. Gardner's translations, and should like a bound copy containing his notes and interpretations of proper names.

To show that I would like an answer to my quiries, I enclose a dollar—not as additional subscription. Respectfully.

L. H.

Editor Restitution:

I want to tell the dear readers, brothers and sisters in Christ, what a feast we had of good news concerning the kingdom by Bro. D. M. Hudler. Our meetings commenced February 10th and continued to the 18th. There are but a few of us in this place, but we can appreciate the Lord just as much as though there were more of us. Our meetings were held in the school house and we had a very good attendance considering the weather, and I think some have learned the truth and intend to obey. We think brother Hudler a workman not to be ashamed of. There were Winebreners and Seven Day Adventists who pitched battle on him, but he had no trouble in defending his part, and some apologized for their rudeness. Surely it is perilous times, and what a constant watch one must keep to hold themselves in subjection to the Master's will, but by patient continuance in well-doing as long as we live, we shall reap our reward. Knowing this it makes us strong when we are weak. I for one live in hope of obtaining a part in the first resurrection, and pray for the kingdom to come. I am not able to express myself on paper, but have added perhaps the mite which will count in the world to come.

A Sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find money for which send the much esteemed paper another year. I could not think of being without it. I am more than pleased to see Bro. Moyer's name in the paper, and I think he has settled the pre-existence question, or at least he has with me as well as some others that were doubtful on the question. If Christ existed prior to his birth, we must look for another Savior, as the one that Moses spoke about was to be like his brethren, and it was the seed of David that was to sit on his throne, he called himself "Son of Man," and says, "I am the Root and Offspring of David." If he was not, he must have either been an adopted son, and you remember that Abraham taught that Elsizer would be all right for an heir, but God would not have any adoption or substitute. His heir had to come out of his loins. So it is the same language concerning the heir of David. I think The Restitution ought to always, as I think it does contain sound doctrine. Brethren let us all live so that when the time comes we may all be permitted to see the King in his beauty, and ask him if he was not the seed of the woman, and the seed of Abraham, and be sure and have Peter there so that you will have his testimony.

Your brother waiting for that glorious time, and hoping to see you all there.

G. W. Gamble.

Dear Restitution:

Since you were so kind as to publish my pieces, I will venture to send a short letter, hoping it may not find its way into the waste basket, but into some homes where it may show my appreciation of this dear paper. At present it is the only minister we have, at any time in receipt of the Living Word. How grand it is. It should be welcomed in every home.

On account of hard times we have not been able to take it for some time in the past, but am happy to be able to expect it for a year any way, and hope circumstances will be such that we will be permitted to take it next year and the following, or until the Master appears. Such reading is certainly acceptable to all who love the truth as God has revealed it to us. I am happy to state that at the age of 10 I am a baptized believer in all Christ taught. I was instructed and immersed by Elder Ramsay of Philadelphia, a grand and noble man he is. I was taken into the Methodist Church at the age of 18, and followed teaching according to man, fully believing it was right, but thank God at the age of 16 the veil was lifted and I found that Christ preached the gospel of the kingdom, and told his disciples to do the same, and after his death and resurrection they taught glad news of a risen Savior.

On the 21st of November with Mamma, I was buried in baptism and am happy to say I am still trying to learn more and more of the precious Word. Life is short, time is fleeting, and may it be spent in the study of God's Word. May each one in the faith realize the importance of improving time in the present. We are certainly living in perilous times. Watch, for when ye think not the Son of Man cometh. I will close hoping the dear ones may be watching.

Your friend in Christ.

Florence A. Davis.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed please find my subscription for one year. There are but few here that believe in the restitution of all things, and I am the only one that thinks that the Lord's Supper should be kept once a week, while some think it should be kept once a year, as the Jews kept the Passover. As I am the only one here that takes The Restitution, I would like, if you have time, and space in your column to explain for the benefit of others, this question, so it could be read at our Bible study.

Yours in hope.

Margaret Baxter.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find money order for $1.00 for which please send The Restitution for one year and the remainder in tracts to distribute. O, it does me so much good to read the pieces in The Restitution, and especially the words of encouragement from so many dear ones scattered all over land. I too want to take a part in your social meetings, though it may be a very humble part as far as my standing in the body of Christ is concerned, for I have only been trying to serve my Master for less than two years. I rejoice that I have come to a knowledge of the truth and I can say with Paul, "that I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth it." May the God of all mercy forgive me my unfaithfulness, and strengthen me to walk in the light of his Word in all things. Brothers and sisters, pray for me that I may not be found wanting when Christ comes to make up his jewels.

Isabelle Allard.

MARRIED.

Mr. Grant Brookover, of Bracken, Ind., and Miss Lizzie Jenks, of North Manchester, Ind., at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. A. R. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind., Thursday evening April 5, 1894.

The family at whose home the marriage was solemnized, Mr. & Mrs. W. D. Thompson, and their daughter Miss Phebe, were the only witnesses to the marriage ceremony. The evening was spent very pleasantly in social conversation. The newly married couple were entertained by friends in Plymouth until Saturday, at which time they returned to their home in Huntington Co., Ind.

May peace and prosperity go with them through life.

[illegible] dreamed, I have dreamed."

"I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart; which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbor, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal. The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Jer. xxiii. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30.

"Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them; therefore, they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 32.

"A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?" Jer. v. 30, 31.

"Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, we will not walk therein. Also I set a watchman over you, saying, hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, we will not hearken." Jer. vi. 16, 17. Even so is it now. The people will not inquire for the old paths, they will not ask for the good old way, they will not hearken to the sound of the trumpet, they will run after false dreams.

On my way home from Argos the last time I was there, while waiting for a train at Tipton I saw quite a number of ministers of the Dunkard, or German Baptist faith who were also waiting for the same train. I had nothing to do but to listen and see if I could hear anything of interest, but failed.

One minister told of a dream of one of his sisters in the church. She dreamed of going to heaven and of searching for her two little girls she had lost a short time before, and in the search she met an angel who enquired what she was looking for, and she told him she was looking for her two little girls who were somewhere in heaven, and the angel told her she would have to go over to the east side of heaven, which she did and all at once one of the girls blew up in her face, and said, "Oh here is mamma, here is mamma," and the other girl soon joined them and they had a happy time together. Afterwhile she left them to look for her two sons who were still alive on earth. She came across them and they were in fire (the first time I ever heard that the fire and heaven were in the same country) and she made a terrible effort to get them out but failed, then she awoke, and this was evidence to her that the girls were in heaven, and the boys in hell. I heard the old man through, and then I raised my right hand and gave this quotation. "The prophet that hath a dream let him tell a dream, but he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord. Is not my Word like a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" They all gave me a glance, but did not say a word to me, and finally they stopped talking. I heard them talk for one hour and this was all there was of a religious turn, and all that are acquainted with the Bible can see how near they came to getting the Bible. What a pity it is the world is so full of such trashy stuff.

I was highly pleased with Bro. [illegible] Hoyt's able article, it was so [illegible]. I believe all our brethren [illegible] speak out and all such false [illegible] that are going the rounds of the papers, let it be Mr. DeWitt Talmage, or whoever it may be.

One man in our town said to Brother Keever that the article [illegible] other, in the same paper, was the ablest he had ever read. So we see the need of speaking out both by word or pen, and let the world know where we stand, and also what the Bible teaches. Yes, let our let lights so shine before men that they may learn the truths of the Bible.

J. S. Hatch.

A Noticeable Baptism

The Rev. John Roberlson of Glasgow, pastor of the largest congregation of the Free Church of Scotland, with 1642 members and about 1000 more attendants not members, was recently baptized privately, at the London Tabernacle where the late Mr. Spurgeon preached. Mr. Robertson preached twice on Sunday at a Presbyterian church in London, and said to a reporter, "My leaving the Free Church of Scotland is a protest against the rationalistic teaching in that church and her subversion of the Word of God in various matters, including sinful complicity with unbelief. I mean to form a congregation in the City Hall of Glasgow, where the wearyings and worry of committees and Presbyteries will have ceased forever for me, and no man or body of men will come between me and the Master." He says he does not mean to join the Baptists; his congregation will be free of all denominational connection. He asked if he could be baptized on Sunday; but it is not the custom of that church to baptize on the Sabbath, so it was done on Monday evening. Mr. Robertson addressed the congregation, explaining his position. Among other things, he said that a few weeks ago, after dealing with students and hearing their sore distress of soul at the doctrines taught in the colleges, and after examining the theology that is being written and inculcated in that denomination, he was led in agony of spirit to withdraw from her communion.

The Free Church used to be about the "straitest" of the Scottish denominations, and next to the largest; but as well, Prof. Drummond, etc., are over there.

Farms for the Million.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming, within the last few years has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth, for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are land which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical features that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of grain products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North-Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill. – a. 7. 21. m. 5. 19.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Brethren:

Favorable response having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to the Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipt will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893 the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare [illegible] for it now. [illegible] every family in your [illegible] urge them to try it for [illegible].

To those who [illegible] our list [illegible] we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement, [illegible] you are behind [illegible] as well send [illegible] now as wait for us to [illegible]. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and [illegible] their means in the Master's service. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

[illegible] It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 8 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank drafts, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money, loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Mich. has known to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in [illegible] times, and it always [illegible] through." No one doubts it [illegible] so many [illegible] the very next time [illegible] be the loser. [illegible] that you can fold [illegible] so that no one can feel it, for one who handles [illegible] invariably [illegible] in it. [illegible] safely.

Letter to a Friend. A new edition of this popular work has been printed. It is not necessary to say a word about this work to the older readers, but to the new ones we say the subject treated of is the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one Hope, One Faith, and One Baptism." It was written some years ago by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff, and it is truly "A Letter to a Friend." Many editions have been printed and distributed until this little 28 page tract is acknowledged as the most effective missionary that can be handed out. Price 5 cts. each. The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLIII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 25, 1894. NO. 16.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

"Take My Hand."

A tender child of summers three,
Seeking her little bed at night,
Paused on the dark stairs timidly,
"Oh, mother! take my hand," said she,
"And then the dark will all be light."

We older children grope our way
From dark behind to dark before;
And only when our hands we lay,
Dear Lord, in Thine, the night is day,
And there is darkness never more.

God's Book of Remembrance and the Lamb's Book of Life.

Mal. iii. 16, 17; Rev. xxi. 27.

Perhaps it may be interesting and profitable for us to read and examine what is contained in the Bible about these books. Before the art of printing was invented books were written; hence the Bible books were then called Scriptures or writings. The Old Testament is frequently referred to by Jesus and his apostles, as "the Scriptures," the whole of the writings of Moses, and of the prophets, and of the Psalms, being collected together into one volume, and called, "the Holy Scriptures." 2 Tim. iii. 15. Then after the Gospels, Acts of Apostles, Epistles, and the Revelation were given to the various congregations, they were gathered also into one volume, and constitute the New Testament. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, the New in Greek, on parchment, and were called Manuscripts. These being translated into English, and printed, and bound together, now form one book, called by way of eminence—the Bible, or THE BOOK.

This volume of inspiration contains the words of God, and will undoubtedly be one of the books opened for judgment, which is mentioned in Rev. xx. 12. Jesus said, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." John xii. 48.

The laws of kings, governments, legislatures and nations are recorded in books; also records of wills, deeds, marriages, deaths, etc., to which appeal is constantly made for the settlement of disputes, adjustment of claims, and for authority to govern. And so for instruction and for our obedience God has caused his will to be recorded—first given to men of God who were moved to speak, and write, by the Holy Spirit. 2 Pet. i. 21; 2 Tim. iii. 15-17; John xx. 31; and now we have the complete record of God's will, which if we submit to, will perfect our characters, and qualify us for every good work. As people who live in the United States are judged by the constitution and laws which govern the country; so if we profess to have become the children of God, by the prescribed law of adoption, (Gal. iii. 26, 27,) we are under law to Christ, and have become the servants of righteousness. And the Apostle Paul wrote to the beloved of God, called saints, at Rome, "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life," Rom. vi. 22. We are not dependent on our emotions or feelings to know as to whether we are God's children; the record alone is authority, and decides that matter. If we know the law of adoption, and are conscious we "have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine," then the Spirit which gave the law testifies for us, that we are the children of God. Rom. viii. 14-16. Nor ought we to be at a loss to know our standing in God's sight, if obedient children. A dutiful and obedient child is always in favor with its parents; and so "beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are well pleasing in his sight." 1 John iii. 21, 22. "And now, little children, abide in him; that when he (Christ) shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." 1 John ii. 28.

The "books" mentioned in Rev. xx. 12, are not defined as to kind or number. So also in Dan. vii. 10 —"the books were opened"—both in the plural number, and connected with the judgment. "And another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Whatever the number or kind of books may be contained in the symbol, it appears that the names of the worthy ones, if any were found therein, were all transferred into the book of life; because it is said in verse 15—"And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire," or were utterly destroyed.

The mention of books in these and other passages wherein names and deeds are recorded for judgment, are only symbols used in accommodation to human understanding and methods of doing business. Deity, with whom the past and the future are ever present, has no need of records or books to assist his memory; and where we find mention of these in the Bible in connection with himself, it is to give us a better understanding of what he wishes us to know. In order that we may obtain a better knowledge of the subject, I will call the reader's attention to what is written in the Bible upon it.

The first allusion we have to God's book is in Exod. xxxii. 31-33. Moses pleading with Jehovah for forgiveness for Israel, said, "Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin—and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." We may learn from this that only sinners will be blotted out of God's book, and have no portion with the righteous. In agreement with this declaration of Jehovah, the Psalmist prays against certain characters —"Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous." Psa. lxix. 28. In like manner the nation of Amalek, on account of their sin, was to be completely extinguished. Deut. xxv. 19. And the exalted Jesus sent a message to some in the congregation of Sardis, who had not defiled their garments, "hating even the garment spotted by the flesh," saying, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels," Rev. iii. 4, 5. Paul believed that some of his fellow-laborers had their names in the book of life. Phil. iv. 3. And when the seventy disciples returned from their mission with joy, saying, "Lord, even the demons are subject unto us through thy name; he said unto them, * * * * notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven," Luke x. 17-20. And what book is it wherein these names are enrolled in heaven, if not "the Lamb's book of life?" Rev. xxi 27; and surely the names found there are belonging to "the congregation of the first-borns, which are written in heaven," Heb. xii. 23; and these are "the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb;" "the one hundred forty and four thousand redeemed from the earth," and "redeemed from among men." Rev. xiv. 3-5.

It is written by Paul, that though some err concerning the truth, and by their pernicious doctrines, may overthrow the faith of some, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." 2 Tim. ii. 18, 19. Jesus said, "I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any one pluck them out of my hand." John x. 14, 27, 28. These words of Jesus reveal to us in very plain language the present relationship between himself and his disciples. They are his, and he is theirs—he knows them, and they know him—he calls them by name, and leads them, and they follow—they know his voice, but a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers. And their future life is certain, being guaranteed by promise, and by the power of both the Father and the Son. The Father has given all believers unto the Son; and as all these are taught of God, they having heard and learned of the Father, come unto the Son, who has promised them eternal life, and a resurrection at the last day. Of course, this promise is on condition of faithfulness—"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Rev. ii. 10.

My dear brethren, who are called through sanctification of Spirit and belief of the truth, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, is it not a comfort to you to have the assurance that your names are written in the Lamb's book of life, and have the promise that they will not be blotted out, unless you defile your garments, and have only a name to live, while you are dead. This is not a desirable position for a Christian to occupy. Yet is it not a fact, that a majority even of those who "have purified themselves by obeying the truth," have forgotten that they were then "purged from their old sins," and have become lukewarm? Let each one seriously read what "the faithful and true witness" says to the Laodiceans in Rev. iii. 14-22; and it applies to all of the same class even now; and before it be too late, hearken to his counsel, and buy of him the true riches, and the white raiment of righteousness, and the eyesalve of truth.

Whether there are two books of life—one for those under the law, and one for those under Christ—I leave for the reader to decide, after quoting a few more texts bearing upon the subject. I incline to the opinion that there are two, though I know of no one who holds that view. The word of God will hold its place, however, in all dispensations, as the basis of all law, and therefore of judgment. "For as many as sinned without law shall also perish without law; and as many as sinned under law shall be judged by law." Rom. ii. 12. There were always some that served God in all dispensations. Even in Israel's darkest days of idolatry, there were found seven thousand men who had not bowed the knee to Baal. And about one hundred years after the return from Babylon, we read that there was a general departure from the law of the Lord, in which both priests and people were involved, yet there were some who feared the Lord. It is written in Mal. iii. 16-18, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Then the line of separation will be plainly marked, so that all may discern between those who serve God and those who serve him not. That day here spoken of will be a day of judgment for wicked persons, but of reward for the righteous, or those who fear the Lord. See chap. iii. 5; iv. 1-3. A reference to Dan. xii. 1-3 will confirm this. Daniel was informed that a terrible time of trouble will come upon his nation at "the time of the end;" "but at that time thy people (Israel) shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." Jer. xxx. 7. This deliverance will be for those who fear the Lord—those found in his book of remembrance—"for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord has said, and for the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Joel ii. 32. This salvation is for the living remnant of Israel, when they are surrounded with armies, and escape seems impossible; then the Lord will fight for them, and conquer all their enemies. Zech. xiv. 1-3. But at that time the dead also will be remembered. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Undoubtedly these will be Daniel's people, among whom he will stand in his lot at the end of the days. This is "the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust;" which the Pharisees believed in, Acts xxiii. 6-8; xxiv. 15; and to which our Savior probably had special reference in John v. 28, 29, when all in the tombs—places of remembrance—"shall hear his voice and come forth," the doers of good to everlasting life, and the doers of evil to judgment.

The Psalmist says that "the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance," Psa. cxii. 6; and in view of Jehovah's promises to the fathers, and the time of their fulfilment, he declares that the Lord "has remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel; all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God." xcviii. 3. And Mary, the mother of Jesus, rejoicing at the high honor conferred upon her, said, "He helps Israel, his own child, in remembrance of his mercy; as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed forever." Luke i. 54, 55. And in the same connection, and under the influence of the prophetic spirit, the priest Zacharias, blessed the Lord God of Israel, for the prospect of the fulfilment of the mercy promised to the fathers, and for remembering his holy covenant—the oath to Abraham—by raising up "an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David," as revealed by his holy prophets during the age. Verses 67-75. Jehovah never forgets his promises to the fathers; and though Israel has sinned grievously in forgetting the Lord their God, yet mercy and forgiveness is promised them, when the Redeemer shall come to Zion. "Blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in," but it will be remembered when they recognize Jesus of Nazareth as their Messiah, and their sins are taken away. "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes." Rom. xi. 25-29. Peter offered them salvation in the name of Jesus; even the blotting out of their sins, when the times of refreshing, and times of restitution will be inaugurated by the coming and presence of the Lord. Acts ii. 38; iii. 19-21. Only a small portion of the nation, however, accepted the proffered mercy; but to as many as received Jesus as their Messiah, the privilege was given to become sons of God, by being baptized into his name. John i. 12; Gal. iii. 26-29. Those being called first by the gospel, with those from among the Gentiles, constitutes "the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb." Then after the return of the Lord to Zion with mercies, the residue or remnant of Israel who seek him, shall find him: Jer. xxix. 13, 14; Isa. lv. 6, 7; and the Lord will forgive them. "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins," Isa. xliv. 25; xliv. 22; Ezek. xxxvi. 21. 22, 31-38. Then Jehovah says of them, "they shall be my people, and I will be their God; for they shall return unto me with their whole heart;" and "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more." Jer. xxiv. 7; xxi. 34. This is the time foretold by Moses when the Lord "will be merciful to his land, and to his people," Deut. xxxii. 43; and also spoken of by the Psalmist, when the Lord "shall arise, and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come." "Lord, thou hast been favorable unto thy land; thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, thou hast covered all their sin," Psa. cii. 13-16; lxxxv. 1, 2. "Speak comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare (appointed time) is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she has received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. xl. 2.

The aforesaid testimonies positively refer to the natural posterity of the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and to a time "when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughter of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the land excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem," Isa. iv. 4, 2, 3; Joel iii. 17, 21. Yes, Zion and Jerusalem will be holy. The Lord will be there—his throne will be there—and the law for the government of the nations will go forth from Zion. The land will be cleansed from its present filthy abominations, and none but the righteous inherit it. There also the literal and symbolic trees and waters of life will be found, Ezek. xlvii. 1-12; Rev. xxii. 1-3. "For there the Lord has commanded his blessing, even life for evermore." Psa. cxxxiii. 3. We may rest assured that none will be forgotten whose names are written in God's book of remembrance, or in the Lamb's book of life; nor even will their names be blotted out, if found worthy, for the Lord knoweth his own.

B. WILSON.

Help a Little.

Some people think, that because they cannot give as they would like or, perhaps as much as some one else gives toward helping spread the gospel, they will not give anything. Now, for the benefit of those that feel this way about helping in the Master's cause, I will tell you about a plan that a few faithful ones adopted, and how well they succeeded. They were not blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, in fact, most of them had to work by the day wherever they could find employment, to support their families. Yet, they felt that it was their duty to do what they could for the advancement of the truth, so they concluded to adopt the system that Paul ordered the Corinthian brethren and those of Galatia to follow: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as the Lord has prospered him." 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2. This system of giving they followed as they met each Sunday for Bible reading. Their offerings were handed in, what ever they could willingly give. Time passed on until six months had elapsed since they had begun this work, and there was $15.00 in the treasury. This had been given little by little, just as they could spare the means, and as one brother has since told me, they always had a few pennies to give. There were only six or seven in this little band, yet by their united effort they could help push the old ship of Zion along.

I have been thinking if every organization of believers, would adopt a similar system, the Lord's treasury would not be empty, there would be means on hand to answer every call. Evangelists could be kept busy, and there would be no calls for money to send the news to those perishing for the bread of life, that would remain unanswered. An abundance of papers and tracts could be scattered, and oh, so much good could be done if every brother and sister would lend a helping hand. It is not the large amounts given but the united effort that counts. Every one should feel a deep responsibility in this matter, and be the amount given ever so small, send it in, it helps that much, and you will be blessed because you have done what you could, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and he is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye always having all sufficiency may abound to every good work.

"Brother, for Christ's kingdom sighing;
Help a little, help a little.
Help to save the millions dying,
Help just a little.

Is thy cup made sad by trial,
Help a little, help a little.
Sweeten it with self denial,
Help just a little.

Oh, the wrongs that we may righten!
Oh, the homes that we may brighten!
Oh, the hearts that we may lighten
By helping just a little.

LYDIA CHAPLIN.

JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah was chosen a prophet by the Lord prior to his birth. By this choice it is evident that God foreknew the future character, the mental and moral qualification, and fitness every way, required to fill the important and responsible office of prophet to the nations. Heredity, and prenatal influences were, no doubt, taken into God's estimate of this man. The times were evil, and on this account it was necessary that the choice should be of a man possessed of great moral courage and indomnitable energy, one who would deliver the unwelcome message of evil without regard to fear or favor. Jeremiah was the man for the times, to tell to the face of Judah her sins and to pronounce the impending judgments for her transgressions. His rebukes and his prophecies of evil got him into trouble at the hands of his own countrymen. He was accused of lying, was smitten and put in the stocks; and afterward in the dungeon where he sunk in the mire; from this he was delivered, and finally was forced against his own will to accompany the disobedient remnant of Judah into Egypt, (Jer. xliii.) to Tahpanhes where he hid great stones in the clay in the brick kiln, at the entry of Pharaoh's house, which stones were to become, in a short time, the throne seat of the king of Babylon, who as God's servant to punish the fleeing remnant, spread his royal pavilion above them. In the land of the Pharaoh's the persecuted and maligned prophet wrote, as is generally believed that saddest of all books, The Lamentations, bedewed with his tears and inspired by his sorrow. It is also universally believed, that he died here. But of this there is no proof. The threatened punishments of sword and famine was not to overtake him. Pharaoh was his friend. God had also promise to deliver him, and his life should be for a prey unto him because he trusted in the Lord. Jer. xxxix. 18.

THE PROPHET'S COMMISSION.

See I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build and to plant. Jer. i. 10. The nations against whom Jeremiah was to pronounce God's judgments are named in the 25th chap. Judah with her cities was to drink of the cup of the Lord's fury, and become a desolation. The first part of the commission, namely: To root out and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, was accomplished so far as it could be accomplished by the prophet when he delivered his last message to the rebellious remnant who had sought refuge in Egypt from the Babylonian king.

At this point in history, an era of confusion in Egypt by rebellion within, and the conquest of Nebuchadnezzar without, Jeremiah with his royal remnant, and his little retinue of faithful ones under the guardian care and direction of Jehovah disappeared alike from the sacred pages, and from the East. He passed seemingly into silence. He is not mentioned in connection with the last section of captives carried by Nebuchadnezzar back to Babylon. Neither he nor his royal wards Zedekiah's daughters, nor his faithful attendants were to perish by the sword, nor by pestilence. Jeremiah and his wards were preserved in view of fulfilling the divine purpose. Up to the date of their disappearance the second—the better part—of the prophet's commission to plant and to build had not materialized. He must superintend this work or the Word of God will fail. Somewhere he must plant and build.

PETRIE'S DISCOVERY.

There are two termini to the thread of this history of the prophet, an Eastern and a Western one. At the Eastern end Petrie made his important discovery which at the time attracted the attention of the civilized world. This discovery was published in THE RESTITUTION as many of its readers, no doubt, remember. Petrie himself wrote concerning Tahpanhes: "The first evening that I arrived there I heard to my surprise that it was known as the "Kasr el Bint el Yehudi" or the "Palace of the Jew's Daughter." He says he had only the Karian Camp in mind. But he was on the very spot where Jeremiah buried the great stones in the brick kiln which was before Pharaoh's house. These he unearthed and identified. He discovered coins and pottery which has enabled antiquarians to fix the date of the destruction of the palace whose ruins Mr. Petrie discovered, as the time in which the prophet with his royal wards dwelt there under the protection of Haphra's Greek frontier garrison.

Turning to the West our attention is directed to Tara in Ireland as the spot where we may look for future (the near future) discoveries that will arouse the Christian student of prophecy and confirm the faith of the few Saxons who acknowledge their identity with the ten tribes of Israel. Tara is a mound reputed in traditions almost as old as those of Tanis to cover the palace and remains of her who is known in the west as "Pharaoh's daughter." I now ask the question: Was it not here in Ireland that Jeremiah planted and builded? Jeremiah's tomb is on the isle of Davenish. Tara will be opened by the spade of the archeologist in the near future. The Saxons are not quite ready for so important an undertaking and God's time for this not quite here. What a marvelous time are these closing days of this dispensation.

[illegible]ORIAL STAFF:

[illegible], Corresponding Editor.
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 26, 1894.

The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

BROTHER Joblin's article that is to finish the discussion between him and Brother Jones came too late to be put in type for this issue, but will appear in our next.

THE articles by Brother B. Wilson, that have appeared in late issues of our paper will repay you for a careful reading. Do not think them long, but read the first column, and you will gladly follow on to the end. We hope he will be able to give us others.

IT often happens that a brother in a certain locality thinks he could do much good if only each member of the Household of Faith would contribute a very small amount. The many littles would aggregate much. He feels after having made the appeal and receiving little or no reply, that therefore all are cold and indifferent, doing nothing, are slothful servants, caring nothing for the work of spreading the truth: are wholly selfish. This may be, and in many cases is, a wrong conclusion. The very brethren who are condemned may be doing in secret the very work they should do with their means. Because they do not see best to devote money to the scheme outlined may be for reason that in their judgment it better be used elsewhere, and where they can handle it themselves. Just because some use tobacco and drink whiskey instead of spending that money in the Lord's cause, is no good reason for condemning the whole body of believers.

THE late daily papers seem to think a very great change has taken place in the European situation. About the beginning of the year Russia appeared to have practically united with France as against the Triple Alliance, and there was great rejoicing at the French capital. Later comes the commercial treaty between Russia and Germany and now the announcement of the betrothal of the Grand Duke Nicholas, Czarowitz of Russia, to the Princess Alix of Hesse, which is looked upon as cementing the union of interest between Russia and Germany. The cry of European peace and disarmament is loud, but the student of prophecy will not be disturbed by this, for he knows that when "Peace and safety" is on the lips of all, then sudden destruction comes upon them. The following extracts from the Chicago Tribune of April 22, will give an idea of the new outlook.

LONDON, April 21.—For weeks it has been apparent that something was maturing itself beneath the surface commotion of hurried royal visits and an exceptional activity of royal letter carriers. This something stands open to view, and admittedly it is very big indeed. What has happened is nothing more or less than a complete change in the European situation.

France has been beaten as thoroughly and mercilessly in the diplomatic campaign of 1894 as it was routed on the martial field of 1870. Of all it seemed last January to have gained not a vestige remains of it. When the Russian Ambassador appears in state at Notre Dame tomorrow to assist at the great celebration in honor of Joan of Arc his presence must appear to intelligent Parisians in the light of grim, sardonic irony. His master, the Czar, has sold the republic out.

Germany's initial victory in securing a broad commercial treaty with Russia just at the time when the egregious demagogues of the French Chamber were raising the duty on Russian wheat to the point of prohibition has been fully discussed in these columns. If that may be likened to the battle of Worth, this new thing is a veritable Sedan. It is easy, usually, to exaggerate the importance of royal matrimonial alliances; not so in the present case, because in the final gathering-in of the Czarowitz by the Coburg connubial octopus comes a crushing defeat of the whole Franco-Panslavic combination.

The deadly isolation which this involves for France is nothing short of tragic. It climbs laboriously, tirelessly up, time after time, toward the position of power in the European councils, only, like Bruce's spider, to tumble just before the goal is attained. This latest disappointment is by far the worst it has yet had, if only because a few months ago it was rapturously celebrating what it believed to be its ultimate success. What it will do next its wisest sons do not pretend to say.

The coming three weeks of Joan of Arc, which the government is spurring [illegible] others to attend in uniform, has been looked forward to for a great popular impetus, half religious, half patriotic, which would set France on a new footing generally. How much dampening effect Russia's cool desertion and the discovery that the Vatican characteristically is frightened at finding itself in the wrong boat and is also backing out of its flirtation with the republic may exert on this movement remains to be seen.

There are those who believe that during the year France will find itself confronted by a practically unanimous suggestion of the European powers that the time has come for a gradual general disarmament. This has been often alluded to in these dispatches as the thing William is dreaming of. It is clear enough that recent events have cut down some of the obstacles previously in the way, but it is not so evident that the path is even yet anywhere near open. The published story that the heads of the Triple Alliance have asked the Czar to join such a movement, and met with a refusal has no evidence of genuineness behind it, but undoubtedly it reflects the general situation

Earthquakes in Greece

ATHENS, April 22.—The earthquake shocks that began at 7:30 o'clock Friday night continued with more or less frequency until noon today. The deaths reported number 120. All last night the oscillation of the earth was noticeable and the people of this city were in a state of semi-panic.

In three villages, in the province of Locris, 120 persons were killed. The Mayor of Larymni telegraphs that a heavy shock occurred at Proskina while vesper services were held in the parish church. The walls of the church fell, burying all the worshippers in the ruins. Hardly a person in the church escaped without injury. Thirty were taken out dead. Houses were thrown down in other parts of the village, and the money loss is great. At Malesina houses tottered and fell as though built of cardboard. In this little village sixty persons were killed. At Martino thirty-nine persons were killed. Here, as at Proskina, the parish church was the scene of the greatest number of fatalities.

In the city of Athens the fatalities were less numerous, but the damage to property is immense. [illegible] of the Austrian Lloyd [illegible] steamship companies [illegible] partly destroyed. The church [illegible] St. Elias on Castella Hill between the Piræus and Phalerum has been racked beyond repair and is tottering to its fall. The domes, walls, and mosaics of the famous Byzantine Church of Daphne are very seriously injured.

The total number of deaths thus far reported is 160, but there is scarcely any question that this number will be augmented when the more remote villages are heard from.

As this dispatch was being sent from Athens a sharp shock was felt that for a time caused consternation in the telegraph office.

At Thebes about fifty houses fell during one of the shocks. The city is in a state of panic and destitution. The terrified people have rushed in crowds away from Thebes, believing that the end of the world had come.

Sow seed. Send THE RESTITUTION to some one who is a stranger to God's truths, and perhaps from this may grow a desire on their part to accept them.

Editor Restitution:

It is with much pleasure that I write these few lines. It has been about thirty-five years since I first saw the light of the Gospel in its purity, unalloyed with creeds and dogmas, and today the blessed hope and promises come up before me, and with faith in God's blessed Word that he will reward each and every one that strives to do his will. Surely the Lord will soon come. Then as Peter says, What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness. We are still waiting and striving to enter that rest. Husband and I started in the race. What our life has been God only knows, but as we near the end our faith grows brighter and brighter and by the help of God we determined to strive on to the end, and we can say with Paul we reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

I send $1.50 for THE RESTITUTION for 1894. We cannot do without the paper, for it's all the preacher we have. These love feast letters are both meat and drink for us. My daily prayer is that I may be trusting and waiting with my lamp trimmed and burning when Jesus comes. Yours waiting for the kingdom.

MRS. MARTHA HOUSE.

Dear Restitution:

Yesterday, the question was asked in my Bible Class: Why did God so love the world, (John iii. 16.) of sinful humanity? The answer given was, because he saw clearly the possibility hidden in humanity that he had himself placed there--(To be developed in due time.)

Dear Brothers and Sisters of the Restitution:

I like THE RESTITUTION very much. Many good things are published every week. I have been thinking very much lately of the importance of reading God's Word, not only reading but obeying. The doers of the work are the ones that gain the crown. I am in my sixty-first year, and have a great deal of trouble and affliction. I am a cripple in my right arm. I am not prepared at present to renew, but as soon as possible I will send you your money. Thanking you very much for sending me and my daughter Jane Nutter the grand and good paper. It has been my preacher for over twenty years, and I would hate to do without it, and will not if I can help it. My dear sister Margaret Haynes always gave me her paper, and I have always distributed them to my friends and neighbors. It does me good to give them to the needy for truth. She was buried yesterday. My heart aches to have to part with such a dear lovely sister, but still I do not mourn without hope. Blessed are they that die in the Lord. Death, the last enemy, will soon be destroyed, and the Sun of righteousness will arise with healing in his wings, and the glory and the knowledge of God shall spread over the earth, and the kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens shall be given to the saints and people of the Most High, whose dominion is from the rivers to the end of the earth. The government shall be upon his shoulder, and of the peace and increase of his kingdom there shall be no end. I feel to pray and look for the near coming Bridegroom. Then his bride, the church, the Lamb's wife, will go out to meet him whose maker is her husband. Greet him with joy, and they sang as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts and the elders, and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth, having the harp of God, and all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are written in the book of life. Make note of this, remembering time and place.

LUCINDA VIERS.

Editor Restitution:

If it will meet with acceptance, I would like to say a few words through THE RESTITUTION, in answer to some inquiries from Sister Wines, and Sister Nancy Barber, and others.

1. We are doing all we can to spread the truth in Florida. The opposition is great, and travel is expensive, but, notwithstanding the disadvantages, 25 have embraced the truth since we began preaching the last of November.

Relative to the brethren responding to a letter written in THE RESTITUTION, I can say that one from Mass., enclosed $1.00, with no name attached. Sister Wines sent $2.50, and Sister Nancy Barber, $1.50, making in all, $8.00. We have used these to the best of our ability in buying things for wife and little ones, and used our time all we could to tell the news of the kingdom. I now realize something of pioneer life, although we have the R. R. advantages and it is good we have for I could not go any distance in Florida for I am lost most of the time in these wonderful pine forests. I have gone many a day without my meals, hotel fare is so high here, and Bro. Wagoner could tell you how the denominations hate the truth. O, it is so discouraging to see an open door, and no means to tell the truth with! I sometimes do not wonder that people who had a missionary spirit speak against us. "We know not what we do." There are thousands of dollars wasted in extravagant living. Tobacco and whiskey are used by people who pretend to believe the truth, that ought to be spent in sending the truth to some poor wanderer searching for the light. I know whereof I speak. If I had the money expended for tobacco, I could sow the seeds of truth broadcast, and in the harvest we could "rejoice together bringing the sheaves with us." But no, men will consume these means with their own lusts, and you talk with them and they are bound to be kings and priests unto God, and of Christ, and to reign with him a thousand years. I read in my Bible "That God is not mocked. Whatever a man soweth, that shall he reap. He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." That individual who thinks he shall have a great reward for not doing the will of our Father which is in heaven will be deceived.

I will say in conclusion, that I am grateful for the amount acknowledged in this article. I received it as from the Lord, believing that thus it was given, and pray that our dear Lord who is good to us may abundantly bless them, and keep them ever in the love of the truth.

I have just received a call to come to Manistee. There are two or three who believe the truth, and readers of THE RESTITUTION. I expect to go as soon as I can arrange. Manatee is nearly 300 miles south of here.

Your brother in the work.

N. H. GEISELMAN.

Dear brothers and sisters:

Brother Geiselman in Florida, some time ago wrote the dear RESTITUTION of the great need of spreading the good news of the soon coming King in Florida, and asking the brethren to help. In a letter bearing date April 12, he says:—"If the brethren could see what I have seen, and know how the truth is abused here they would help spread the truth in Florida. 25 have embraced the truth since Nov. 30. I fear at this writing that I will have to stop the work for want of support. It is sad when we know the kingdom is so near. My prayer to our Heavenly Father is, that the love of the truth may prompt some who have an abundance, to give something for the truth in Florida.'

I have taken the liberty to quote from Bro. Geiselman's private letter. $8.00 is all he received, and that from a few sisters.

Dear brothers and sisters can we not make one more effort to help where help is needed. Let us all just make some little sacrifice for the good news of the kingdom. If all who have written such comforting letters for the paper will begin at once to make some little sacrifice for this call (only a little luxury now and then, soon amounts to dollars, and a little denial saves the same) many more may be led to rejoice in the soon coming King. Dear brothers and sisters are you thankful that that glorious gospel reached your ears, are we rejoicing in the hope of the soon coming King? Then let us proclaim the good news. Yes, we love the truth, we long for strength and courage to endure to the end. Then what joy will be ours. When all the sorrow will be gone, all tears will be wiped from our eyes when the King of kings will own and crown us. May it be ours to help others to rejoice in this blessed hope. Let all that look for, hasten that coming day by earnest consecration to walk the narrow way by gathering in the lost ones for whom our Lord died. For the crowning day that's coming bye and bye.

How the time flies from us. Many of us mean to heed calls, but being occupied, before we are aware of it the golden opportunity slips from us. May we strive to be diligent and finally be crowned in that glorious kingdom so soon to come.

If any wish to help Brother Geiselman in his work in Florida, send money to Thomas Dowling, Live Oak, Florida.

Your sister in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

NANCY BARBER.

Dear ones in Christ:

THE RESTITUTION is like the ark of Noah. It takes along in one grand family the desires, the faith, the hope of the Covenant God gave to Abraham, which we can become heir to by obeying. When I read the names in the paper I feel like shouting "Glory to God" for the same hope expressed by all, and I feel like reaching out to shake hands with them, being strangers in the flesh, but acquainted in the Spirit.

Your brother, looking for the soon coming of the King.

AMOS EATON.

Dear Restitution:

Your weekly visits are appreciated more and more. Yes, more than we can express. We have greatly enjoyed the numerous testimonials in the "Love Feast." Such open confessions always bring a blessing, not only to you, but to us also. The truth, faith and doctrine embraced is no less than that of the Bible, which is the Word of our Father in heaven to a world of dying mankind—yes, dying for the decree went forth in the beginning as the curse of disobedience: Dying thou shalt die. Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. The wages of sin is death, and the soul that sinneth it shall die, etc., etc. With such plain Bible statements as these, is it not very strange that the people, both professors of Christianity and heathendom should hold to the belief of the immortality of the soul. Gen. ii. 17 is too plain to be misunderstood and it seems to us that Gen. iii. 4 is also just as plain as can be, but right here there must be a decision as to the truth. Now, if we will read the 24th verse we will find that God would not allow, and did prevent man from becoming an immortal being, for he was deprived of the tree of life, is yet and will be until the times of the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. So says Peter in Acts iii. 19-21. Oh no! we have no immortality of soul, no more than we have immortality of body. We are poor dying mortals, totally dependent upon our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for life and immortality. 'Tis true that Jesus brought life and immortality to light, but did he bestow it? Oh no! but he will when he comes again, for it is then that he will raise the dead, and change his living saints to immortal life. Oh yes, he has opened up the way and made it possible for us by faith and obedience to obtain future life, but we can not expect it and the crown under any more favorable circumstances than Paul did. We must be at heart just what he was, and under the same circumstances we must endure the same. Oh yes, life and death, to live or not to live in the future is an awful reality with all who have had the light. It is through faith in the promises of God, and obedience to his will that we may become his sons and daughters in this life. That is we have the right in anticipation to the things promised. To such our Lord has sent the Holy Ghost to bear witness with our spirits that we please him, and to lead us into all truth as we journey on day by day. Though the present life is nothing more or less than a wilderness of sin and sorrow, trials and temptations, beset on all sides by pit falls, snares and wilds of the devil—Oh yes, the promise of eternal life is to the overcomers only—the wicked shall be utterly destroyed. So we read Mal. 4th chapter, etc. We love to read, write and meditate on our new home, the renewed earth, the new heaven, the new Kingdom of God prophesied by all the prophets, and Jesus, and the apostles all tell us of this kingdom of righteousness to come, and also tells us to watch and rejoice at his appearing. Oh yes, this is the old, old story that has gladdened the hearts of all God's sons and daughters from faithful Abraham until now and will do so. Since 17th last June when Bro. Joblin came down and immersed us into the all-saving name, we have had a claim to be of the household of faith, waiting and watching for the return of our Lord, and he has promised that that day, his 2nd coming, shall not come upon us unawares as it will come upon the world. For as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be at his coming. Now Paul tells us that in these last days perilous times shall come. Read 2 Timothy 3 and 4 chapters. What means all this world wide confusion today? Such gigantic standing armies with the most formidable weapons of war the world has ever known. What do the nations want with so many war ships? What is meant by our country being full to overflowing with grain and provisions, and thousands and thousands of our own people without food and running to and fro begging for work? What means the persecution of the Jews and their flocking back to Palestine, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem on its former site? What means all this trouble between capital and labor? etc., etc. These things must be the signs of his coming, the end of this Gentile age, when the kingdoms of this world or age shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and Jesus Christ. When ye see these things come to pass, know ye the end is nigh. Rejoice and be exceeding glad for your redemption draweth nigh. Oh yes, if we could fully appreciate it; we are living in a grand and awful time. A time that has been looked forward to for ages past, the second advent, the hope of the world, both of the living and of the dead. Now, dear RESTITUTION, we will not only be patrons in the future, but we will also contribute to the support and spread of the truth as we find we are able.

You may book us for ten dollars for this year, possibly more, to be used as you may think best, and may the Lord bless you in your efforts in turning the people from their foolishness into the glorious light of the gospel—the gospel that Jesus and the apostles preached and believed, for there is but one Bible gospel, and the belief of this gospel places our feet firmly on the promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David, and they cannot fail or be broken. They are the river of life whose fountain head is the garden of Eden, and on and on will it flow until at last it empties itself in the promised land, its destination—the great ocean of eternity, eternal life. Oh yes, this the faith and hope of the Bible, which Paul exhorts us to earnestly contend for, and he knew what it was to contend for it. Yet he had peace and joy in believing and teaching it, for he knew in whom he trusted and therefore he was bold and courageous, knowing that he would receive a crown of righteousness at that day, and also all others who love Jesus' approaching and kingdom. Oh yes, hope looks out through the eyes of faith and grasps and clings to the promises and in this present life is continually rejoicing in hope of the high calling in Christ Jesus at his coming. Oh yes, it is a high calling to be a joint heir with Christ in reigning and ruling over the nations and filling the earth with the knowledge of God and his glory. Oh, glorious hope of immortality, eternal life in the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, Christ's everlasting kingdom, where peace and harmony shall have no end. Oh yes, old things will soon pass away. Behold, says the Lord God, I create a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. Then the Lion and the Lamb shall lie down together, they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord. There will be no more sickness, sorrow, hunger, and nakedness; no more oppression of the poor, no more tears, pain or death. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. The redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads. They shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. Isaiah li. 11. Bless the Lord, oh my soul, and all that is in me bless his holy name.

R. Y. and M. A. FRETWELL.

Dear Brother Underwood,

Please say through the paper, that I will visit Argos, Ind., again the third Sunday in May, meeting to begin on Saturday night before.

J. S. HATCH.

Dear Restitution:

We could not think of doing without our paper as there are so many good letters from brothers and sisters to cheer and comfort us. The letters from the Sisters Cummins in Minnesota, how they cheered my heart to hear from them, and to hear that they are still striving for the kingdom. I read and re-read them. I wish they could share with us in our preaching, as Bro. A. J. Eychaner preaches to us part of the time, which we appreciate very much. We have a good little Sunday-school, and are trying to work for the Master as best we can, so we may be ready when he comes.

Yours looking for the Master.

SARAH CLARK.

Bro. Underwood:

I have deferred sending my subscription in the hope that it might seem reasonable to send more than the mere charge for the paper, but the outlook financially is no more encouraging and I will leave further contributions for the future.

This county and the remuneration for my work are small, and the latter slow to come in unless we sell orders at a discount, which I mean to avoid. There is considerable time for outside work, but little such is to be found.

I am satisfied that Bro. H. T. Baker is right, as expressed in a late issue of THE RESTITUTION, that there is most urgent need for continuous work and liberal giving for the same. We are alone here in the faith, though several others accept the truth theoretically. Our work for the cause is mostly private, though the Bible Class in the Union Sunday School, of which I am teacher, studies faithfully and gathers here and there a little.

It might sometime be possible that I could be of use to brethren and sisters, and possibly inquirers, not too distant, and if the occasion should offer I should be pleased to do all in my power. If you wish you may give my address in your list.

Yours fraternally.

J. G. HAUPT.

The Flesh and Blood of the Son of Man.

"Then Jesus said unto them, verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." John vi. 53.

The record of the controversy between our Lord and the Jews, which culminated in this declaration, begins in the fifth chapter and sixteenth verse. It was purely a contest waged by truth and righteousness against ignorance, the true parent of unbelief and sturdy religious zeal. Darkness and light can mingle and produce twilight; but this is not pure true light, and there are no means of expelling even such darkness as this but by the great luminary of day. Religious zeal spreads a pavilion of darkness over men's minds that acts like a thick cloud which hides the sun. Righteousness and truth always invade the domain of religious zeal and darkness. "Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God." Verse eighteen. Ignorance and religious zeal here assumed that Jesus had outraged the sanctity of Divine authority, and set up a claim which was monstrous for its impiety; and the forfeit of his life was the only adequate measure of justice. Alas, how exorbitant, how swift to shed blood, how hard to pacify is "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." This has been the world's incarnate fiend, the world's devil, embodied in human form and flesh and blood, killing the good and the true, setting on high the false and wicked, for God and religion. In vain is the plea of innocence united to truth and reason. Religious zeal has a reprobate mind, and has no reason and no judgment concerning the truth. The crucifixion of Christ, the sufferings of the Apostles and their violent death at last, the cruel mockings and tortures and death of an immense host of martyrs for the same cause, the scorn and contempt of religious arrogance of our own times, shown toward any suggested possibility of errors in the faith and religious opinions of any of the great denominations on the part of their members, are the works of this evil agent in the flesh.

But the truth must war, must reason, must assert; must point to evidence. It never was commissioned to lie inert and dormant. Jesus stated his connection with the Father, and also that he was empowered to work by the Father, and to do greater works than these, even to the extent of raising the dead and giving them life out of their graves. Next he appeals to the testimony of John who had borne witness to him; then to the works he did; then also to the witness that the Father had borne by a voice from heaven; and lastly to the Scriptures; "search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Religious zeal combined with ignorance, thinks, nay, is sure that its subject has a title, an indisputable warrantee of heaven, and consequently of eternal life laid down in the Scriptures. The Scriptures contained the record of God's promise to Abraham and his seed. "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, etc. And I will give unto thee, and thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." Gen. xvii. 7, 8. Such a promise founded in the truth of God, to Abraham and his seed, implied as strongly as language could make an implication, the eternal life of Abraham and his seed. For how could Abraham and his seed, all of whom were merely mortal and doomed to die, receive at any future time all the land of Canaan whereon he dwelt a stranger, for an everlasting possession, unless at some future time he and his seed were made to live again eternally, and be put into possession, according to the true import of the promise, of the pledged inheritance? It was therefore correctly settled, that as God had promised to give Abraham and his seed after him, the land where the stranger in his lifetime dwelt, but gave him no inheritance in it, not even so much as to set his foot on, (Acts vii. 2), a time must come when Abraham and his seed would live again, and on the land where he had formerly dwelt, and receive the promised possession everlastingly. This was the idea of eternal life, as taught by the Scriptures. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." The raising up the dead and quickening them, is the eternal life of the Bible.

The Jews claimed their descent from Abraham, and therefore claimed also that eternal life was theirs by God's promise to Abraham and to his seed, of the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession. But there was a fatal defect in their title Not because they interpreted the promise erroneously; but their error was in regard to the seed of Abraham specified in the promise. There is no true hope or expectation of eternal life for any man living, or any of the dead, except in the fulfilment of the promise to Abraham and his seed of the everlasting possession of the land of Canaan. "And now I stand and am judged," said Paul, "for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." Acts xxvi. 6, 7. Here is the whole matter of the hope of the eternal life, clearly expressed by one authorized to speak with certainty. Here were two parties hoping in the promise of God to Abraham and his seed of the land for an everlasting possession. One party interpreting the promise correctly, and understanding equally correct who were the seed to whom the great and glorious promise was made. The other party also understanding the promise correctly, and hoping to come to its fulfilment. For in this promise recorded in their Scriptures they thought they had eternal life. Wherein then was the difference between the Christians represented by Paul, and the Jews of the twelve tribes, since both parties hoped in the same promise for eternal life at its fulfillment? It was in this, that Paul and his fellow Christians had searched the Scriptures to a far better purpose, and attained a correct knowledge of the import of the word "seed" in the promise. Paul expressed the result of his search thus: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many, but of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. Here then, were the Scriptures in which the Jews thought they had eternal life, and they were they which testified of Christ. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 29. Heirs both of the inheritance and eternal life. Believers, who are constituted the seed by being in Christ, are the only heirs to the promised inheritance of the land, whereon Abraham dwelt, for an everlasting possession with eternal life. The Jews' hope of coming to the promise because they were Abraham's natural seed or descendants, was a false and preposterous hope, founded on the promise which testified of Christ, ignorantly applied to themselves. "Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children.... That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Rom. ix. 7, 8. Children by adoption through Christ the one seed to whom the promise was made, are counted for the seed who will inherit the land, and these only. This is the only possible way to eternal life for men. How futile was the hope of the Jews in the promise for life? How mistaken their interested and selfish interpretation and application of the promise to the seed of Abraham to the exclusion of Christ, to whom with Abraham the promise was made? All their searchings of the Scriptures had failed to discover to them the testimony which the promise bore to Christ. They thought that in the promise they held a charter of eternal life. Total mistake—serving God day and night in hope of coming to the promise without him to whom the promise testified. But equally fatal is the mistake of those who hope, not like Paul, in the same promise, but exclude the promise entirely from their faith and hope. The Jews ruled Christ out of the promise, and did not receive its testimony to him. And these as effectually rule him out of the promise in their professed faith and hope, by denying the true import of the promise, or wholly overlooking the promise as a matter of no consequence. The Jew held the promise firmly, but saw no testimony of Christ in it. The modern Protestant professes to hold Christ firmly in his faith, and deduces no hope in him from the promise made to the fathers of the Jews—to Abraham and his seed, of the heirship of the land whereon he dwelt as a stranger. Was Paul laboring under a hallucination when he declared it was for the hope of the promise to the Jewish fathers, that the Jews were holding to and hoping to come to, that he stood to be judged before a court of civil authority, and bore the accusations of the Jews?

We do not know what Christ would say to the modern Protestant were he here to speak; but he sent the Jews to search more thoroughly the Scriptures where they thought they had eternal life, in which a testimony was to be found of him; and we think he would send the moderns to the Scriptures where they think they have eternal life, to learn what they testify of the promises to Abraham and his seed, in which is the true charter and correct hope only of eternal life. To the Jews who grasped and held fast the promise but excluded him and his agency in its administration at the future fulfilment, he set himself forth thus: "I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me,....and this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." But the idea that he was bread which came down from heaven was too distasteful. "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?" That he was a man and had a mother and belonged to a family they knew. It was not necessary that they should believe that he had descended bodily from heaven. But if people are determined to construe the sayings of Jesus literally, they can believe on him no better than the Jews could, and not better than they did. The idea of his literal body must be excluded; for it was not the bread that came down from heaven. One might as well assert that Mary came down from heaven. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." John i. 6. "The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or from men? and they reasoned, "if we shall say, from heaven, he will say unto us, why did ye not then believe on him." Matt. xxi. 25. These passages show that John was sent from God, or from heaven, and that his work and office were from heaven, not from man. And so also, all that made Jesus the Son of God, the bread of God, the bread of life which came down from heaven; all that constituted him the Savior of men came from God, came down from heaven. He that denies this, and asserts that the body of Jesus came down from heaven, "denies that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh," as some did in the Apostles' days, and all such are false prophets. 1 John iv. 1-3.

The Word, the holy intelligence and Divine power, which was in the beginning with God, and was God—this Word had life, and the light capable of illuminating men, and which shone in the darkness of Judea, but was not comprehended or understood. The Word having begotten the flesh of Jesus by its divine agency, assumed to dwell in that form of flesh of the man Christ Jesus, and in this sense was made flesh and dwelt among the Jews, and some were permitted to behold his glory—the glory that clothed the man, the only begotten of God, who was filled with grace and truth. John i. 1-5, 14. Such was he, who it must be remembered "was of the seed of David according to the flesh." 2 Tim. ii. 8.

Our Lord continuing in the same style of speaking suggested by the mention of their fathers having eaten manna, called bread from heaven; says, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven;....and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." This produced the excited inquiry: "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" He then added, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Now if "he said just what he meant, and meant just what he said," in so many literally meaning words, as some contend, there was reason for perplexity and confusion. It cannot be doubted that these words were prophetic of his death, in which his flesh and blood must be devoted for an atonement for life. If his flesh and blood were not devoted, there would be no life for any. Such was the Father's arrangement, which became as necessary to the giving of life, and on the part of men to the receiving of life eternal, as natural food is indispensable to the giving and sustaining of natural life from the embryotic inception to the last stage of mortal existence. The intellect, the affections, and sympathies must approve and accept the gift of his flesh and blood, in which "He poured out his soul unto death," his "soul" having been "made an offering" "according to the Scriptures." Isa. liii. 10, 12; 1 Cor. xv. 2.

This is not, it is true, literally eating the flesh, and drinking the blood of Jesus, which cannot be separated into parts, and taken into the stomach for digestion and assimulation; but it fills the declaration; "I am the bread of life, he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." What Jesus meant in this, he meant also in the declaration concerning the eating of his flesh and blood. Not natural hunger and thirst, and not natural eating and drinking of his flesh and blood.

The disciples understood these words no better than the Jews. The words presupposed his death, whether taken literally or otherwise; a fact to be accomplished, which at that time they had not anticipated or understood. To their minds, if his flesh was to be literally eaten, he must be dead, nothing was ever eaten alive. Jesus dead and his flesh eaten, his body thus consumed! This indeed was "a hard saying." But an explanation follows: "doth this offend you? What if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" Or having given his flesh and blood, and entered among the dead; what if you shall see him ascend up again in life where he was before his death? Which did actually happen before they became witnesses of his resurrection. If it was to be so, there could and should be no possibility of his flesh being consumed. Neither would it avail anything towards giving life, if his flesh were to be consumed—eaten. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Not the flesh which profiteth nothing; but in the words, and through the divine Spirit is life. The words of Jesus concerning his flesh and blood, are not to be quoted, as we have heard them, to sustain any theory concerning the Lord's supper: unless we are willing to pervert his words by an egregious misapplication.—Asa W. Bellows, in Herald of the Coming Kingdom, 1870.

Haifa-Damascus Railway.

Soon after the completion of the Jaffa-Jerusalem railroad a regular Kansas real estate boom started in Jerusalem and it is still on. When the Haifa-Damascus railway is completed Damascus will no doubt have its boom, and those who want to get gilt-edge property cheap had better at once open negotiations with Syrian real estate agents. Railroads and real estate booms seem to go hand-in-hand in the Far East as well as in Kansas and the Dakotas.

The Damascus boom will have something of a Chicago tinge to it, as Chicago skill is constructing the new road which, when completed, will reach from Haifa and Akka on the Mediterranean Sea east to Damascus. The English capitalists who are responsible for this stroke of enterprise and conceived the idea of furnishing Damascus a better commercial carrier than the Oriental camel, decided to follow the American idea in construction and gave the contract for building the road to a Chicago firm, Huss, Townsend & Co. Thirty miles of the new line are now constructed and it will not be long until the American iron horse is rushing through the Jordan Valley with trains loaded with Syrian wheat for the seaboard. This railroad, while it seems a great many miles away, will indirectly bring new competitors to American farmers. With the exception, perhaps, of thirty miles the road passes through what might be termed one continuous wheat field. The railroad will no doubt carry modern machinery into this great cereal country and American harvesters and thrashers will take the place of the sickle and the ancient method of thrashing wheat by the tramping process still used in that country.

Damascus is a great commercial center with 275,000 population, and the only vehicle for transportation now is the camel. The great quantities of grain now carried to the seaboard for shipment are handled in this way. At present the annual shipment of wheat from Haifa is about 6,000,000 bushels. Nearly all of this is taken to Austria and France, and while 6,000,000 bushels is small compared with the production in America the railroad will eventually be extended from Damascus to India, which is a real competitor of America in the wheat business.

The road will have a terminus at Akka and one at Haifa. These double termini were one of the stipulations of the Sultan when he granted the concession. Akka is to be used for military purposes and Haifa will be the trading terminus. Construction was commenced at the latter port. Both ports will require improved harbor accommodations as a consequence of the influx of vessels of great tonnage that may reasonably be expected when the railway is in operation. From Haifa, at the foot of Mount Carmel, the road will run through Belled-Es Sheikh, and then on through the plain of Esdrallon. Nazareth being in a pocket up in the hills was too inaccessible to be reached and the survey leaves it out on the north. There will be a station just below called Nazareth, and if the American idea prevails it will probably go down on the time card as South Nazareth. The line will proceed onward through Jezreel, pass the Well of Garod, where Saul fell, and through the Jordan valley. "Over Jordan" will be done on a regular American iron bridge. The track will swing around the shores of the Sea of Galilee and then shoot off into the plain of Hauran, the ancient Bashan. The next town the trainmen will call will be Gamala, then Nishfin, and then Nawa, and then "All out at Damascus." A connecting line is already being talked of from Damascus to India. It will probably run from Damascus to Bagdad, then down the Euphrates Valley, skirt the Persian Gulf and reach India. The completion of such a line will make England and India only eight and a half days apart. It now takes a traveler thirty-eight days to make the journey.

The contracting firm of Huss, Townsend and company is composed of George M. Huss and George Townsend. They have been in business here for years. Mr. Townsend is at present in Syria looking after the work and Mr. Huss left Chicago last evening for Haifa. Mr. Huss is enthusiastic over the project and says the road will be first class in every respect. He thinks it will be a great success from a financial standpoint and will lead to a wonderful development of the country. He said yesterday in speaking of the work that the natives take little interest in the construction and have no conception of the size of the undertaking. Many of them are employed on the work. The women earn 14 cents a day and the men 30 cents and regard their wages as high. Mr. Huss said the equipment of the road would be entirely American, the locomotives are now being constructed in Philadelphia.

The enterprise is backed by English capital, and only last week $3,375,000 of bonds were issued in London. These were under-written by the banks, but the entire issue was taken by the public. This, it is said, shows the faith of the public in the enterprise, as well as improvement in the financial situation. Mr. Pilling, a London capitalist, is the projector of the scheme, and Sir Douglas Fox the chief engineer.

The profits of the line will be obtained through the transportation of the cereals. The Plains of Bashan produce annually, it is stated, over 200,000 tons of cereals, and it is expected the production will be greatly increased by the road. The population of the district through which the road will pass is in the neighborhood of 1,000,000. The company expects to handle between 10,000 and 12,000 carloads of freight a year.

In connection with the road, it is contemplated to arrange a fast steamship line between England and Haifa. This will make Damascus and New York nearly equal distance from London, so far as time of travel is concerned. The distance from Haifa to Damascus by the proposed route is 140 miles. —Chicago Tribune.

Jacob's Epistle. Chap. 3.

1. Become not many teachers, my brothers, knowing that ye will receive a greater verdict;

2. For we all stumble many times. If any one stumble not in word, he is a perfect or (adult) man able to bridle also the whole body.

3. And do we not put the bits in the horses' mouths to make them obey us and lead their whole body subject?

4. Lo, also the ships however large they be, and though driven by hard winds are led subject wherever the impulse of the director willeth by a least rudder.

5. Likewise the tongue is a little member and talketh great things.

6. Lo, the tongue, the Cosmos of the iniquity, a fire that kindleth as much fire as there is fuel. In this wise the tongue is set among our members, that defileth the whole body and setteth on fire the circuit of our generation and is itself set on fire by the geena:

7. For every nature of wild beasts and flying things, of creeping things and things in the sea is accustomed to be tamed and hath been tamed by the human nature,

8. But the tongue no man can tame. It is an unstable evil thing full of death-bearing poison.

9. With it we commend the Lord and Father, and with it we curse men who have come to pass according to God's likening process.

10. From out the same mouth cometh forth commendation and cursing. It is not befitting, my brethren, that these things should occur in this wise.

11. Doth the fountain from the same opening well out the sweet and the bitter?

12. Can a fig-tree, my [illegible] produce olives? or a vine figs? [illegible] neither can a salt-source produce sweet water.

13. Who among you is wise and hath exact knowledge? Let him show forth from his conduct his works (deeds) in meekness of wisdom.

14. But if ye have bitter jealousy and strife in your heart, boast not and lie not against the truth.

15. This is not the wisdom that cometh down from above, but is earthly, natural (of the soul) demonish.

16. For where jealousy and strife are, there also is instability and every faulty thing.

17. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easily persuaded, full of mercy and good fruits, non-partizan, without hypocrisy.

18. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace by those who make peace.

COMMENT.

"Become" instead of "be" R. V.

"Are led subject" instead of "turned about" R. V.

"Talketh great things" instead of "boasteth great things" R. V.

Compare the whole of the 6th verse with Com. Ver. and the R. V.

"By the geena" instead of "by hell" R. V. Hell does not translate the idea contained in the Greek word "Geena."

"Nature" instead of "kind" and "generation" instead of "nature" R. V.

"An unstable evil thing" instead of "A restless evil" R. V.

"Commend" instead of "bless" R. V.

"Who have come to pass according to God's likening process" instead of "Which are made after the likeness of God" R. V. Neither true nor literal as a translation.

"Occur" instead of "be" R. V.

"A salt-source" instead of "salt-water" R. V. That is a salt-well or fountain meant.

"Hath exact-knowledge" instead of "is understanding" R. V. which is neither good English nor does it express the idea in this Greek word. It is their word for our idea of "positive science."

CHAS. GARDNER.

Ashamed of Jesus.

"Be not thou, therefore, ashamed of the testimony of the Lord." 2 Tim. i. 8.

It certainly is a very serious thing to be ashamed of the testimony of the Savior, for he tells us that, "Whosoever is ashamed of me and my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him will the Son of Man be ashamed, when he comes in the glory of the Father, with the holy angels.

In these days of lukewarmness, and unfaithfulness, it is no uncommon sight to see those that once held the truth dear, heaping to themselves teachers having itching ears, turning their ears from the truth unto fables. Popularity has considerable to do with people. Many will go against their better judgment simply for the sake of being on the popular side, but what does the Scripture say concerning those that sin willfully after they have received a knowledge of the truth. "There remaineth therefore no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Heb. x. 26, 27.

"For if after they have escaped the pollutions, of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse than the beginning, for it had been better for them not to have known the way than after they have known it to turn from the Holy Commandment delivered them." 2 Peter ii. 20, 21.

Let us therefore hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. Neither let us be carried about with divers and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace. If we are reproached, and our names cast out as evil, for believing the testimony of the Lord, let us go forth bearing his reproach, and count it a privilege that we may be partakers of his sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed we may be glad with exceeding joy.

LYDIA OBA

SIGNS.

Christ's disciples asked him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" and his answer was, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name saying, 'I am Christ,' and shall deceive many, and ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars, nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famine and pestilence, and earthquakes in divers places. They shall deliver you up to be afflicted and shall kill you, and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake, and many false prophets shall rise and shall deceive many and because of iniquity the love of many shall wax cold; for then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, to this time, no nor never shall be. There shall arise false Christs and false prophets and shall show signs and wonders, if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken." A great many of these signs Christ foretold are passing now before our very eyes. Have not false prophets and false Christs arisen? Do we hear of wars, and nation rising against nation? I say most certainly we do hear of wars and great preparation for war, millions of of armed soldiers throughout the world kept in a drilled condition so that at a moment's warning they are prepared to enter into the most deadly conflict this world has ever known. The whole world is in a great commotion, fearful destruction of life and property by hurricanes, tornadoes and earthquakes, millions of dollars worth of property destroyed and thousands of lives lost, accidents, disasters by land and sea, wholesale murders of a most diabolical kind, famines and pestilences all over the world, and all evils that the human mind can conceive of. We look around us and we see false teachers. Form and superstition fill the earth, and skepticism the fruit of these is every where. "As in the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." How was it in the days of Noah? "They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage." They were thinking of nothing but the enjoyment of their own present time; although Noah warned them, they heeded it not; so is it now; how true a fulfilment. Terrible things are coming upon the earth, yet the majority of mankind heed it not; still words of warning are being sounded out to a perishing world, but as in the days of Noah, men heed it not; the world did not know when God shut the door of the ark; nor did the Jews know when the Lord left the last time saying, "behold your house is left unto you desolate." Peter says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts, and saying. Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning." And Paul speaking of the last days says, "Perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of themselves more than lovers of God, etc., and having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Thousands of the Jews are wending their way back to the land of their forefathers. The Gentile times are waning, and there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity,—the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear of the things that are coming upon the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken, all the tribes of the earth shall mourn when they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Why will the tribes of the earth mourn? Because they will not be ready to receive him when he comes, but those who are looking and praying for his coming their hearts will rejoice with gladness, when we see all these signs coming to pass they bring no terror to the faithful hope, for Christ says, "lift up your head and rejoice for your redemption draweth nigh." When the Son of Man cometh will he find faith on the earth?" Now the spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. This is surely being fulfilled, many are departing from the faith, going back to the world and to their former course of living, they have not root enough in themselves, while others are listening and giving heed to the doctrines of the devil. Surely we are in the last days. As one writer has said, "the inhabitants of the earth must awake some day to find that the day of the Lord is here, and a state will come upon all those who have not understood the warning of Revelation." There will be two classes summoned at that last great day "he will separate them one from another, and he will set the sheep on his right hand and the goats on his left hand. Then shall he say to them on his right hand, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: and to those on his left hand shall he say "depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

O, may you and I, dear reader, be among that blood-washed throng, that shall stand and see the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and hear his welcome voice, "well done thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord."

MRS. C. H. BROOKS.

AMUSEMENTS.

How often we hear this question asked. Is it wrong for Christians to attend dances, theatres and places of amusement? Why is the question so often asked? Let us turn to the Bible for an answer. Let us study the life of Christ. We find it was not self or amusement; his time and thought was all for others. How he could relieve sickness and suffering, how he could save some one, teach the gospel, tell the glad tidings of the kingdom, teach men to understand the Word of God. We see him toiling from city to city, from village to village teaching the humble poor, teaching all who will listen to his blessed words, Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Teaching day after day and far into the night, healing the sick, giving sight to the blind and ever doing something for mankind. This is the life he lived. Ought not Christians to follow so near the blessed Master. Let their life be so near like his life, that there would be no need to ask the question, Is it right to attend amusements? Let each one study to be more like Christ, and do his will that men seeing their good works may glorify God.

So let our lives and lips express
The holy gospel we profess;
So let our works and virtues shine
To prove the doctrine all divine.

Announcement.

The annual conference of the Churches of God in Iowa will be held at Nevada, Story Co. Nevada is on the C & N. W. R. R. 29 miles west of Marshaltown and 8 miles east of Ames. This meeting will last ten days, commencing June 7, 1894, and will be the most important meeting we ever had. The Young Men's educational work, tent work, new hymn book, and other important matters will be considered. Brethren and sisters, we need your presence and counsel. We are living in a time when the cause of Christ demands that every one do his duty. It is true we have attended year after year and helped to carry the burden of work for our Master, but the burden was light and you found rest and peace in toil. But there are some isolated ones to whom this privilege has not come in many years, to you we say come to the meeting. We want to see your faces and hear your voices in our social meetings. As you shall tell us of your faith and hope. Make an extra effort, begin your plans now. It may be the last conference till Jesus comes. Come, spend a week in the tented grove with those of like precious faith. It will rest you, and strengthen you in the Divine life. A full program will be published in due time.

For the Committee,

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like THE RESTITUTION and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say, we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master's vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

☞ It is necessary once more to call attention to the "important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

The through sleeping car to California is now running regularly. Talk to agents of the Nickel Plate Road about it. to n. 25.

Kansas Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised for the purpose of sending an evangelist to isolated brethren that are desirous of having the Gospel proclaimed in their vicinity and are not able financially to bear the expense.

Those wishing to have an evangelist sent to them, can correspond with the Secretary, L. A. Chaplin, Ashton, Kansas. Those wishing to contribute to this fund may send the amount to the Treasurer, W. H. Bernard, Oxford, Kansas.

Previously published,	$185.00
Previously used, for S. C. Oliver, to go to Oklahoma,	$15.00

Rates to California greatly reduced via Pennsylvania Lines. The Midwinter Fair at San Francisco and the numerous other attractions in the wonderland beyond the Rocky Mountains can be enjoyed by persons of limited means as the round trip rate has again been materially reduced via of Pennsylvania Lines. Passengers can select any of the several routes from Chicago and St. Louis and the return limit is ample for a satisfactory sojourn. For details apply to nearest Pennsylvania Line Ticket Agent or address F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent. Pittsburgh, Penn.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution advocates the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Home.*

Coming home! Coming home!
We are almost over the salt sea's foam,
[illegible] in the distance my own sweet land
With its hazy cliffs and its shining strand;
And my heart is bounding with hope and fear,
As the haven of rest and the loved we near.
I have gazed on the treasures of regal Rome,
And on many an ancient palace dome;
I have watched the brilliant sunsets die
From the towering mountains of Italy;
I have been where the deep-veined violets shines
From the frowning steeps of the Appenines;
And the beautiful valleys of Switzerland,
'Neath the glad free glance of my eye hath been.

Oh land of the Jews, fair Palestine!
I have looked on each varied picturesque scene,
And have marked the charm of thy soft blue skies
From the heights where the storied cedars rise;
I have longed to be where the Jordan is,
And Sharon's rose, to the light unfolds,
Where glorious lilies [illegible],
The voice of a king [illegible] ago gone by;
The graves of the Sage and the Prophets are there,
Mid mountains and vales and balmiest air,
But the greatest charm o'er that land is thrown
By the wonderful changes its vales have known,
For there the blest Savior,—the Crucified
On Calvary's cross, bowed his head and died!

I have crossed Sahara's lonely waste,
I have gathered dates with a dusky race;
From the banks of the Nile, I have looked afar
On the wonder of worlds—the Pyramids are;
I have stood by the rivers of Sunny Spain
Where banners have floated above the slain,
Where hills are dark with the shading pine
And myrtle grew, and the clinging vine,
And Citron groves with their perfumed breath
Seem too bright and fair for the touch of death.

I have stood in the shadows of old Auvergne,
I have sailed on the waves of the dark Garonne,
I have roamed o'er Britannia's sea-girt isle
Where tales of Druids and Knights beguile:
I have been where the flowers of the Tropics gleam
On the spreading Llanos and forest streams;
But a charm was missing from sea and zone
And I longed for my own loved land once more.

For its babbling fountains and "beechen shades,"
For its orchard blooms and its shadowy glades,
For the lonely paths that my child feet trod,
For the long green lanes with their grassy sod,
For my olden home with its ivied walls,
For the loves that smiled in my father's halls,
For the waving elms and the wild grape bowers,
For the winding streams and the jasmine flowers;
For the purple mountains and pine clad hills
For the fields of grain and the dancing rills,
For the long sleigh-rides o'er the trodden snow,
And the murmur of voices soft and low.

Oh shrouding mists! Ye must clear away,
From the beautiful sights of the harbor bay!
Glide on, proud bark, for I long to stand,
Once more on my own green sunny land!
I am coming home! Coming home!
And never again shall my footsteps roam.

* Written on seeing the picture of a vessel nearing the land—entitled "Coming Home."

Original.

Jacob's Epistle. Chap. 4.

1. Whence are wars and whence are fightings among you? Are they not from your pleasures of sense that war in your members?

2. Ye desire in an inordinate way and have not; ye murder and get jealous and are not able to attain; ye fight and war; ye have not because ye do not ask;

3. Ye ask and do not receive because ye ask in a bad way, that ye may squander on your pleasures of sense.

4. Ye adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the cosmos is enmity toward God? Whoever then hath purposed to be a friend of the cosmos (the order of things, the natural order of things in which you live as opposed to the spiritual or heavenly order of things) hath constituted himself an enemy of God.

5. Or think ye that in vain the Scripture saith Longeth the Spirit unto envy that dwelleth in us?

6. But he giveth a greater grace? Therefore it saith God arrayeth himself against the haughty, but to lowly ones he giveth grace.

7. May ye have subjected yourselves then to God; but withstand the Diabolos (Devil) and he will flee from you.

8. May ye have drawn nigh unto God and he will draw nigh unto you. May ye have cleansed hands ye obdurate sinners, and may ye have purified hearts ye double-minded.

9. May ye have become wretched and may ye have sorrowed, yea lamented; may your laughter have been turned into sorrow and your joy into dejection.

10. May ye have become humble in the sight of the Lord and he will exalt you.

11. Talk not against one another, brethren. The one who talketh against a brother or judgeth his brother is talking against law and judging law. And if thou art judging law thou art not a doer of law, but a judge.

12. There is One law-disposer and judge, who is able to save and destroy. And who art thou to be judging thy neighbor?

13. Go to now ye who are saying. Today or tomorrow we will go our way to such a city and operate there for a year and do business and get gain.

14. Ye who have no absolute knowledge of the morrow,—Of what sort is your life? A breath will it be that appeareth for a little, and then vanisheth away.

15. Instead of your saying, If the Lord will and we live, will we also do this or that.

16. Moreover now ye are boasting in your swaggering ways: all such boasting is wicked.

17. Then to him who knoweth how to do good, and doeth it not, it is a sin.

CHAPTER 5.

1. Go to now ye rich, may ye have lamented as ye raise the ololu over your condition of wretchedness that is coming upon you.

2. Your riches have decayed and your outer-garments become motheaten;

3. Your gold and your silver have become corroded and their rust will be for testimony against you, and it will eat your flesh like fire as it were. Ye have treasured it up unto last days.

4. Lo the wages of the hirelings who have reaped the early harvests of your fields, the wages that come too late from you cry out; and cries for help of those who have reaped the summer fields have come up to the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

5. Ye have delighted yourselves upon earth and lived effeminately; ye have nourished your hearts unto a day of slaughter.

6. Ye have passed civil-judgment upon, ye have murdered the justified one; He doth not resist you.

7. May ye have continued to show forbearance then, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Lo the husbandman looketh expectantly for the precious fruit of the earth showing forbearance toward it until it shall have received the early and latter rain.

8. May ye also have shown forbearance, may ye have stayed your hearts, because the coming of the Lord hath drawn nigh.

9. Sigh not brethren against one another, that ye be not judged. Lo the Judge standeth before the doors.

10. Take as an example, my brethren, of noble and good conduct and forbearance, the prophets who talked in the name of the Lord.

11. Lo we account happy those who patiently endured. Ye have heard of the patient-endurance of Job and seen the outcome of the Lord, that the Lord is compassionate and pitiful.

12. And above all things my brethren swear not, neither by the heavens nor by the earth nor by any other oath; but let your yea be yea and your nay be nay, that ye may not fall under judicial trial.

13. Is any one among you suffering evil, let him offer votive-prayer. Is any one jubilant, let him exalt the strain.

14. Is any one among you weak, let him have called the elders of the church unto him and let them have offered votive-prayer over him anointed him in the name with olive-oil.

15. And the vow of the faith will save the one lying sick and the Lord will arouse him, (derived meaning "raise up") and if he hath committed sins, they will have been remitted unto him.

16. Confess your sins, then to one another and offer vows for one another that ye may be healed. A justified man's supplication working within (or energizing) availeth much.

17. Helias was a man of like feelings to ours, and he offered votive-prayer that it rain not; and it did not rain upon the land for three years and six months.

18. And again he offered votive-prayer and the heavens gave the shower and the earth budded with her fruit.

19. My brethren, if any one among you shall have gone astray from the truth and any one shall return him.

20. Let him know that the one who hath returned an obdurate sinner from the error of his way, will save his soul and cover a multitude of sins.

COMMENT.

"Pleasures of sense" instead of "pleasures" merely R. V. Have we no pleasures except pleasures of sense? Are there no strictly speaking spiritual pleasures? There is no person entitled to more real pleasure and enjoyment than the Christian. The whole difference between a false asceticism and true Christianity turns on this pivotal interpretation. There is also a polar difference between a desire and an inordinate desire.

"Enmity toward God" instead of "Enmity with God" R. V.

"Law-disposer" instead of "lawgiver" R. V.

"Have no absolute knowledge" instead of "know" merely R. V.

"Boasting" instead of "glorying" R. V.

"Unto last days" instead of "in last days" R. V.

"Reaped" instead of "mowed" R. V. The idea of the "early and later" or "Summer" harvest not brought out by the R. V.

"Have come too late from you" instead of "which is kept back by fraud" R. V.

"Unto a day of slaughter" instead of "in a day of slaughter" R. V.

The 6th verse is not only history but a Messianic passage.

"Hath drawn nigh" instead of "is at hand" R. V. A very different thought.

"Sigh" instead of "murmur" R. V. There is another word in the Greek for "murmur."

"Patient-endurance" instead of "patience" merely R. V.

"Suffering evil" instead or "suffering" R. V.

"Offer votive prayer" instead of "pray" merely R. V.

"Exalt the strain" instead of "sing praise" R. V.

"The vow of the faith" instead of "The prayer of faith" R. V.

"Offer vows for one another" instead of "pray for one another" R. V.

"Working within" or "energizing" instead of "in its working" R. V. gives the rationale of this power and how it works.

"Helias" instead of "Elijah" R. V. There never was any person of that name mentioned in the Old Covenant Scriptures and the spelling of the name is the same in the text of both the Old and the New. How did the translators get "Elijah" out of it? Or how did they get "James" out of "Jacobos"?

"Offered votive-prayer" instead of "prayed fervently" R. V. There is no word in the text that can by any stretch of the imagination be translated "fervently." I fear Methodism biased this translation. Sincerity I imagine has more to do with effectual prayer than fervor. If anything is being emphasized here it is the vow of good purpose energized with God's responsive-help invoked through the instrumentality of the sincere prayer of faith. With this "Key of David" to lock or unlock there is no need of getting fervidly excited and storming at the battlements of heaven.

"Return him" instead of "convert him" R. V. Especially if the term is used in the usual perfunctory sense. We are all sinners; but an unsparing the word used here, is an obdurate-sinner against light and his own convictions.

The Little Housekeepers

Mamma had gone visiting. She left her two little daughters at home to keep house. She had charged Odessa to be sure and cook the potatoes and have them all ready for the bread, and Della was to help get the supper ready, so that papa and the hired man would not have to wait, when they came in from their work. Then, they must keep the house clean and tidy, and watch the little ones, and see that they didn't get into mischief. Hal and Will were to get in the wood, and fetch the water from the barn. But when mamma got home, it looked as if Miss Carelessness had paid the house a visit. It was all upside down. Odessa had rung the bell for supper, her eggs were broken in the skillet, but the fire had all gone out. The potatoes for the yeast had been forgotten. Della was out of doors playing with a crab that a playmate had caught and tied in a can. Hal and Will had neglected to bring the wood and water. One of the little boys had slipped to the cupboard and had eaten so much that he was sick. Mamma scolded a little bit, for she felt that her daughters ought to learn to be faithful and obedient, just the same when she was away as when she was at home.

All little housekeepers ought to feel proud of a mother's dependence on and confidence in them, and never invite the presence of such an unworthy visitor as Miss Carelessness. If they would pay attention to the lessons they learn in God's Book, they would never be heedless or disobedient. That is what we must all do. God wants children to honor their parents, and they can honor them only by obeying them. Every body loves a respectful, obedient child.

CARRIE GLADYS CRAIG.

Dear Household of Faith:

I regret that my letter is late for the "Love Feast." I tell you that I highly appreciated it. It refreshed me, and increased my love for every body, and especially for the household of faith. I am trying and striving to live a Christian life so that when Jesus comes I may be among his loved ones, never more to part. It is in the time of affliction that we prove how good our hope in the Lord is. How sweetly his words come to us, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and cast out your name as evil, and separate you from their company, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceedingly glad, and leap for joy. Great is your reward in heaven." Oh, how those blessed words of the Master come to our hearts in power and healing. How he suffered. He went through it all, but he conquered, and he is the Captain of our salvation. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life" What a promise. May we ever keep the eye of faith and hope on him. We shall overcome by his grace, which is sufficient and free to all who seek it. Dear brothers and sisters the time has come for earnest work. We all feel our weakness and inability to do much, but we may be strengthened by leaning on the Lord, and putting our trust in him. I am glad we have such a precious loving Savior, and I feel to trust him more and more as I see the fulfilling of his gracious promises.

I earnestly request an interest in your prayers that I may continue to abide in Christ. The days are fast numbering when Jesus will come, it wont be long.

May we meet and greet each other in the kingdom of God.

Your Work.

"All things are full of labor" and the Great Master has given "to every man his work." We are often tempted to compare our work with the work of others. Individual work is disparaged by associated work; the work of solitary and unaided workers is compared with the work of organized and well-trained men. "What do these feeble Jews," said the men who opposed the rebuilding of Jerusalem; but in spite of all the caviling and hindering, the feeble Jews went on with their work, the walls of Jerusalem were built, even in troublous times, and the names of the feeble Jews have come down to us clothed with honor.

The Christian worker needs to know his own work. It may not be a great work, it may be a very small work, but it is the work which has been given him to do; a necessary work, an important work, a work which might not be done unless he did it. It is not for him to take work out of the hands of others, or seek to compete with others who are doing work which God has appointed them. It is not for him to do a work simply because he thinks he can do it, or because he can do it better than some one else. His proper work is the work which God has given him to do, and if he will do this he will be blessed in the deed. Whether the work be great or small, whether it be attended by prosperity or adversity; whether he be called to lead a forlorn hope in the battle's front, or to shout victory over the retreating foe; whatever his work may be, he is simply to do it. His eyes must be on the Lord, the Great Master who has called him and prepared him for his especial service.

Much work is done by lonely, single-handed, unassisted workers, which never could be accomplished if it depended upon organizations, associations, and combinations. Multitudes of men could never see, and never be convinced of the importance of the work. The Lord does not find it needful to instruct every onlooker in the details of the work he desires to have done, it is enough to show the man who is concerned his duty, and bid him to do it.

Dear friend, have you work from the Lord? Has he given you something to do? Are you doing it? or have you refused to do that which he required, and settled down in disobedience, wondering why the Lord does not find something else for you to do? Have you estimated your powers, and decided that you are not fit for the work that the Lord has given you? Have you undertaken to show yourself wiser than he is? No wonder then that your life is a weariness, a disappointment, and a failure. You think that you can judge better than the Creator of your power, your ability, and your duty. Doubtless others have made the same mistake. One man whom the Savior called to sell all and follow him, went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions. His name is forgotten, his possessions have passed away, and he who might have stood in companionship with prophets and apostles, has sunk to such oblivion that even his name is forgotten among men.

Do you say, I have but one talent? So the man said who hid his talent in the earth and lost everything. Do you say, I am slow of speech? So Moses said, yet he found before he was through, that he spoke quite fast enough, and that for a hasty speech he was debarred from entering Canaan. What would have been the history of men whom God has called and honored with his blessing, had they refused to obey his bidding? What if Elisha had refused to leave his twelve yoke of oxen at the prophet's call? What if Amos had stuck to his herds and his sycamore trees? What if David had lingered among the sheepfolds? What if Matthew had tarried at the receipt of custom? What if Peter and John had refused to forsake their fishing nets? What if Paul had been disobedient to the heavenly vision? What if Luther had failed to believe that the just shall live by faith? What if John Bunyan had consented to stop preaching, and go out of Bedford jail and live respectably? What if the Pilgrim fathers had feared to breast the stormy waters of the deep? Who can tell what might have been had these men proved unequal to their great occasion, and heedless of the divine call? And there are others in whose ears the call of God is sounding today? Will they hear it? Will they heed it? Will they obey it? Will they go forth and follow him who leads the host of God to victory, or will they refuse that call, and sink ingloriously into oblivion?

"Had Moses failed to go, had God
Granted his prayer, there would have been
For him no leadership to win;
No pillared fire; no magic rod;
No wonders in the land of Zin;
No smiting of the sea; no tears
Ecstatic shed on Sinai's steep;
No Nebo, with a God to keep
His burial; only forty years
Of desert, watching with his sheep."

A Cry of Despair from Siberia.

A Russian political prisoner in exile in Siberia wrote to a friend in European Russia depicting the miseries of his life in "this forgotten and God-forsaken Arctic den, beyond the boundaries of civilization." The letter, which is published in the current number of Free Russia (American edition), took six months in running the gauntlet of the Czar's argus-eyed officials. It is dated June, 1893, at Kolymsk, a Siberian town of 800 inhabitants located far to the north.

"During the first period of my life here," writes the exile, "I thought it would be an interesting work to send my friends more or less detailed accounts of the peculiar conditions of life into which we, a handful of Europeans, have suddenly been thrown—conditions to which we are as unfit to adapt ourselves as a little body of civilized travelers, shipwrecked on the coast of Greenland, would be to arrange their lives in accordance with the habits and circumstances of the native Esquimaux. But most of my manuscripts never reached the persons to whom they were sent, and now even the desire to write is gone. My own amazement at the extraordinary surroundings here has grown fainter and fainter.

"Life in Kolmysk sucks every one down into itself. It seems to me now like a far-off dream that somewhere in the world there are big towns filled with people, with shops, with houses in several stories, with pavements on which great crowds of people go to and fro; that there are lands where the rivers begin to flow in February and do not freeze till November; where, instead of snow-covered swamps there are fields with thick, standing corn and grass; lands where there are woods and gardens, with green leaves on the trees, where the people live on bread and varied vegetable food.

"For us reality consists of a perpetually frozen desert covered with little hillocks and overgrown with stunted larches, which can hardly force their roots through the eternally frozen soil; a cold and filthy yurta, hardly fit to be called a human habitation, even by people accustomed to the poverty-stricken cabins of the Russian peasantry; for food, rotting fish; for clothing, such rags as are left of our European dress and rough native garments of half-cured skins; for the rest, solitude, silence, and lifelessness. I think the ghosts that wandered mournfully along the banks of Acheron, lamenting aloud for their lost earthly life, must have felt what we feel, dragging out our lives alone on the banks of the River Kolyma. The utter lack of all aim or interest, forgetfulness of the past and indifference to the present are steadily taking hold upon us all.

France's Army of Good-Looking Men.

It is stated that every year the Conceils de Revision examine from 350,000 to 370,000 young men. Of these 32,000 are exempted as unfit for any kind of duty, 38,000 are classed in the auxilliary departments owing to defects which render them unable to serve in the different regiments, while upward of 65,000 are sent home to await a fresh examination. The men who are accepted for regimental duty, and those who contract voluntary engagements in France, amounts to from 210,000 to 220,000 per annum. It may be quoted, by the way, that "extreme ugliness" is on the list of the various defects and infirmities disqualifying men for military service, among which also figure short sight, stammering, slight lameness, and an excess or the reverse of the regulation number of fingers and toes.

Great Britain's Big Army.

The physique of the British army may not perhaps be all that ought to be, but so far as numbers are concerned our military forces are in a satisfactory condition. In case of need we could put into the field for service at home a force of 332,000 men, exclusive of the militia reserve. We have 94,000 militia, 10,000 yeomanry, and nearly 228,000 volunteers. The regular army numbers close upon 220,000 of all ranks, and these could, on an emergency, be supplemented by 80,000 reserve men and 30,000 militia reservists, making in all a total of 330,000 men for service abroad. We have thus a grand total of 662,000 men available for service at home and abroad. At no time was there so large a force of enrolled men ready to be called upon for service should occasion arise.—London Court Journal.

By Rail to the Great Wall of China.

The completion of a railway to the foot of the Great Wall of China is a remarkable incident in the progress of the world and a striking example of the irony of history. The wall, which has been always a world's wonder, and which had its origin far back in the centuries, was built to resist the onward march of the "uncivilized" hordes from the northwest. Now, not only have the barbarians gone from the four winds and made their influence felt in China, but bit by bit the country is being won over to the greatest triumphs of the modern world. The railway which connects Tientsin with Shan-hai-Kwan is not only completed, but, as we learn from a Standard telegram, the new Chinese Minister to London was able to travel by it to the sea in a short time and get a steamer to Shanghai, "instead of having to remain the winter in Tientsin, or be carried down by chair nearly a thousand miles overland." The "iron horse" has had many triumphs, but few have been more marvelous than this.—Westminster Gazette.

The Reviewer Reviewed.
No. 8.

Reviewer has glanced at many Scriptures but his defence of pre-existence centres around the "Word," of John i. The Oneness of Father and Son, John x. 30; Before Abraham, of John viii. 58; and equality with God, Phil. ii. 6. To these we now give attention.

He says: "It was the Logos or Word that dwelt among us, and we beheld his, not its glory." True, but it was first made flesh, then his was proper. It begs the whole question to say that "The world he came into was the world that he made."

Reviewer knew we referred to "the only begotten Son" when we said he had no Son. This is trifling with a great subject. He next says, "I and the Father are One, sufficiently explains themselves." Then why did he have to think it meant oneness of nature? Why?

Reviewer thinks we made a blunder in not quoting a little more from Liddle and Scott about Logos. We expect it would have been better to have quoted more while about it, for what follows helps the cause greatly. The essential, philological meaning of logos is, "The word, or outward form, by which the inward thought is expressed and made known; also the inward thought or reason itself, so that logos comprehends both the Latin ratio, and oratio; unlike epos, means both the word and the inward thought expressed by the word,—the thing referred to, the material, not the formal part. As plain as words can make it, it is not merely what is composed of letters and written or spoken, but the thought or reason back of the word expressed by the word; not a mere utterance. It comprehends both ratio and oratio in Latin. "Ratio is from reor, a reckoning, account, calculation, computation," all mental operations. Oratio is from oro, a speaking, language, set-speech, oratorical talent, eloquence." This helps us.

The question now is, what was the inward thought of God in the Beginning? We answer, that which was expressed? What was that? Ans. "Let there be light," and we are told that light was, and the inward thought was that the light was "good," and should be divided from the darkness, and it was; that the light should be called day and the darkness night, and they were; and let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and the firmament was; and that firmament should be called heaven, and it was; and that the waters be gathered into one place and the dry land appear, and it was so; and that the dry land should be called earth and the waters seas, and this being done, his inward thought was that it was good; and then his inward thought was that the earth should bring forth grass and herbs and fruit trees, and it was so; and again his inward thought was that it was good and said so. Then his inward thought was to cause two great lights to rule night and day, and stars also. Then his inward thought was that the waters should swarm with fish and great whales, and the air with fowls, and his command having gone forth and executed, his inward thought was that they should multiply. Then his inward thought was that it was good and said so. Again his inward thought was that they should all multiply; and then his inward thought was that the earth should bring forth living creatures, and it was so, having given the command. In surveying the whole his inward thought was that it was good and said so, and we may now intelligently read Hebrews iii. 11. "Through faith [in the Word of God given by Moses] we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God."

But Reviewer says that Protogoras was called logos. This was not an unique animal named Protogoras; he was a man, not a logos; it was not his name either. His name was Mr. Protogaros, not Mr. Logos. [illegible] of the Sophists, or wise men, who were ridiculed by Socrates and Plato, and Aristotle, and lampooned by the comic poets, and the very name of Sophiste would imply they were conceited and wordy, and nicknamed logos, appropriately.

Then follows what in regard to the lexicons, we consider an aggravation of the first wrong. What we want is, not what theologians say logos means, but the essential meaning of it—philological meaning. To quote from lexicons that have been confessedly gotten up as New Testament lexicons by theologians, such definitions of logos as, "The divine Word by Whom God created all things," and "The Son of God;" "The Divine word Christ;" "Jesus Christ the God-Man," is like asking for bread and receiving a stone. If this is the truth of God why was it not brought out a year ago? Why rack his brain all these months. Reviewer should not presume so much on the ignorance of his readers after educating them for years, that the lexicons are all astray as to the meaning of the words upon which the apostate system of these last days is built, such as Nephesh Psuchee, pneuma, heaven, hell, paradise, etc. He might have known they would quiz the witnesses he produced to prove the nature of Christ, after showing them to be ignorant or false in regard to their own nature. Take two of his witnesses as a sample; Greenfield says, "heaven is the abode of God, angels, and of glorified spirits." Is this true or false? of pneuma, as "the human soul after its departure from the body;" and of psuchee as the rational soul, mind, that in us which thinks, feels, wills, and renders us immortal. Is this true or false?

Parkhurst says of pneuma "It is the immaterial spirit...... The human soul or spirit breathed into man immediately by God himself, Gen. ii. 7, and the Third person of the Blessed Trinity; and of hades, that it is the invisible place or state of separate souls whether of torment, Luke xvi. 23, or general. Is this true? If not Parkhurst is a false witness.

Liddle and Scott's lexicon contains less theology than any we are acquainted with, and in regard to logos they took good care to credit the GOD THE WORD definition where it belonged, viz: Ecclesiastical authority, and we ask if the suppression of this fact is not a great wrong to those who cannot test such statements? We suppose most of these lexicons give the real, as well as the theological meanings.

If, as Reviewer says, our cause is "forever lost," it is on the testimony of those who testify falsely about soul, spirit, heaven, hell, etc.

The word logos was in use for ages before John used it, and it is its uses as a word to his hand that is valuable to us. We know to our sorrow what theological usage has done, and reject their definitions with scorn; and moreover would feel guilty before God to give them out to anybody without explanation.

The Spirit's use of the word logos is most abundantly settled by about 214 passages besides those two or three in dispute; and what can we think of a theory that compels men to set aside that powerful evidence for the theological definitions added to the philological? We would kindly and earnestly plead with Reviewer not to keep sipping at that theological cup, and offering it to others. And to all we say, read about the befogging influence of that cup and promptly say, no, thank you, when it is presented to you. In concluding this part of our subject we may say we do not see "the overwhelming decision against us."

At last we have a reason given for rejecting what we consider Jesus' explanation of the Oneness between himself and the Father; viz:—that the tenses are different. That this is a mistake see v. 11. He prays they may be kept in the Father's name, by which they had been given to him, that they may be one as he and the Father were. They were one at that time, but to so continue, they must be kept in the name after he is gone, as he kept them while present with them, see v. 12. And v. 22 shows that, being so far kept in the Father's name, he has given them the glory the Father had given him, that they may be one as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfect in one, and that the WORLD may know that thou didst send me,—and to show how mistaken Reviewer is, that this oneness is to be when the Sons of God are manifested, the 20th verse includes those all down the times of the Gentiles who should believe through the Word preached by the disciples; and v. 23 shows that faith in them would be induced by their oneness. It is sight, not faith, that influences the world after the Sons of God are manifested, and his judgments are abroad. Remember Jesus' words, "I in them, and they in me," and recall the fact that the Thessalonians were in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ. And then see by 2 Cor. v. 18, 19 infallible testimony that Christ the Son was not in the Godhead while on the earth. It says, "All things are of GOD who hath reconciled us to HIMSELF BY Jesus Christ,"—the Agent. "And hath given us the ministry of reconciliation; viz. that God was in Christ reconciling the world to HIMSELF." "The oneness is set forth clearly in 1 Cor. x. 16, 17. "The bread which we break, is it not the participation of the Body of Christ, for we being many are one bread and one body," etc. In chap. xii. 13 it says, "For by one spirit are we baptized into one body." v. 18. "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the Body (of Christ) as it hath pleased him." v. 26, "And whether one suffer all the members suffer with it." See also Eph. iv. "For there is one Body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of ALL," including the head of the Body,—and through all, and in you all—how could they help being at-one with God?

Reviewer is mistaken again when he thinks we have contradicted ourself by saying, Jehovah excludes every one from the Godhead, and then saying there are hosts of personalities possessing divine nature. It is his notion that divine nature implies Godhead that causes him to confound things that differ. Does he expect to be in the Godhead in the sense he claims it for Jesus when he possesses divine nature? If not there is no point to his argument, in our opinion.

Speaking of how Christ died he should have said, how the Christ of promise died, and how the supposed pre-existent Christ did not die; then it would have been profitable for him to have shown that the "doctrine of the two wills, and two energies in the person of Christ was adopted at the first synod of the Lateran in 649, and that Monothelism (one will in two natures) was finally condemned at the 6th General Council of Constantinople, in 680, where it was declared that there are in Christ two natural wills, and two natural operations, without division, conversion or change, with nothing like antagonism or confusion." What folly it is to try to sustain a doctrine from the New Testament that came into existence between 600 and 700 years later; and by such authority.

In coming to his answer Six we think Reviewer would have had no time nor space for witticisms or amusing anecdote if he had faithfully tried to reconcile his view with the fact that it was because the Son of God, made of a woman loved righteousness and hated iniquity that he was exalted with the oil of gladness above his fellows; Heb. i. 9, and the fact that it was because he became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, that God highly exalted him and gave him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth, and things under the earth. We think it would have kept him busy a long time, especially if he take into account the fact that his supposed pre-existent Christ was not eligible to these honors, because incapable of the discipline. It is for himself to justify his cause in avoiding the most powerful objections to his doctrine, after becoming its champion.

In regard to Phil. ii. 6 an attempt is made to show our points ill taken, and find flaws in our reasoning, which would not be difficult. But there were no flaws in the Scriptures that squarely contradicted him, why are they passed by? It was plainly his duty to have shown his theory to be in harmony with them if he could, and if he could not, yielded the point. But we see something of a change has taken place, in reference to equality with God as we shall see later.

In No. 7 he says our definition of a mere man is illogical and unsound, and we had a right to expect a logical and sound definition after about a score of allusions to it in this discussion, and using it for thirty years as an argument, but he is getting to be very conservative of late, unless he intends the term "truly man" a real man to be it; that is, physically, morally, and intellectually a responsible creature; this is what he styles the human nature of Christ. As the pre-existent Son did not die, but survived, and raised the other that did, we see that he has adopted the decree of the Council of Constantinople entire, to all intents and purposes two complete persons in one, but so far he has found no use for one of them to raise the dead Christ; but as God raised him this is another mistake.

Reviewer still holds that Everlasting in Micah v. 2 means what Jamieson, Fausset and Brown say it means, from eternity, and rejects Young's rendering, days of antiquity, and margin of Revised Version from ancient days. Reviewer's favorite authors are very emphatic and say "the plain antithesis of this clause to come forth out of thee Bethlehem) sows the eternal generation of the Son. In the first series of articles we showed that the person here predicted to come out of Bethlehem some hundreds of years in the future was not something just decided upon, but had for ages been a settled purpose with Jehovah, and the first declaration of that purpose was made in Eden, and can be traced on slightly to Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and David, the stream of promise ever-flowing and ever-widening, and at last the fulness of time came and the promised one appeared. When we read of his being slain from the foundation of the world no one stumbles at it, and why should any one stumble when told that in God's purpose Christ had from the beginning existed, and his coming forth had been from the days of antiquity?

What follows is a surprise. Reviewer says we "seem anxious to make it appear that he believes the Son to be personally, and absolutely co-equal, and co-eternal with the Father, after he has so plainly said that the head of Christ is God." And why should we not, when he has plainly stated that he was equal without qualification, and from eternity without qualification? He says "Common sense ought to teach that the correlative terms of Father and Son imply first, personal priority, second, duality of persons, third, similarity of nature." Common sense will certainly teach priority and duality always, and similarity of nature, generally; not always. There is one notable exception. The overshadowing power of the Highest once came upon a virgin, and caused her to conceive. This was predicted more than seven hundred years before, see Is. vii. 14, and was the literal fulfillment of the literal promise, that the literal seed of a woman should bruise the serpent's head. How much faith in that promise do those exercise who claim that the Woman's Seed possessed divine nature. It is necessary to say here that the virgin was a virgin still after conception, because those who ought to know better write "Seed or Son," as if Christ were the Seed of God, when not once in all the Book of God is the word spermatos used in that sense. A most unjustifiable thing to do to support the two nature theory.

We must however say to Reviewer, that common sense is overtaxed when it has to teach what he means by an impersonal equality with God, or a limited co-equality with God, or what a limited co-eternity with the Father means. We do not think he has improved matters by partly shaking off Jamieson, Fausset and Brown, because in explaining this himself he must remember that on August 23, 1893 there was personal equality with God, and absolute co-eternity with the Father, as his article there proves.

Yes; thousands can testify that we too call Jesus Christ our Great God and Savior, but it is the Christ that gave HIMSELF for us, not an imaginary one.

We took Reviewer's advice and ascertained the Spirit's use of the verb genathai in 23 or 24 instances; but as Reviewer has found two instances that seem to point the other way, he decides that the two or three have it as against the 23 or 24. As the two grammars quoted from agree with our position the matter is practically settled so far as the disputants are concerned, in our favor. And as a new argument is introduced, it looks as if the old one has been found wanting. I am is taken to mean the name of Jesus in a pre-existent state. But unfortunately for the new argument it is now agreed by all eminent Hebrew scholars including Gesenius, the Father of Hebrew criticism, that the common translation of Ex. iii. 14 is, in the words of Prof. MacWorten, "an entirely anomalous rendering devised to meet a difficulty existing in the mind of the translators, who were ignorant of the origin and meaning of the work Yahveh," and then goes on to say that its root is Neveh Be, — "Be lord over thy brethren," and found its equivalent in the Hebrew verb "to be," and it is in the third person, singular, FUTURE of the later verb Nayah (to be). So that the new argument on I am, is without foundation. This is MacWorten's translation: "I will be who I will be." This was also Mark Allen's rendering years ago, and also Dr. Thomas'.

Reviewer's attention is called to what Jamieson, Fausett and Brown say about this:—"Before Abraham was I am. The words rendered was and am are quite different. The one clause means Abraham was brought into being, the other, I exist. The statement, therefore, is not that Christ came into existence before Abraham did, (as the arians affirm is the meaning) but that he never came into being at all, but before Abraham had a being; in other words existed before creation, or eternity, as chap. i. 1. If words have any meaning this teaches God had no pre-existent son—both being from eternity. Is it wise to follow these blind guides?

Reviewer says it is very tedious to have to tell us that "by infinite merit he does not mean infinite sacrifice, nor infinite victim;" but we think he would find it much more tedious if he were obliged to tell us how there could be infinite merit in a finite sacrifice.

Reviewer declined to analyze John viii. 58, he thinks it would not convince us. But what of the cause of truth, and thousands of readers?

Reviewer asks when he brought Prov. viii. 23 into this discussion? He first brought it into the discussion of this subject in Gospel Banner Sept. 1, 1864, and into the present discussion No. 28, Vol. 42 of RESTITUTION.

It is thought inconsistent to quote from the all-round infidel Gibbon after finding fault with Reviewer for quoting from Clark and other commentators. The difference is this: We quoted them as authority for the truth of God when they are strangers to it, and we quoted Gibbon as authority on secular history, that he was familiar with. Does not Jesus intimate this course when he says, the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light?

From the frequency of its mention, one would think it was anything but right to be terribly in earnest. But right or wrong, those who have summered and wintered us more than 30 years will testify that that is characteristic of us every time and in every pursuit. And when we see those we love holding to a theory which seems to nullify the gospel, and rob God to enrich the Son it is calculated to make us terribly in earnest to show them a more excellent way. We are more and more convinced that a two-natured Christ belongs to, and can only be harmonized with the system of theology that has two meanings of God's Word, two natures in man, two or more hopes and faiths, two and three Gods, two or three baptisms, two rewards, two judgments, two comings of Christ for everybody and two kingdoms.

It next says that "Reviewer with a strange confusion of terms and ideas says, 'The Divine root already lives; the branch does not yet live.' What a shocking statement! And what a shocking theory that requires it! Does he mean that the man whose name is BRANCH has never yet been born!!! See Zech. vi. 12; Jer. xxiii. 5." Bless the man we never thought such a thing! He talks about confusion of ideas in us; then shouts "shocking statement," and "shocking theory," before he knows what we mean! This shows where the confusion was. Says he, "What does he mean, by saying the Branch does not yet live?"

Well, then, we meant what Reviewer said in RESTITUTION 32, viz: "That Christ in his divine nature is the root of David." We leave it to Reviewer if that would not make David the Branch. Let him take time to consider before answering. We think he will agree to that. He next says, "That Christ in his human nature is the offspring of David." His mind was clear when he wrote that; and it makes us hopeful of arriving at the truth presently. Is. xi. 1, 2 says, "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots." This is in harmony with Reviewer in RESTITUTION No. 32, when he says, "In his human nature he is the offspring of David. Here Christ is the Branch,—offspring of David, because he sprung out of David's roots. And we leave it to Reviewer if David will not be the Branch of Christ, when, as he says, "Christ in his divine nature is the root of David and the offspring of David? How could it be otherwise? We hope he can now see what we meant where we said "the Branch does not yet live;" we meant that Christ had not yet become the Father of David. We meant that the divine root that the Branch David is to spring from already lives at the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens; but that David's grave is with us today as it was in apostolic times. We meant that as Christ derived human nature from the human David, so the human David would obtain divine life from the divine Christ. And we took for granted that Reviewer knew that David would have to be born again before he could be divine in nature, although with the exception of some sad lapses he possessed a divine disposition. We took it for granted he knew David would have to be born from the dead as Christ was, before death would have no more dominion over him, and that he as well as all the faithful would hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth to the life of the divine root. We had no idea Reviewer thought Christ—the supposed pre-existent Christ—was the root of David because he supposed Christ had created him. If he created David he created every son and daughter of Adam, and was the root of all by virtue of his divine nature; and why is this only said of David if that be so? We trust Reviewer will see the folly of this when he reflects on the fact that that was not what satisfied David,—he will not be satisfied till he awakens in the likeness of Christ; it is then he becomes the offspring of Christ; and therefore Reviewer has grossly misapplied this Scripture.

For some reason Reviewer has clung tenaciously to the common translation of the New Testament, and we have waited in vain for a careful and exhaustive examination of texts supposed to teach pre-existence. This is to be regretted, but cannot be helped now. But our readers may be assured that the passages relied upon to teach pre-existence are misapplied because it is not found in the prophets or Moses; and Paul taught only what they said SHOULD COME. See Acts xxvi. 22, 23.

Every facility has been offered him for nearly a year. One-fourth of his first series of articles was devoted to modern writers nearly all of whom were ignorant of their own natures, and very many trivial matters have occupied his attention; while, if we remember rightly, no notice was taken of the twelve serious charges against his theory in our No. 8. Under these circumstances it is wisely stopped.

We have aimed at truth and perspicuity. Have pointed out what we believe to be error without fear and favor, although the Searcher of all hearts knows it has cost us many bitter tears to do it, when we knew it would be painful to others. If zeal without knowledge or an ardent temperament has allowed improprieties to have escaped from our pen, of which, however we are not conscious, we pray God to forgive us for Jesus' sake, for to that extent, truth will suffer from its advocate.

In conclusion we say, our faith in the Christ of God is capable of a full, and explicit expression in the words of the Spirit.

1. "Who VERILY WAS ORDAINED before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for you, who do believe in God, that raised him from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God." 1 Pet. i. 20, 21.

2. "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Gen. iii. 15.

3. "In thee (Abraham) shall all families of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 3. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16.

4. "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words into his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." Deut. xviii.

5. "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom."

6. "And behold, thou (Mary) shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.... The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall over-shadow thee, therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Luke i. 31-35.

7. "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful, and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." Heb. ii. 17.

8. "Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity, THEREFORE God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Heb. i. 9.

9. "That Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures. 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4.

10. "That if Christ be not raised your faith is vain." 1 Cor. xv. 17.

11. "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of hades and of death." Rev. i. 18.

12. "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." Luke xxiv. 47.

13. Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts iv. 12.

14. "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself." John xiv. 3, etc.

Not one of these refer to a pre-existent Christ. In the promised and partly fulfilled scheme contained in the above Scriptures we have unbounded faith. God has laid help upon one Mighty to save to the uttermost all who come to God by him. He is the arm of Jehovah revealed, and able to execute his eternal purpose and fill the earth with the glory of God. And it is the joy of our life to proclaim the exceeding riches of God's grace stored up in Christ for all who accept him as the way, the truth and the life. And if (as we joyfully hope, and for which we labor night and day,) we have hundreds of crowns of rejoicings in the day of God, we say to Reviewer and all our readers, we think it will be due to exhibiting the love of God and of Christ as the motive power of the gospel.

Habit.

"Habit at first is but a silken thread,
Fine as the light-winged gossamers that sway
In the warm sunbeams of a summer's day;
A shallow streamlet, rippling o'er its bed;
A tiny sapling, ere its roots are spread;
A yet unhardened thorn upon the spray;
A lion's whelp that hath not scented prey;
A little smiling child obedient led;
Beware! the thread may bind thee as a chain.
That streamlet gather to a fatal sea;
That sapling spread into a gnarled tree;
That thorn, grown hard, may wound and give thee pain;
That playful whelp his murderous fangs reveal;
That child, a giant, crush thee 'neath his heel."

Obeying the Form of Doctrine.

If neither sprinkling nor pouring is Christian baptism then those who are sprinkled and poured do not obey the form of doctrine which was delivered to the church (Rom. vi. 17) and those who so teach and practice "reject or frustrate the commandment of God that they may keep their own traditions," Mark vii. 9, and those who submit to these traditions under the impression that they are obeying the Lord, are simply obeying man, and disobeying God who only has the right to dictate the conditions of pardon. Will he pardon the disobedient? Faith, repentance, and baptism in the name of Jesus Christ brings the person to the point where God's Word is pledged to grant him pardon. The man who refuses to meet the Lord at the point designated by divine love and mercy need not, can not, hope for pardon. So there are thousands upon thousands of professed Christians unpardoned—if we take God's Word in proof. At this point it may be objected that I am uncharitable in drawing the lines so close as to exclude from the true church all who cannot answer in the affirmative the question, Were you immersed? The Bible law of pardon does this, and not I who do it. In the light of this, what other conclusion can I come to? My position is a Scriptural one that immersion, and not only immersion is what God commanded by the Greek Word, which has been transferred—not translated—in the common version. The English reader is quite sure to think that baptize is an English word and includes in its meaning sprinkling and pouring as well as immersion, just as many uninspired writers and speakers define it, and with which the practice of many churches agree. It is a Greek word with the last syllable changed, or Anglicized as scholars say.

Inspiration in the use of this word commanded one thing or action and not three. While there is no specific and direct definition of the word in the New Testament it is so used in connection with other words that the common reader readily infers its meaning. "Baptized into Christ's death;" "Buried with him by baptism into death;" "Planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection;" (Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5.) "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead." Col. ii. 12. The believer can not be literally buried with Christ in the tomb, but can be typically by baptism and likewise can be planted in the likeness of his death. Neither sprinkling nor pouring a little water on the candidate pictures to the eyes of witnesses a burial and resurrection in any sense. There is no resemblance between "modes" of baptism (?) and the facts of burial and resurrection. They are not the form or mold of the doctrine. Paul having in view Christian baptism says—"Our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. x. 22. Jesus uses the word as a figure of speech to set forth in the most forcible and vivid manner before the minds of the two sons of Zebedee the sufferings through which he would shortly pass, said he, "Are ye able * * * to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? To be overwhelmed in suffering and sorrow, to pass into these is the only thought adequate to the case. If the word in its literal use means no more than the application of a little water to the forehead of a person then was the suffering through which our Savior passed, as expressed by the words baptized and baptism, but a trifling matter.

In the New Testament history of baptism we find circumstantial proof of immersion. John baptized in Aenon near to Salim because there was much water there. John iii. 23. He baptized in Jordan, (Matt. iii. 6) and in water (11 v.) as rendered in the Diaglott; and, as far as I have examined, all late translations agree with this. Modern commentators like Owen who say on this latter passage that "the water is instrumental and not local and that the best critics so regard it, say what they ought to know is false. The water is not instrumental, but local and the best critics of the Christian world and of every century of this dispensation regard the element of water as local, that instead of the water being taken up by the hand and applied to the person as in sprinkling, the person is applied or put into the water. These commentators are unreliable. They are on the popular side and write to gain patronage. The statement that "the water is instrumental" is very rash. John Wesley, Luther and McKnight although they practiced sprinkling would if living say to Mr. Owen: "You are wrong, John's baptism and that of the apostles was immersion." The AnaBaptists were a sect that practiced immersion exclusively. They vehemently opposed the practice of Luther. In view of this Melancthon said to Luther: "Now the devil has attacked us in our weakest point," meaning the practice of sprinkling. This is an honest confession. This point is still weak, it matters not how many hold to it, nor how much of scholarship may be arrayed on its side. Mr. Owen would have put himself on record as a consistent writer, if he had said "sprinkled with water" and why did he not say this? For this is what he believed, and this is what he intended to make out by retaining the preposition "with" and by the statement "The water is instrumental." He laid himself fairly open to criticism when he took sides with the Church of England as represented by the translators employed by King James. "Baptized with water" being in the A. V. is let pass with but little criticism from Greek scholarship, and its design as favoring sprinkling scarcely ever suspected by the common reader though an immersionist. Mr. Owen felt that he was running no great risk in saying what he did and in the way he said it, but if he had said, in his note on the text "Sprinkled with water" he would have learned to his sorrow that an overwhelming majority of the "best critics" were on the other side affirming that John baptized in water and in the Jordan: even the voice of dead Pedo-Baptists echoing from many a printed page would rebuke his presumptuous handling of the word of the Lord. No translator or body of translators have ever rendered the original into English by the words "Sprinkled with water"—not to my knowledge at least. I challenged a learned preacher, a college professor to name one such translation. His only answer was that he and I had not seen all the translations.

How often do those who practice sprinkling resort to rivers and other bodies of water to sprinkle their converts? How often do they like Philip with the Ethiopian eunuch "go down into the water" and "come up out of the water." To do this is unnecessary on their part. A sufficient quantity of water is always at hand. What a man might quaff at one swallow will do. Mr. Talmage when in Palestine immersed a man in Jordan at the place as near as could be determined, where John baptized our Lord. Why did he not in that sacred place sprinkle him? He had sprinkled many a one. Was there a conviction of mind deeper and stronger than creed or popular practice that Jesus was immersed? and that to sprinkle a man in this hallowed place would have been but solemn mockery?

John L. Wince.

When God would educate a man he compels him to learn bitter lessons. He sends him to school to the necessities rather than to the graces, that, by knowing all suffering, he may know also the eternal consolation.

Letter Drawer.

Dear ones in Christ:

I love to read your many letters in The Restitution, and will add my mite. I deem it a great privilege to work and live for the Lord, for "In his presence is fulness of joy; and at his right hand there are pleasures forever more." Psa. xvi. 11. It has been five years last Christmas since I put on Christ by baptism, and began working for the prize. I do love to hear the gospel proclaimed by our many brothers and sisters who are striving to reach the goal. May we ever walk in the light of truth and life, and study the Scriptures whereby we may know the way wherein we should go. "For the word of the Lord is right; and all his works are done in truth." Psa. xxxiii. 4. Let us therefore "Worship him in the beauty of holiness. Giving unto him the glory due unto his name;" that by so doing we may gain an entrance into the "Everlasting kingdom of our Lord." "For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Psa. xcvi. 13. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." Isa. ix. 7. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. xx. 6; xxi. 23-27. Those of the human race who are worthy, will then be restored to that glorious perfection; it is this portion that God has promised to give all who are worthy of eternal life. And Oh, what a glorious portion! Close your eyes for a few moments to the scenes of sorrow, misery and woe that now prevail on account of sin, and picture before your mind's eye the glory of the earth made new, perfect in every respect, Rev. xxi. 3, 4. What harmony there! What melodious strains of "Peace on earth, good will to men!" Not a stain of sin to mar the harmony and peace which there exists. Not a bitter thought nor an unkind look or word; but Christian love springing forth from every heart, prompts every action; which, blending with all that is good and pure and beautiful, portrays a picture fair—to heirs of that kingdom—which cannot be erased. "Some of these days in the deserts, upspringing fountains shall flash, while the joy-bells are ringing, and the world with its sweetest of birds saying—Some of these days!" By faith in God and in hope of eternal life through Christ, we will be led on by the inviting scenes spoken of in his Word, to, like our Lord bear the cross, despising the shame, that we may gain an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. i. 4, 5.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er,
I'm nearer home today, today,
Than I have been before."

Waiting ones, why longer delay with such a prize in view?

"Come to Jesus! Are you lonely?
Solace sweet he will afford;
Lean on Jesus, Jesus only,
Come and find a loving Lord."

Miss Clementine Overman.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:

I have read so many letters in The Restitution that I thought I would try and write. I lived in the sectarian church for 20 years, but about nine months ago I heard my first gospel sermon by Brother Kidwell. I listened to him for three months, read my Bible, became convinced that it was the true gospel, and as soon as I was convinced I was baptized into Christ, giving thanks unto the Father which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature. For by him were all things created that are in heaven, that are on earth visible, and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or powers, all things were created by him, and for him, and he is before all things and by him all things consist, and he is the head of the Church, who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, for it pleased the Father that in him all fulness should dwell, and having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself.

Brothers and sisters, pray for me that I may be ready when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory.

Mary E. Howard.

Editor Restitution:

"The Lord is good and gracious." Therefore I continue to the present time under circumstances of so much mercy; and can still enjoy reading his "Holy Book" and The Restitution.

I was much pleased with Bro. W. H. Wilson's exposition of Rev. xi. He presented in a workmanlike manner, the views I have held so many years. But I would suggest that the treading under foot of the "Holy City" will not occur at the same time that the two witnesses prophesy. My view of that part of the subject has been that the events to transpire at that time will occupy the whole seven years of the last week of Gentile supremacy. The two prophets appear on the scene at the right time to encourage the Jews in the work of rebuilding the temple. With ample means in their hands and present appliances it will not require as much time to erect the present (or coming) structure, as the first temple. But it will require some time to erect the one that John saw, and measured.

From the record it appears the two prophets are to be endowed with divine power sufficient to put down all opposition. (See v.s 5-7). Unless such help should come to them they would never undertake the work; so it appears to me.

When their testimony is finished they are to be killed and lie unburied three and one half days; after that they revive and ascend to heaven. See vs. 7-12.

May not this be the time for a certain class to enter with them the chambers of safety and escape the troublous times that are to follow? This chapter contains much food for serious and comforting thought. Serious because the world will not be prepared for the events to transpire at that time; comforting to those who are ready, watching and waiting to see the transfer of all human governments into the hands of David's Son and David's Lord. See vs. 15.

The above is submitted in love to all.

J. D. Sheridan.

Dear Restitution:

Lord, will you at this restore the kingdom to Israel? This is a question that Peter asked Jesus just before he went away. He did not say the church, as some would like to have it, as they say that all the promises that relate to Israel are the church, but the church never had a kingdom and therefore it would not be restored to them, but to the literal Israel, not spiritual Israel. Question, Can a man preach the gospel and leave out the restoration of the twelve tribes, or in other words, can a man believe the gospel and not believe in the twelve tribes being restored to their original places? It does seem to me that they cannot. I should like for some brother that is posted, to write on this, as I think it is very important. There are a great many that do not believe that the Jews will ever have any more chance; that they are and always will be cast off. But from what I find in the prophecy, it seems that they must be brought back. The 37th of Ezekiel, speaking of the two houses, that they should be one nation and one king should rule them both. Then in Romans where he says that blindness in part happened to them until the fulness of the Gentiles become in, then all Israel shall be saved as it is written. Then shall come forth the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, and they shall not teach every man his neighbors, saying, know ye the Lord, for they shall all know him from the least to the greatest. This certainly does not apply to the church. If worth publishing all right, if not consign it to the waste basket.

YOUR LIFE.

Is life worth living? asks your modern philosopher. In reply we would ask, "What life?" Whose life? A distinguished citizen of Boston recently read a paper before a philosophic club on the subject, "Is Life Worth Living?" He was a man who possessed millions of dollars. He lived in a luxurious palace on a magnificent avenue. He was a man of culture, of thorough education. He was a writer of brilliant power, and in his essay he sought with determination and with some degree of logical power from his point of view to show that human life was not worth living.

While he was reading this essay before this assemblage of club-men and philosophic students, a simple pioneer teacher was addressing a great assembly in Tremont Temple on the subject of Western missions. These two men had been schoolmates in boyhood. They were both men of culture. The one had given his life to making money, and made it. The other had given his life to men, in sacrifice. He was a poor man—this missionary. The great crowd listened with breathless attention to his account of his work in the western world. They hung thrilled upon every period. He was a man of masterful physique, of magnetic face, behind which beat a great, loving heart.

He told of the wonders that God had wrought among the people in the far West. His face flushed with power divine as he told of the needs of the great commonwealths that were growing on the border land of the nation. He swept the souls of all who heard him with divinest enthusiasm, that dominated and lifted them up with the highest faith in God. He refused invitations to attend dinners in his honor, and when he closed his address was seen hurrying across Boston Common on his way to catch a train to return to his duties in the West. To him life was full of meaning; he was eager to return to the fight. Life was a glorious opportunity in which to bless his fellow-men, and he was as impatient as a child to return to the task that God had given him. Is life worth living? What life?—Rev. T. Dixon.

Evil Speaking.

Do you govern your tongue? Do you really make it a point of conscience to speak evil of no man? The Word of God commands this just as plainly as it says, "Thou shalt not steal." What would you think of a man's religion whom you caught stealing? To rob one of his good name is often a far greater injury than to steal his money. Be careful what you say of an absent person. Weigh your words before you put them in circulation.

James makes the proof of Christian perfection to consist in the government of the tongue. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and be able also to govern the whole body." Jas. iii. 2.

Observe carefully, and you will find this statement true. Sinful tempers may be smothered by a determined effort. But let them, through the medium of the tongue, come out into daylight where they are fanned and fed, and they will rage with fury, "You may as well say it as think it," is one of the most pernicious maxims that the devil ever set afloat.

"Speak not evil one of another, brethren." Jas. iv. 11. "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone."—Earnest Christian.

The conquered child is very apt to become the conquered man, and conquered men are of very little use in this world. We have none of us any too much will power, and the little we have, was not given us to be broken and dissipated, but to make us masters of the things which ought for our good to be subject to us. When human wills are yielded to God, they are not weakened; for they become allied with the divine will; but only harm, and great harm, can come to the individual who yields his will without the consciousness that he is yielding to justice, truth and right.—Advent Review and Herald.

Expressions not in the Bible.

Although the following expressions abound in sermons and obituaries, they are not to be found once in any part of the Bible:—

Immortal soul.
Never-dying soul.
Undying spirit.
Deathless spirit.
Spark of Deity.
Last moments on earth.
Gone into eternity.
Gone to another world.
The world of spirits.
Gone to heaven.
Gone home to God.
Gone to be an angel.
First moments in heaven.
Looking over the battlements of heaven.
The mortal remains.
Here lies all that was mortal.
Eternal happiness (in the sense of making it main and primary.)
A miserable eternity.
A deathless miserable existence.
Eternity of woe.
Everlasting woe.
Everlasting pain.
Eternal torture.
Endless agony.

"Torturing despair
[illegible] in the air."

All these expressions are "foreign" to inspiration; and we believe the sentiments they express are as false to fact as the terms are unknown to Scripture.

The Bible does say that:—

Man is mortal.

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh."

Instead of "gone to heaven," gone to dust; "returned to his earth."

Will be raised up (not brought down) at the last day.

Will then, if holy, live with Jesus under the whole heavens.

If unholy, will be miserably destroyed.

Will lose the gift of eternity,—eternal life, and consequent existence.

Will never be recovered again to life by a resurrection from the second death, but will suffer the eternal punishment of destruction.

All the latter are stated either in substance or in so many words; but the former do not occur either in the language we have quoted, or equivalent terms.

Will New Zealand Sink?

It was formerly, say fifty years ago, not at all uncommon for a new island to appear above, or an old one to disappear beneath, the waves of the Pacific Ocean. Such occurrences were sometimes noted as often as two or three times a year, and were so common as to hardly excite comment among navigators and scientists. Of late, however, the Pacific has been "pacific" indeed. It will be thirty years this coming summer since the last island disappeared, and twenty-seven since the last one popped up its head in the "greatest oceans." But geologists argue that this is a suspicious silence, an omen of some monstrous catastrophe; that Dame Nature is simply resting for a mighty effort. Sir Sydney Bell even goes so far as to predict that the whole of New Zealand and the greater part of Australia will be ingulfed before the end of the year 1925.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

As to War in Europe.

Archibald Forbes, a writer with few if any superiors in his special field, is of the opinion that the war in Europe, which so many believe to be impending, will not occur until 1896. France and Russia have a united army of more than 1,500,000 men, but Russia is not well supplied with modern weapons. Germany, Austria, and Italy have a force of about 1,200,000 men, well equipped. When Russia has issued the new weapons to her army Mr. Forbes believes the long-expected and oft-predicted conflict will begin.

"And the kings of the earth and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. vi. 15-18.

To Excavate at Old Jerusalem.

Excavations certain to add to the knowledge of the old City of Jerusalem are soon to be made. The Sultan has granted a firman to the Palestine Exploration Society of London, giving a long-sought privilege. The permission to dig includes a generous strip of land all around the walls on the outside, excluding only Moslem burying grounds and holy places. The work is to be done under the direction of Frederick Bliss, a young American of considerable reputation as an archæological explorer. Shafts are to be sunk on the hill of Ophel, where were the royal gardens and the tombs of the Kings. It is hardly possible that this ground can be turned up without valuable discoveries being made. One thing hoped for is that the old wall that swept around the southern brow of Zion may be found. The imperial firman grants a two years privilege, time enough to make the old city of Solomon and the Jebusites tell some of its long hidden secrets.

Farms for the Million.

The marvelous development of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming, within the last few years has attracted attention in all parts of the world. It is not necessary, however, to search far for the causes of this wonderful growth, for this entire region, which is penetrated by The North-Western Line, teems with golden opportunities for enterprising farmers, mechanics and laborers who desire to better their condition. Here are lands which combine all varieties of soil, climate and physical feature that render them most desirable for agriculture or commerce. Rich rolling prairies, capable of raising the finest quality of farm products in luxurious abundance, can still be secured at low prices and upon most liberal terms, and in many cases good productive farms can be purchased for scarcely more than the yearly rental many eastern farmers are compelled to pay. Reaching the principal cities and towns and the richest and most productive farming districts of this favored region The North-Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y) offers its patrons the advantages of ready markets, unexcelled train service, perfect equipment and all the comforts and conveniences known to strictly first-class railway travel. Maps, time tables and general information can be obtained of ticket agents of connecting lines, or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago, Ill.—a.7. 21. m. 5. 19.

Saratoga and return very cheap on occasion of the Presbyterian General Assembly, May 17th, rates always the lowest, via the Nickel Plate Road.

Cheap Excursions to the West.

An exceptionally favorable opportunity for visiting the richest and most productive sections of the west and northwest will be afforded by the Home-Seekers' low-rate excursions which have been arranged by the North-Western Line. Tickets for these excursions will be sold on May 8th and 19th, to points in northwestern Iowa, western Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Manitoba, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Montana and Idaho, and will be good for return passage within thirty days from date of sale. Stop-over privileges will be allowed on going trip in territory to which the tickets are sold. For further information, call on or address Ticket Agents of connecting lines. Circulars giving rates and detailed information will be mailed, free, upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western Railway, Chicago. m2-9-16-23.

Cheap excursion Saratoga and return on occasion of the Presbyterian General Assembly Meeting, May 17th to 20th inclusive. Take one of the fast through trains on the Nickel Plate Road.

[illegible] Byrne, aged 69 years, [illegible] months and 28 days, died at his residence in Kellogg, Jasper Co., Iowa, at 5 o'clock A. M., April 1, 1894, of pneumonia, preceded by la grippe.

Harrison Byrne, son of John and Catharine Byrne, was born in Randolph County, North Carolina, May, 1824. He with his parents moved to Indiana at the age of 19 years, in 1843. He was married to Miss E. C. Norton, May 9th, 1851, who now survives him. He with his companion shortly after marriage became interested in Christianity, and began reading the Bible, and in 1850 embraced the doctrine of "life only in Christ," when they were immersed into the Christ body at Old Union, Marion County, Indiana by Elder E. Hoyt, then of New York, but now of Grand Rapids, Michigan; and has ever after, wherever his lot has been cast, lived faithful to his convictions of truth. He has ever been investigative in his turn of mind, and persistent in his nature, ever ready to present the truth as he comprehended it to his associates and neighbors. Our acquaintance with him extending over fifteen years has often led us to think of him as a type of the intrepid Peter, and of Paul in his visit to Athens when he declared the truth upon Mars Hill. He leaves a companion, and an adopted daughter, and thus a grand daughter, who mourn their loss of a loving husband and father.

His funeral took place Tuesday afternoon April 3rd, and the discourse was made by the writer in the Christian Church in Kellogg, attended by a large concourse of people—friends and neighbors. The Scripture read was 1 Cor. xv., and the subject was that of the resurrection—How are the dead raised up? And with what body do they come?

After the discourse we laid Bro. Byrne to rest in the beautiful cemetery a half mile northeast of Kellogg, to await the final call of him who is the life and the resurrection.

G. M. Myers.

William W. Jaeger died at the home of Mrs. Fuller, 1113 Huron St., Berlin, Wis., Mar. 27, 1894, of cancer. He was born in Milwaukee, March 29, 1851. He was immersed some 22 years ago by Bro. A. Allerton, into the all-saving name of Jesus, in whom he put all his hope and trust, and was unwavering in his confidence in God, and looked forward to the first resurrection, when there would be no more suffering and death, and no more parting. He was married by J. E. Wilcox, Nov. 7, 1875, to Miss. Sarah J. Fuller, who preceded him. She died Nov. 3, 1892. They leave three children, one son and two daughters, the oldest being 17 and the youngest 5 years old. He also leaves a father and mother, seven brothers and one sister, and many relatives and friends to mourn. He was loved, honored and respected by all who knew him, and though a great sufferer was never heard to murmur or complain, and by his death those dear little ones are bereft of a kind and loving father, and the writer an affectionate brother. Words of comfort were spoken and read from the Holy Book by Elder Lugg, after which he was tenderly placed in the silent tomb, to rest from the toils and cares to await the return of our blessed Lord and Master, who alone can break the bars asunder and set the captives free; and say, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Dear is the spot where Will and Sadie lie. O, come Lord Jesus, quickly come, and to immortal life bid them arise.

Announcement.

The annual conference of the Churches of God in Iowa will be held at Nevada, Story Co. Nevada is on the C & N. W. R. R. 20 miles west of Marshalltown and 8 miles east of Ames. This meeting will last ten days, commencing June 7, 1894, and will be the most important meeting we ever had. The Young Men's educational work, tent work, new hymn book, and other important matters will be considered. Brethren and sisters, we need your presence and counsel. We are living in a time when the cause of Christ demands that every one do his duty. It is true we have attended year after year and helped to carry the burden of work for our Master, but the burden was light and you found rest and peace in toil. But there are some isolated ones to whom this privilege has not come in many years, to you we say come to the meeting. We want to see your faces and hear your voices in our social meetings. As you shall tell us of your faith and hope. Make an extra effort, begin your plans now, it may be the last conference till Jesus comes. Come, spend a week in the tented grove with those of like precious faith. It will rest you, and strengthen you in the Divine life. A full program will be published in due time.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Please Read and Heed.

Brethren, If each one now taking our paper will induce one more to subscribe,—and at the low price it seems as if this might be done—our list would be doubled at once. Please try and do this. If you like The Restitution and are interested in its welfare, work a little for it now. If it does not go to every family in your church, urge them to try it for 1894.

To those who are delinquent on our list we will say we wish to avoid the expense of sending you a statement. You know whether you are behind or not, and can just as well send your dues now as wait for us to notify you separately. We need every penny due just now, so send at once what you owe.

Do not ask us to keep open accounts. If you pay promptly we can do the same, and live at peace with all men.

The poor, those who from age or infirmities, are totally unable to pay for their paper, we will still do as we have always done, send it free. To enable us to do this we depend largely on the voluntary donations of our kind friends, those who are interested, and fully alive, working all the time and with their means in the Master' vineyard. Their reward is sure, and the blessings of the aged and infirm, to whom they have sent papers and tracts, will be no mean recommendation in the last day.

☞"It is necessary once more to call attention to the "Important notices" published on page 4 of this paper. Money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Bank draft, P. O. Money order, Express Money order, or Registered letter are safe ways to send money. Loose in a letter is a very unsafe way to send, as one Brother in Michigan knows to his sorrow. Some will say "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

The Vale of Minnekahta.

Is the title of a beautifully illustrated booklet recently issued, descriptive of the Hot Springs, South Dakota, and the efficacy of their waters for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia and kindred diseases. Copy of this pamphlet will be mailed free by W. A. Thrall, Gen'l Passenger Agent Chicago & North-Western Railway, Chicago, Ill., upon receipt of request, enclosing two-cent stamp.

Meeting of Grand Lodge F. and A. M., Indianapolis, May 22-23, 1894, for which occasion the L. E. W. R. R. will sell tickets at one fare for the round trip. Tickets good to return May 24, 1894.

Rates to California greatly reduced via Pennsylvania Lines. The Midwinter Fair at San Francisco and the numerous other attractions in the wonderland beyond the Rocky Mountains can be enjoyed by persons of limited means as the round trip rate has again been materially reduced via of Pennsylvania Lines. Passengers can select any of the several routes from Chicago and St. Louis and the return limit is ample for a satisfactory sojourn. For details apply to nearest Pennsylvania Line Ticket Agent or address F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent, Pittsburgh, Penn.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, express money order or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring your address changed give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above, you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

A Letter to a Friend. A new edition of this popular work has been printed. It is not necessary to say a word about this work to the older readers, but to the new ones we say the subject treated of is the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the One Hope, One Faith, and One Baptism." It was written some years ago by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodend, and it is truly "A letter to a Friend." Many editions have been printed and distributed until this little 32 page tract is acknowledged as the most effective missionary that can be handed out. Price 10cts. each. Send and get a supply to distribute.

Future Probation. By Wm. G. Moncrief. We have received an invoice of the new book of 148 pages, written by William Glen Moncrieff, subject, "Future Probation: Is That Awaiting Any of the Unrighteous?" Bro. Moncrieff is a writer well known to our readers, and of undoubted ability. This book is paper covers, and sells for 15cts. each, and can be had at this office.
